Mr. HOLMAN. I know that, of course; but I am pointing to a parallel and what was done last session as an illustration. I am pointing to the fact that the predictions made in the last session of Congress were not realized; and that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, largely a foreign enterprise but floating our flag, was glad to come in and carry our mails upon the advantageous terms of both sea and land postage, the rates we pay to American ships running to South American ports; while the ships that are in fact American by ownership transport our mails for the ocean postage alone.

But I do not care to discuss this question as a matter of detail. The real question is whether you can afford to enter upon and adopt this thoroughly un-American policy as I regard it of subsidizing particular industries with benefit to the commerce and business of this country. I say the policy is not American for the reason that it necessarily proposes to foster one industry or one class of industry at the expense of all the other industries of the country. It is un-American and un-republican in that it does not place all your people on the same footing and open up equal opportunities to all; that it taxes some for the benefit of others. The truth is every gentleman on this floor confronting the present state of our affairs looks with greater or less apprehension to the future. The policy of twenty-five years has been to build up great interests and estates, resulting necessarily in increasing the number of our impoverished people.

One of the perils and perhaps the only great peril of the future which a citizen is compelled to view with apprehension is the fact of the vast gulf now existing between the great body of our people and the fortunate or favored class of our people who have accumulated in the last quarter of a century vast estates beyond what could have been accumulated under ordinary conditions and under a system of government where no favoritism was shown. The truth is, the period in our history since the late war, during which as one of the consequences of the war and one of the consequences of our legislation, has opened up unexampled opportunities for the acquisition of great estates, some of our people have obtained enormous advantages by direct and indirect subsidies. But in time of peace deliberately to go into the business of legislation which shall build up or aid in building up the fortunes of a few, whether in commerce, the carrying-trade, or in any other field of industry is, I think, a course of dangerous statesmanship. It is the most dangerous legislation that could possibly be devised.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman be good enough to explain to us how it is going to result in the accumulation of large estates in the hands of the few, to give us good communication with the South American states, thus furnishing all the people of this country who produce anything to sell an additional market for their products?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am speaking of the general result of subsidies and of legislation calculated to promote one interest at the expense of another. I concede that in any given instance a bonus of $500,000 would have no appreciable effect in impoverishing one class and enriching another. I admit that. But the system is full of peril in a republic. The question is, can you safely enter upon that policy? Is it wise or safe statesmanship? In our century of history there have been but few instances where, even under the pressure of the moment, the legislators of this country have yielded to that pressure and consented to the adoption of a policy in our carrying trade. I am speaking now of no other form of subsidy which would enrich the few at the expense of the many; and on the occasions when the pressure has been so great as to force the adoption of that policy, as a uniform rule, no benefit to the body of our people followed. I assert that in every case it was a failure, as must be every departure from sound policy. The last generation subsidized the Collins line, but in looking over the records of that period I find that committee after committee was appointed to inquire into the methods by which that legislation was secured, and whether or no any benefits were secured to the country. It is certain there were none, yet some men obtained the advantage while the whole people paid the subsidy.

In the case of the subsidizing of the line between your western coast and the Hawaiian Islands, and in the subsidy which you paid to encourage commerce between Brazil and the United States, and especially in the famous Pacific mail subsidy they were absolute failures so far as general interests were concerned, yet a few men were made rich by them.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment, if I have the time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield for a moment. I gave him five minutes, and the clerk informs me that eleven minutes of my time are gone.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very sorry that I have consumed my friend's time; I am sorry I cannot have time to answer the question of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY]. I was just coming to the point where I could have done so. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. You are always coming to the point.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. If no gentleman desires to address the House, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the time is so short that if the yeas and nays are to be demanded I prefer to withdraw the motion for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws his motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for the yeas and nays on my own motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] demands the yeas and nays upon his motion that the House insist on its disagreement and request a further conference.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 107, not voting 63, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 139 and the nays 107. The motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is agreed to. The Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RIGGS], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9858) to authorize the Louisiana North and South Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River, in Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory;

A bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, in place of Middletown; and

A bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to make a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference had been unable to agree.

W. L. WILSON,
BENJAMIN LE FEVRE,
D. P. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, before asking the acceptance of this report, I desire on behalf of the House conferees to submit a statement as to the points of difference between the conferees of the two Houses.

This bill came back to us from the Senate with sixty-six amendments, increasing the appropriations of the House by the amount of $490,060 in money, and also embracing a provision for the sale of certain District real estate, estimated to add $150,000, making an increase of some $640,000 upon the House bill.

Now, the House committee, in the preparation of this bill, to which they gave a great deal of time and a great deal of careful and minute attention, felt that some increase in the expenditures of the District government for the next fiscal year was both reasonable and proper; and they endeavored as far as possible to provide for those increases at the particular points where they appeared to be fairly demanded by the growth of population.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not only because of the great increase in the bill made by the Senate that the conferees have been unable to come to an agreement; it is also because the two sides seem to have approached the construction of this bill with some difference of opinion and some difference of theory. This is in many respects a very difficult bill to prepare. Here is a large municipality, contributing $2,000,000 in the shape of taxes toward its own support, which $2,000,000 has no representation except such as can be given to it by the committees of Congress dealing with the affairs of the District of Columbia. The District commissioners are not representatives of the tax-payers of the District; they are merely agents of Congress. The committee of the House charged with the preparation of this bill accordingly felt it a duty which they owed to the tax-payers of the District to guard carefully their interests as far as possible, and in its construction to make the appropriations specific wherever that could be done, so that there might be no doubt as to the purposes for which money was appropriated and but little discretion on the part of the agents charged with its expenditure—in other words, to apply the safe and approved plan of "ear-marking" the several appropriations. The Senate bill seems to have been constructed, however, upon another theory—to place large sums of money in the hands of the agents of Congress with very little restriction upon the manner or the localities in which those sums were to be expended.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall call attention very briefly to the chief points of disagreement between the two Houses. In the first place as to the appropriation for current improvements and repairs. The estimates of the commissioners asked the appropriation of $400,000 for the paving of additional streets within the city limits. The appropriation for that purpose last year was $267,000. The House committee deemed that an additional $33,000, making up an appropriation of $300,000 for the coming year, would be a reasonable increase and all that could properly be demanded. We accordingly appropriated $300,000; and we provided for the distribution of that amount among the different sections of the city in a manner which my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] will more specifically explain. We also in creased the amount to be allowed for current repairs upon the streets of the District of Columbia, and increased the amount under what is called the permit system, under which the District furnishes one-half of the money and the property owners the other half, for certain improvements which are not included in the schedule proposed by the authorities of the District. Under these circumstances, we thought that our appropriation for new pavements was amply sufficient. The Senate, however, has added to it $100,000 (making the appropriation for the coming year exactly what the estimates called for), and has stricken out our provision as to its distribution among the different sections of the city.

Last year the House committee charged with the preparation of this bill inserted in it, after what they deemed careful investigation, a provision that no contracts should be made for the laying of concrete or asphalt pavements in the District of Columbia at a higher rate than $2 per square yard, of a quality equal to the best heretofore laid in the District. Up to that time the contract price had generally been $2.25 per square yard. We satisfied ourselves that there was ample profit in a contract at $2 per square yard, and that at this price such pavement could be made of a quality equal to the best then laid in the District. Now, the engineer commissioner, or whoever had the making of the contracts for the current year, evaded, in the opinion of the committee, that restriction of the law by making his contracts at $2 per yard, but allowing a base of 4 inches instead of 6 inches, as heretofore required by the specifications, alleging that a better quality and more expensive kind of cement was used in the 4-inch base. The House committee, regarding that to be an evasion of the law, and desiring to re-enact that law in such terms that no such evasion could be made, added to this bill a provision that no contract for this kind of pavement should be made at a rate over $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886, and with a base of not less than 6 inches. The Senate has stricken out this latter provision, leaving the engineer department of the District free to make contracts for the coming year, as they have for this year, in violation of the plain intention of the law.

But it is upon the item of $60,000 for the construction of suburban streets and roads that the chief, and perhaps the most irreconcilable, difference as yet exists between the conferees of the two Houses. There appeared in the appropriation bill last year, not asked for in the estimates but put on by the Senate, $40,000, reduced in conference to $30,000, for opening suburban streets and roads. That was largely used for work on the projected extension of Massachusetts avenue.

The subcommittee in charge of this bill, in view of the extended criticism on this improvement, examined, with some interest and care, that extension, and, not expressing any opinion, because not called upon to do so, as no further appropriation was asked for it at present, were yet decidedly and unanimously of opinion that no such item as that was needed or appropriate in the appropriation bill for the next fiscal year.

But the estimates of the commissioners call for $60,000 for that purpose, and the Senate has inserted the $60,000, using the words for the "construction of suburban streets and roads," rather than the language of the last year's bill, for "opening suburban streets and roads," words which, in the opinion of the House conferees, are clearly equivalent.

In the report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the current year they have stated the purpose for which they ask this appropriation of $60,000 and the expenditure they will make of it if granted to them. I will read from that report:

The further sum of $60,000, in view of the possible condemnation to be made of land lying between Soldiers' Home and Rock Creek.

To be sure the engineer commissioner has written the Senate committee a letter stating the uses to which he now proposes to put this $60,000; but that letter is not to be taken against the official report of the commissioners. Now, the subcommittee of the House have been fully awake to the necessity for improvement of many existing streets and highways of the District of Columbia, not only within the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown but for the improvement of suburban roads and streets, but they have felt there was no present necessity and, in my judgment, no present excuse for appropriation for the opening of other streets and roads.

So long as thickly-settled portions of the District are not supplied with good streets and roads it seems to us that the expenditure of money for the construction of other streets and roads is called for by no demands of present population, but in many cases only to subserve the speculative purposes of purchasers of real estate outside of the city. We do not assume to reflect on the motives of any one, but it is possible, it is probable, it seems to me almost inevitable, that this expenditure of $60,000 must largely, if not wholly, inure to the benefit of such purchasers and real-estate owners who have no right to have public moneys expended in furtherance of their speculative schemes. Therefore the conferees of the House have taken their stand, and decline to yield to this appropriation unless ordered to do so by the House. We are not unwilling to increase by a reasonable appropriation, if the necessity be shown, the amount required for work upon the existing roads and streets both within the city limits and without the city limits.

The next amendment of the Senate in which——

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman reaches that branch will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If it is proper to ask him, are the House conferees willing to appropriate for the improvement of suburban roads and streets to the exclusion of those projected in the mountainous district where they are of no use? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. That is our exact position. But we have been told that if we do not agree to that item there will be no agreement between us.

Mr. CANNON. I hope there will be no agreement, and that the bill will fail if that be insisted upon.

Mr. WILSON. That is the stand of the conferees on the part of the House. We propose to stand on that item, and hope the House will back us in it.

The next amendment to which I call attention is an item for the construction of an ice-boat for the harbor of Washington and the Potomac River. There was no call for this expenditure in the estimates sent to the House. Undoubtedly there may be some necessity for an expenditure for this particular purpose. The opinion of the House conferees is that the sum of $5,000 or thereabouts, placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury or of the commissioners of the District, is an ample amount to keep the harbor of Washington free of ice.

We have had communications submitted to us which were placed in the hands of the chairman of the District Committee [Mr. BARBOUR], communications from steamboat companies offering to bid for this work if some moderate sum was given for this specific purpose. We do not see, sir, any necessity for the construction of an expensive ice-boat, costing $75,000, and an additional expenditure of $10,000 every year henceforward for its maintenance and service, when a sum less than $10,000, put into the hands of the proper authorities, can be used to contract with willing and responsible persons to keep the river open.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be necessary, anyhow, to construct a separate boat for this business? Could not the boats at present in use, with some additional appliances, be adapted for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON. I have no doubt they could, sir.

The next points of disagreement between the House and the Senate are in the appropriations for public schools in the District of Columbia, and as nothing was said when this bill passed the House I avail myself of this moment to explain the provisions of this bill on that head, because much has been said in the newspapers and elsewhere about insufficient school accommodations in this city. It has often been claimed and published in the papers of this city that there is a deficiency in the school appropriations for the current year, and that there is not a sufficient sum of money to run the schools. Now, the estimates for schools for the District of Columbia last year called for $400,000 for teachers.

After a conference between the subcommittee who prepared this bill and the District commissioners, a supplemental estimate was sent in for $410,000. The subcommittee, not believing even that a sufficient amount, of their own motion went beyond the estimate and provided last year an appropriation of $415,400, being $5,400 more than the most liberal and last estimates sent in by the District commissioners. If there has been any deficiency in the appropriations the fault has not been with the committee of the House or with either branch of Congress. Now, for the present year we have appropriated under this head $438,270, being an increase of nearly $23,000 over last year's appropriation.

We have doubled the appropriation for night schools in the District, and have given $5,000 more for the purpose of industrial education, making the appropriations for the employment of teachers, including industrial training, for the coming year $30,370 more than for the current year. The Senate has agreed to these appropriations with some amendments as to the salaries of teachers, which will not be insuperable ground of disagreement in the conference, but it is chiefly in the appropriation, particularly in the manner of the appropriation for new school-houses, that the disagreement exists between the conferees on the two sides of Congress.

The commissioners estimated for $100,000 for the erection of new school buildings for the coming year, $40,000 of which were for an addition to the high-school building. The House committee struck out the $40,000 for the high-school, believing the demand for primary schools more meritorious and more urgent at this time, and added $28,000 for exchange of site and erection of an additional building for the primary schools beyond what was estimated for by the commissioners. The Senate has gone beyond that and provided for the purchase of a site and the erection of another school building by an additional appropriation of $35,000, in which the conferees of the House are perfectly willing to agree. But beyond that there is in this bill an appropriation which is too vague and indefinite, too dangerous in the opinion of the conferees of this House to be sanctioned by the House. That appropriation is proposed in these words:

And the said commissioners are authorized to sell and convey to the purchaser or purchasers thereof any lot or parcel of land now owned by the District of Columbia in any part of said District and not necessary for the present use of the District, and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the purchase of eligible sites and the erection thereon of such eight-room buildings for public schools as in the judgment of the said commissioners shall be required to furnish school accommodations for all the children of school age in the District of Columbia not otherwise provided for as need such school accommodation, so far as the said proceeds will accomplish said object.

Here, then, in an appropriation bill is an omnibus clause conferring upon the commissioners of the District of Columbia full power and authority to sell and convey any lot or parcel of land owned by the District which the present commissioners may think not needed for the present use of the District, and apply the proceeds to the erection of such school buildings as they may deem necessary and whenever they choose.

Now, sir, we have not been convinced that it would be safe to entrust any such extraordinary and general power of attorney in the hands of any persons, a power so indefinite and far-reaching as this. It is the opinion of the House conferees that if there are pieces of property in the District of Columbia no longer needed for school or municipal purposes then the sale should be ordered with proper directions and safe-guards in a bill carefully considered for that purpose by the appropriate committee, which would be the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the application of the proceeds of sale should also be carefully and specifically passed on by both Houses after a like consideration by that committee, or one with like opportunities for deliberation and decision.

We are not willing in the present fever of real estate speculation in the city of Washington and in the entire District of Columbia to give to the commissioners this undefined and unrestricted authority to sell any piece of ground that they may think it advisable to sell and to erect new school buildings wherever they may think it advisable to erect such school buildings. We believe such buildings should be ordered by Congress, representing the tax-payers and people of the District, not by limiting their location to any particular site, perhaps, but at least by determining their location in the several school divisions of the District of Columbia with reference to the necessity and interests of the school population of the District.

Now, I want to say a word in passing about these statements that have been sent broadcast over the country to the effect that there is insufficient accommodation in the District for the school children. The trustees of the public schools in their last report gave an exaggerated statement of the deficiencies of the public schools of the District, in which they said there were a large number of schools that were but half-day schools, and from that fact represent that many thousand children of both colors in the District were shamefully curtailed in their school facilities. Yet these same officials have subsequently stated, when the committees of both Houses have sought to widen the basis of the school system by declining at present appropriation for its enlargement at the summit, that no child of either color has been denied schooling during the present year because of scant facilities.

The first statement was true, but yet was not the whole truth, because a very large number of those children who attend half-day schools are the children in the lowest grades, from six to eight years of age, who, if every square in the city had a school building on it, ought not to be more than a half day in school, and for whom there should not be more than half a day's attendance permitted no matter how thickly Congress might sprinkle this city with school buildings. The statement, therefore, although literally true, did not tell the whole truth and did not fairly represent the school necessities of the District of Columbia.

I call attention to one other item of disagreement. It is on amendment 66 of the Senate, which, in the water department, increases the appropriation from $80,000 to $125,000 for the following service:

For engineers and firemen, fuel, and for high service, pipe-distribution to high and low service, including public hydrants, fire-plugs, material and labor, repairing and laying new mains, and lowering mains.

The House increased that amount last year, increased it again this year, and we have heard no reason why so large an increase should be granted as is proposed by the Senate amendment.

I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield the gentleman as much time as he desires to occupy.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The District of Columbia bills, whether coming from the District Committee or the Appropriations Committee, are considered dry food, and usually when they come before the House we see members going to the cloak-room or attending to their writing. I acknowledge I have been a good deal afflicted in that way myself. But I deem it my duty to call the attention of the House to the condition of the District appropriation bill at this time; for there is no appropriation bill now in conference where the lines are as sharply drawn as they are between the conferees in respect to some portions of this bill. And inasmuch as we are approaching the closing hours of the session it becomes the duty of members of this House to inform themselves as to the condition of the bill and determine whether they will sustain their conferees or take other action.

The Senate put sixty-six amendments on the House bill. These amendments have all been agreed upon except twelve. While there are twelve that we have not agreed upon there are practically only five or six on which there is any serious difference, but these five or six are very important, and I want to introduce them to the members of this House.

The leading item of difference is in respect to the streets of this city inside and outside the boundary.

Since I have given attention to the interests of this District I have found that this House is entirely too indolent touching this District and its affairs, and is disposed to leave on the shoulders of the Senate the great interests of this District in respect to the opening of streets and the improvements thereon. The result is that the legislation of this House is hardly looked at or considered by the Senate, and we feel that they have in a sense become the fathers and guardians of all the improvements with respect to the District of Columbia, especially those outside the boundary. It looks a little as though some of the Senate feel this way too. Now, this not right, and we ought to come to the front and bear our share of the burden. We should not tax the strength of the Senate too much in this respect.

Why, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, when your conferees go over to the other end of the Capitol instead of being treated as conferees, as gentlemen who go there for a conference and to agree and harmonize the differences between the two bodies, we find ourselves in a lecture-room where we are treated gratuitously to lectures. Now, for one, I do not want a lecture unless I go voluntarily to get one.

Mr. STRUBLE. Are there any stories thrown in?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will come to the story part presently. We might as well understand a few things plainly among ourselves, for it does look as though this lecturing propensity was getting to be so developed among some members of the Senate that we may not be able to come to an agreement, and you gentlemen at this late hour of the session ought to look into it and thus qualify yourselves for the responsibility connected with this bill.

Now, as to the improvement of these streets. This is getting to be a pretty aristocratic capital, and wealth and aristocracy are and have been for some time largely shaping the legislation with regard to its improvement. As I will soon show, the policy of appropriations heretofore has been to expend the money by tens of thousands in the northwestern portion of the city, leaving the other regions without even a hearing. The "claw-hammers" are trying to run the affairs of this city, and the great mass of the people having homes inside of the District of Columbia can hardly get access to the legislative halls of Congress, even to the extent of sending in their cards. The influence that reaches the law-making power is planted and intrenched in the great palaces and mansions of the northwest. We have insisted upon a change of policy. For years the commissioners of the District have been accommodated with an appropriation in gross for the opening and improvement of the streets, and they have expended the money just where they pleased.

Now, I do not say that what I am about to describe has been done—I have no knowledge of its being done—but if Tom Jones and his friends could go to the District commissioners and find out in advance that $15,000 or $20,000 was to be spent on a particular street, they could buy up a number of lots there and then go back to their offices and their comfortable homes, and when the money was expended up would go the value of that property from 10 to 25 or 30 cents a square foot. In that way men have become rich as Crœsus almost within the sound of my voice—I mean if these walls were not in the way. [Laughter.]

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, the present subcommittee in charge of the District bill moved upon an entirely different line and demanded that the commissioners should submit their theory of expenditures and tell how much they intended to expend in the northwest, how much in the northeast, how much in the southeast, and how much in the other divisions of the city, and exactly where and in what streets it was to be expended. Well, we got that statement. There was some little trouble about it, but finally we got it, and let me show you now what they brought in. They proposed to spend in Georgetown (I give the round numbers) $48,900; in the southwest, $42,500; in the southeast, $60,400; in the northeast, $47,800, and in the northwest, $190,500. Thus you see nearly one-half of the entire sum proposed was to be expended among the nabobs of the northwest section.

We asked the reason for that discrimination in favor of the northwest. The reason why we asked that question is this: East of this Capitol building we find beautiful parks where, during a considerable portion of the year, you can not drive with a wagon because of the mud. In other portions of the city we find streets extending for miles where, at certain seasons, if you drive there with a horse and buggy, you are liable to get stalled, although on either side of those streets there are blocks of buildings. Why must so much of this improvement and this expenditure be expended in the northwest? "Well," we are answered, "because they pay most of the taxes." Yes, you might build one palace in the northwest the taxation upon which would exceed that of all the rest of the city, but that is no reason why equal justice should not be done in these public expenditures to the other sections. In the proposition which the commissioners laid before us we find that New Hampshire avenue, in the northwest, was to be improved, taking a good portion of this $190,000.

We went out along New Hampshire avenue to view the residences and the homes that were to be benefited by these expensive improvements, and, bless your souls, we found the greater portion of it a barren waste. On the other hand, right here, leading right up to this Capitol, we found New Jersey avenue built up on both sides for nearly its entire length, yet there are portions of it in which you can not pass because of the mud. Well, after discussing the matter, the commissioners concluded to abandon New Hampshire avenue, and the committee took the responsibility of inserting instead New Jersey avenue from M street to the Boundary; but the Senate have put New Hampshire avenue back, offering us as a tempting little bait (to try to avert the point where the lecturing would have to begin) two blocks of New Jersey avenue.

Now I will show the House what your committee have endeavored to do with this plan of expenditure. In Georgetown, instead of $48,900, we propose to allow $40,000; in the northwest we scaled the amount down from $190,500 to $115,000, and I submit that that was very liberal. In the southwest we scaled it down from $42,000 to $40,000; in the southeast from $60,400 to $55,000; in the northeast from $47,800 to $40,000, and the people are informed exactly on what streets the improvements are to be made. These sums would enable the commissioners to go to work and improve the streets of the city, and not allow it, as in the past, to become a creature subject to the dictation of political influence or moneyed power. This plan will also exempt the commissioners from much of the pressure and annoyance to which they have been subjected under the old system.

That is one of the dividing lines between the conferees of the House and those of the Senate. We have in our bill allowed an increase of $34,000 for those purposes alone. The Senate has increased the amount to the extent of $100,000, and wants to rivet us down to the schedule of the commissioners, giving to the northwest its $190,000 and leaving the rest of the city to content itself if it can with the little driblets given in that proposition. Now I wonder if I am understood on this matter. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. You are pretty plain.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, the sum of $60,000 is given to be expended outside of the boundary. Thus far I have been traveling with you inside of the boundary. This bill contains $60,000 to be expended outside of the boundary; and in the report of the commissioners we are informed that this amount is to be spent between the Soldiers' Home and Rock Creek. Am I right [addressing Mr. WILSON, chairman of the subcommittee]?

Mr. WILSON assented.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, there is a business proposition for you. The occasional houses scattered around outside of the boundary are to get the benefit of this $60,000 in opening streets and avenues, while inside the boundary there are places where there are solid blocks of buildings, and yet you can not get about one-half of the year without being caught in the mud.

There has been a good deal of scandal, sometimes openly stated and sometimes stated with bated breath, in regard to these outside operations. Your committee and your conferees are unanimous in desiring not to lead this body into a course of legislation where it will be subject to criticism on that account. We protest against these vast expenditures upon barren, untilled hills and fields, while the city of Washington proper is in the condition I have indicated. Some expenditures are doubtless needed there now, and more will be needed, and some parts outside are justly entitled to it. But let us know where it is to be expended, and let it be done in the interest of tax-payers, and not of speculators.

Mr. Speaker, these are the leading features of difference outside of the two discussed by my colleague touching the schools and the $85,000 for an ice-boat on the Potomac River.

Mr. STRUBLE. What is that for?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, it may be for junketing; but the purpose for which it is asked is to watch the fishermen and hunters on the river. It appears there are some fellows who go in and shoot among the reeds. I am a shooter myself; yet I do not oppose this proposition because I am fond of the shooters. I do not believe we need to expend $85,000 at this time on that sort of a boat for that purpose, especially when we have a good deal of evidence going to show that a contract could be made for taking care of the ice and gorges—that is another thing besides the hunters for which this appropriation is asked—for about how much? Seven thousand dollars, I believe [again addressing Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. From $5,000 to $7,000 a year.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This is a proposition to expend $85,000 for building an expensive boat; and I think about $10,000 will be wanted to run it, while men say they stand ready to contract to take care of the ice-gorges of the Potomac for $5,000 to $7,000 a year. The men who say they can afford to take such a contract may be in error, but until we know whether that can be done, until it is demonstrated that we need a palatial craft to sail the Potomac to watch the fishermen and hunters and "buck" the ice, I am opposed to leading this House into the expenditure of nearly $100,000.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have trespassed on your time longer than I intended. But these are things which you should know, because you must soon confront them; for we have come pretty near to a deadlock in regard to these propositions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. WILSON. I move the House further insist on its disagreement and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH) announced the appointment as conferees on the part of the House of Mr. WILSON, Mr. LEFEVRE, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CRISP. I present the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) entitled "A resolution authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of the Pacific railroads which received aid from the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its non-concurrence in the Senate amendment and agree to said amendment with an amendment as follows:

Strike out in the first and second lines the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and add to the first section as follows:

"The term of office of said commissioner shall not extend beyond the beginning of the next session of the Senate. If the Senate shall be convened after the 4th day of March, 1887, and before the 1st day of December, and the duties of said commissioner shall not be completed, the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint three commissioners, who shall perform and complete the duties required in this act, within the time therein specified."

That the title of said resolution be amended so as to read as follows:

"Joint resolution authorizing the investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which received aid from the United States, and for other purposes."

CHARLES F. CRISP,
J. D. RICHARDSON,
E. D. HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
WM. M. EVARTS,
JAS. I. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

Detailed statement of the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. Res. 170.

The resolution as it passed the House provided for the appointment by the Secretary of the Interior of three competent persons to investigate the books, accounts, and methods of the Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, and appropriated $30,000 for the purposes of the investigation. The Senate amended the House resolution by enlarging the duties and salaries of the commission, increasing the appropriation for the purposes thereof to $100,000, and provided that the commission should be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

They further amended the resolution by a provision enabling the President, if he shall deem it necessary to the protection of the interests and preservation of the security of the United States in respect to its lien, mortgage, or other interests in any or all property of any of the several railroad companies which have been aided by the United States, to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem or otherwise clear off the incumbrances upon the property of said roads prior in lien to the mortgage or lien of the Government, and in the event of such action subrogating the United States to all rights and securities pertaining to the debt, mortgage, or lien so redeemed, and providing that the Attorney-General should take all steps and proceedings necessary and needful to protect the interests of the United States in respect thereto.

The Senate further provided that the sinking funds which are or may be held in the Treasury for the benefit of said railroad companies may, in addition to the investments now authorized by law, be invested in any bonds of the United States heretofore issued for the benefit of either of said companies or in any first-mortgage bonds of either of said companies which have been issued under authority of any law of the United States and secured by mortgages on their roads and franchises.

The conferees accept the amendment of the Senate with an amendment providing a change of the manner of appointment to this extent: That the President may appoint said commission if the Senate is not in session at the time of the original appointment without the consent and assent of the Senate, and that the commissioners so appointed shall hold their offices until the next session of the Senate, at which time, if they have not yet completed their duties, the President shall send in the names of the commissioners to the Senate for their advice and consent.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
E. D. HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRISP. The only change in the Senate amendment relates to the manner of appointment. Under the act as originally drawn there was some doubt as to the right of the President to appoint in the absence of the Senate. That has been changed to give him that right.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask by unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement in regard to what railroads received from the Treasury Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. HAYDEN objected.

Mr. CRISP demanded the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

Mr. TRIGG. I wish to submit a privileged report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration on the report proposed to be submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, as it is a mere private bill which will provoke discussion and keep appropriation bills out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment agreed to by the House to the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Strike out of the part proposed to be inserted in said amendment the words 'sixty-three thousand one hundred and sixty-one dollars and sixty-two cents' and insert 'one hundred thousand dollars;' and the House agree to the same."

C. F. TRIGG,
CHARLES DOUGHERTY,
JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE F. HOAR,
M. C. BUTLER.
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. TRIGG. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a mere private claim and is brought in here to keep appropriation bills out. I shall demand a division and shall resist the passage of this private bill which is being forced through to keep appropriation bills out. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 144, noes 40.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 168, nays 82, not voting 69; as follows:

So the House determined to consider the report.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

The Clerk proceeded to recapitulate the names of those voting.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. STORM. I renew it.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the names.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. LIBBEY, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. TRIGG. I now demand the previous question. Mr. Speaker, this report——

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to debate unless the gentleman withdraws the demand of the previous question.

Mr. TRIGG. I insist upon the demand.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen in support of and fifteen in opposition to the report. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia to control the time in support of, and the gentleman from Illinois in opposition to, the report.

Mr. TRIGG. I reserve my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House while I explain briefly the provisions of this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] And I want to say to those gentlemen who are calling so lustily for a vote that they will not vote until I can, if I am able, as I believe I am, expose the iniquities of this bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. I thought they were exposed a month ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman is simply exposing himself now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Just keep your seats, gentlemen; I believe I have the floor.

When this bill was before the House on a previous occasion the Committee of the Whole by a very large majority struck out the $200,000 proposed to be appropriated in the Senate bill and inserted the sum of $63,000. Two gentlemen on the other side friendly to this bill came over here and said to the opponents of the bill that if we would allow it to pass with $63,000 in place of $200,000 it would be acceptable to the claimant.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, will the gentleman from Illinois just state who those two gentlemen were?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will in my own time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the gentleman to name them now if he has any authority for the statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. I decline to yield to such interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. With that understanding, sir, I made no objection when a committee of conference was asked here on the disagreeing votes on this bill, supposing that that agreement or understanding was to be carried out in good faith. But the Senate refused to concur in the House amendment, and a committee of conference was asked and ordered. That committee having met, now recommends the allowance of $100,000 instead of $63,000.

I want to call the attention of the House to the items that are in this bill to be allowed by this House in case the hundred thousand dollars, as recommended by the conferees, is appropriated. First, we have here an alleged account in the papers submitted in the case for labor and material amounting to $56,000. There were no vouchers for any labor or material in the papers accompanying the bill that anybody would call a voucher, nothing of the kind but merely an ex parte statement from the claimant himself alleging that he paid this amount of money. But let that go.

He made a contract at his own request with the Government for $25,000, for which sum he was to furnish a complete machine. Afterwards, after trying two for two years to produce it, at his own request he was allowed $6,500 in addition, making $31,500 in all for the completed machine. Now, we have paid that sum of money and still he comes to Congress and asks to be allowed a salary for himself of $25,000 while he was engaged in building the machine that he had contracted to construct for $25,000 and the additional $6,500 subsequently allowed. Not only that, sir, but while under contract to furnish the machine for that money, he charges the Government an additional sum of $35,000, including his own salary and for the salary of draughtsman and plans, which were to cost, it is alleged, the $35,000. Then his own salary and the salary of his draughtsman are allowed in this report. In addition to that, because he did not get his salary and the draughtsman did not get his salary, he charges the Government interest at 7 per cent., compounded every three months. And we have then this sum of $25,000 also in this claim allowed for interest.

Mr. TRIGG. Not a word of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not a word of it? Then where did you get your sums that make up this amount?

Mr. TRIGG. I will explain that in my own time.

Mr. SPRINGER. You can not allow the $100,000 without the interest account, and it is so stated in his vouchers. I think the gentleman will find some difficulty in disputing that.

Now, what have we? We have a claim here for $100,000 in addition to the amounts already paid; the claimant agreeing to make a machine for $25,000, which was afterwards raised at his request to $31,500. We have paid that sum, but now he comes in to the committee and wants us to agree to pay him $100,000 more. What for? For his own salary a portion of it, for interest, for the rent of his office in the city of New York where he was a civil engineer. Here are the charges for monthly rent to be paid for his office as a civil engineer in the city of New York, when this work was to be done at Watertown, Mass. I have never seen so many items aggregated in one bill that are so objectionable. Not only that. In the Forty-sixth Congress the House of Representatives passed a bill intended to finally settle this question. It has been adjudicated once by an act of Congress, wherein we voted this additional claim and supposed it was a final settlement of all demands against us.

I reserve the remainder of my time until I look that up.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to ask my colleague a question before he sits down. I have heard it stated that the Government owned this man's patent. Is that true?

Mr. SPRINGER. This claimant owned a patent and was to build the Government a machine, and if we bought and used the machine we paid for that. All that we were to pay for was the machine which we built with our own money. He has a patent outside of that which he can dispose of in his own way.

Mr. HEARD. Did the Government interfere with his disposition of his machine?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not in the least.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCREARY). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. TRIGG. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman from Illinois started out with the statement that he did not propose a vote should be taken on this bill until the iniquities of the measure should be exposed to the House. When a gentleman makes a declaration of that kind, charging upon this House and a conference committee conduct that is not honorable on their part, I feel it my privilege to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois himself only a few weeks ago signed a report giving this man $63,000. It is true that after he signed that report he came into this House and fought the claim and filibustered against it and stultified himself by voting against his own report when the question came to a vote on this floor.

The gentleman stands here to-day and says this is an unfair and unjust claim. I hold in my hand an official document which shows that Mr. Emery paid to the Ames Manufacturing Company alone one bill of $37,780; or rather he has paid on that bill the sum of $32,000 and owes on it still the sum of about $6,000. Other equally legitimate expenditures were made aggregating about $75,000, as shown by vouchers that the gentleman from Illinois can have access to at any time.

When the matter was under discussion a few days ago the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who has fought this bill with a consistency which does him credit, but with a misapprehension of the facts which does him discredit, stated on this floor that this claimant had the use of the tools of the Government; that he had the use of the shops of the Government, and that the Government paid for the material and labor that went into this machine. I took upon myself the responsibility of asking the Chief of Ordnance, General Benét, as to the correctness of these statements. I addressed to General Benét this communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1887.

DEAR SIR: In the debate of Mr. Emery's claim in the House of Representatives, on January 21 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 922), Mr. TILLMAN tried to make it appear that the Government defrayed all the expense of all the changes made in the testing-machine, including the expenses of the experiments therefor; that it furnished all the material that was spoiled in making experiments to perfect the machine, and permitted him to have the use of its machinery in making his inventions.

For the purpose of setting the House right on these points I now ask you the following questions:

First. Did the Government furnish to Mr. Emery or allow him the use of any machine or machinery, or any building or shop to construct or to make, or to make over any part of the metal work of the testing-machine built by him for the Government, or for any experiment during the building of this machine?

Second. Did the Government furnish him with any labor whatever to construct or to make over any part of this machine?

Third. Did the Government furnish Mr. Emery with a single pound of metal for the construction or alteration or the perfection of this machine?

Respectfully soliciting an early reply, I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours,

J. H. GALLINGER,
Member of Committee on Claims, Forty-ninth Congress.

General S. V. BENÉT,
Chief of Ordnance, United States War Department, Washington, D. C.

General Benét made this reply:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, Washington, January 27, 1887.

Respectfully returned to Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

The Government paid Mr. Emery the sum of $31,500 for the testing-machine, and as far as the records of this office show the Department did not furnish him any labor, machinery, material, or other assistance.

I therefore reply in the negative to questions Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of your within letter.

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did not the Government furnish $31,000 to this man?

Mr. GALLINGER. It did. Everybody admits that; it is admitted universally. And no man who has investigated this case can deny that this claimant expended in the vicinity of $100,000 in money in perfecting this machine, thus absolutely bankrupting himself.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then the statements of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] were drawn from the exuberance of his own imagination.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly so. I desire to make one further statement. The Senate of the United States is unanimous in believing that this man ought to have the sum of $200,000 at least. The amount they voted at one time was $225,000. The Senate conferees were unanimous in saying he ought to have $200,000, and the conference once failed to agree. Afterwards the Senate conferees, realizing that there was danger of utter failure on the part of the conference, agreed to reduce the amount one-half in order that this man might get something from the Government, and the agreement to give him $100,000 really deprives him of at least one-half of what is honestly his due.

Now, sir, even if we vote this $100,000, this man does not receive a dollar of interest; but I stand here to say that if he received simple interest on the money he expended for the Government twelve years ago, it would amount to more than the sum that we pay him now, even if we vote this $100,000. And yet, as Senator VOORHEES once said in the Senate in debate on this very bill, we stand here higgling and haggling about a few dollars when the interests and the honor of the Government are at stake.

Mr. Speaker, I am done. I do not believe that this Congress is going to refuse to pay this man this pittance for the great invention which he has given to this nation of ours. Why, sir, it is a conceded fact that it is the greatest machine of its kind that has ever been produced in the civilized world. It is a conceded fact that this inventor sold that machine to the Government believing that the Government was going to use it simply for its own purposes; but instead of that the machine has been thrown open to the public, who are allowed to bring their work and have it done at bare cost, thus closing the public market to the inventor. The claim is just, fair, and honorable, and the recommendation of the conference committee ought to be adopted without a dissenting voice. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIGG. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, having been a member of the conference committee, it is probably due to the House that I should state as briefly as possible the reasons which induced me to disregard what was virtually the instruction of the House, and vote in that committee for a larger appropriation than the House had agreed to make, but the object of a committee of conference is to bring about a compromise. It is admitted upon all hands that this is the greatest and most valuable machine that has ever been constructed for the purposes to which it is applied, and it has been taken from this man—and from time to time different committees of both Houses of Congress have reported sums ranging from $100,000 to $200,000, no matter if it was built under contract with the Government—it has been taken from him and thrown open to the public on the simple condition that they pay its ordinary running expenses, and that goes to the Government, not to the claimant. As I made the figures for myself in the conference committee, I believe that the honest bills and vouchers submitted by the claimant showed that instead of the Government owing him $63,000, it owed him $71,000, and upon that basis I arrived at the conclusion that the machine having cost him $71,000, the difference between that amount and $100,000 was a small compensation for the use of his brains for the benefit of the public.

If this Government, either under contract or otherwise, takes from a man the use and benefit of a patent which it has agreed to protect, then in my opinion the Government should pay him not only what the machine cost, but also a reasonable sum by way of compensation, especially where the machine is taken out of the hands of the party that built it and thrown open to the public even though it was built in a Government shop; and the difference between $71,000 and $100,000 is a small amount to pay for the acknowledged benefits of this machine to the public, and on account of its value as a means of protecting life and property.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Government owns this machine, does it not?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. It does.

Mr. SPRINGER. It paid for it with its own money.

Mr. TRIGG. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take any part in this debate, but since I have been drawn into the discussion by the criticism of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I regret exceedingly that in seven minutes I can do justice neither to the subject nor to myself. So far from opposing this claim on a misapprehension of the facts, as charged by the gentleman from New Hampshire, I oppose it because I know the facts better than he does, and better, perhaps, than any member of the present Committee on Claims or of the preceding committee. In the last Congress, sir, I was a member of the Committee on Claims in the last House, and this particular claim was referred to me as a committee of one. I spent from one to two hours every day for nearly three weeks in investigating the merits of the claim and examining the vouchers, or pretended vouchers, and cross-examining the claimant himself, and, after using all the ability and industry and judicial fairness I was capable of, I came to the deliberate conclusion that it was a cooked-up claim, and I do not hesitate to say now upon my honor as a man, and upon my responsibility as a representative of the American people, that no more fraudulent or unjust claim has ever been presented against this Government since its foundation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, from my experience in the last Congress and my observation in this, and especially in view of the evident purpose to pass this claim, I have deliberately arrived at the conclusion that any claim can pass Congress if, first, it be old enough or fraudulently prepared enough to obscure the evidence; secondly, if it be large enough to divide—[a hiss]—yes, divide; and, thirdly, if it be pressed, as this claim has been pressed, with shameless, persistent audacity. I wish I had time to explain what I mean by "divide," as gentlemen seem to hiss the expression.

Mr. DUNHAM. You ought to explain it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not mean to refer to my colleagues here. I meant divide with witnesses, as I believe this claim will be divided with witnesses; I meant divide with attorneys, lobbyists, and ex-members of this body—I will not say with my colleagues on this floor. But there is one charge I will make against my colleagues here. They are responsible for our faulty and defective method of investigating and settling claims; of our abominable practice of acting upon ex parte testimony with no one to represent the Government—to cross-examine witnesses or look after the Government's side of the question.

A MEMBER. That is the Government's own fault.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, that is too true, and the sooner we make a change the better, for every claim against the United States ought to be tried by a jury of the federal district court where it arises, where the claimants live, where the witnesses live, where the claim is known, where publicity is given to everything pertaining to the claim, and where the local district attorney can protect the Government. I also charge my colleagues here with laziness in being averse to properly investigating fraudulent claims like this so as to form a correct judgment, and with unconsciously yielding to the mysterious influence of an organized lobby, as well as to the dogged pertinacity of claimants.

A little claim stands but a poor chance here, and even an honest big claim stands next to none unless the owners of it agree to divide and urge it in season and out of season.

But that does not touch the merits of Emery's case. I can not more than fairly begin to do that before the Speaker's hammer would fall, and therefore I have simply given an opinion as to the result of a laborious and impartial investigation, and once more I repeat that this claim has no foundation in justice. It has not even the technical quality of equity, and if we vote this man anything it will be a donation.

This man was allowed to dictate his price twice for making this testing machine. The Government paid it, and paid all he asked. He has produced no vouchers itemizing amounts expended except for about $8,000 worth of drawings, to the propriety of which General Gillmore certifies. The rest of the vouchers are mere ex parte affidavits. He only itemizes time, making charges for labor and material between certain dates, without giving anything more specific than alleged lump payments between dates. In his way the great bulk of the amount which he claims to have been expended was made up.

This claimant has haunted the corridors of the Capitol for six years, has tracked the members of the Committee on Claims to their rooms. He frequently came uninvited to my room during the last Congress, until at last, after I had pumped the truth out of him, I ordered him away.

A MEMBER. How about the agreement?

Mr. TILLMAN. There was an agreement as mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], and as he has yielded me all the little time he has left I will say as he did, that two gentlemen—great friends of this claimant, gentlemen from the opposite side of the House—came over here and electioneered with several of us not to fight the $63,000 agreed upon by the minority of the committee; and it was upon that condition that I for one not only ceased to filibuster in order to force a fair discussion but went among my friends and begged them not to do it. Yes, sir, it was upon the condition expressly agreed to that no larger sum than $63,000 should be sought in a conference that we who opposed the bill permitted it to pass.

I said to those two gentlemen, "Make this man accept that proposition," and we will cease to attack the bill—we will acquiesce reluctantly in that sum, because the minority of the committee have agreed to it. Those two gentlemen were Governor LONG and Mr. REED—I name them. Mr. Reed came to my seat and sat by me nearly an hour talking over the matter, before I would make the promise.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I never made any such agreement with the gentleman from South Carolina. Now, whom do you believe?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is a question of veracity.

Mr. REED. I say there is the proposition—I never thought of making any such agreement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did you not say that you would use your influence with him?

Mr. REED. No, sir, not at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say you did.

Mr. REED. The gentleman is just as much mistaken in that as in his other philippics. He is wild on this subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, sir, it is merely a question of veracity between us; and our characters must go for what they are worth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TRIGG] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TRIGG. I desire to know whether all the time on the other side has been consumed.

The SPEAKER. It has been.

Mr. TRIGG. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I did go to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and to others who I believed were opposing a just claim, and urged them to give way—to allow the passage of a bill giving $128,000 or $100,000. The gentleman from South Carolina did say that he would consent to the passage of this bill for $63,000 if no further opposition should be made, if the applicant would be content with that sum. But I did not state to him that that would be acceptable to the claimant. I had no authority to make such a statement. I may have conveyed to the gentleman the impression that I would be glad to have the man accept even $63,000 rather than get nothing. But I had no authority to make such a pledge for the applicant, who is not even a constituent of mine; and I never stated to the gentleman from South Carolina that that sum would be acceptable to him. On the contrary——

Mr. TILLMAN. Did you not say you would use your influence to make him accept it?

Mr. LONG. I am sure I did not say I would use my influence with him. I did say that I would be very glad to have him accept that rather than get nothing, for it then seemed very likely he would otherwise get nothing. I so told the applicant himself, if that is using my influence. It certainly can not be that the gentleman from South Carolina acted upon any such understanding as he suggests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG. Give me one minute more. [Cries of "Go on!"] Here, he claims, is a bill with no justice in it, no equity in it, a claim the most corrupt since the foundation of the Government, yet in the same breath undertakes to have the House believe he would have consented to have it passed to the extent of $63,000. He would consent to give a man who has no claim, who is corrupt, who, he says, dogged his steps, whom he turned from his door, in whose claim there was not an atom of justice; yet he would give him $63,000.

Nor is it possible the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] understood that he consented to the $63,000 on the ground that the claimant was to rest content with that. Why, the gentleman himself signed a report granting this man $63,000, yet he would have us believe that he was consenting to its passage not because it was rightly and justly reported by him, but because of a promise not to seek more. Certainly no agreement was necessary to induce the gentleman from Illinois to consent to a sum which he himself joined in reporting. Yet he consented. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. TRIGG. So much has been said on this subject already that I would not detain the House but for the violent phillipic of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. He has stated there was no corruption in this matter so far as any of his colleagues were concerned. I understand the only charge he made against any of his colleagues was that of laziness. [Laughter.] He has told us that he is the only man of all the men who had to investigate this claim that had the industry to get to the bottom of it—that he was the only member! Yet upon that very committee upon which he alone labored so industriously we find that it has reported to this House that the sum of $100,000 shall be paid to this man on account of this claim.

Mr. TILLMAN. Only the majority of the committee.

Mr. TRIGG. Here is the minority report of the committee with whom the industrious gentleman from South Carolina acted. I hold it in my hand.

Mr. TILLMAN. My answer to that is, there were four who signed the minority report against five who signed the majority report.

Mr. TRIGG. The gentleman has been industrious in telling us here at this time what he has done, but there are no papers in the Committee on Claims, no footprints there, or upon the records of the House from him to show the result of that industry, and we have him here now for the first time proclaiming that there is fraud.

Mr. TILLMAN. The records of the committee show. You have got them in your report.

Mr. TRIGG. Certainly; I have got every word in my report, but I say there is nothing in the report, or in the records, about this being a fraudulent claim thrust before Congress and which is being lobbied by so many persons.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does the gentleman deny there are lobbyists interested in it?

Mr. TRIGG. I do not know anything of it. Lobbyists do not approach me. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has not the gentleman stated there were lobbyists interested in it? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TRIGG. In my limited time I can not yield to any further interruptions.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] made a statement that he had arrived at the conclusion this $100,000 was got at by compounding interest. I submit he knows nothing about the case if he states that as a fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will show it, if you give me time, in the reports of the committee. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. TILLMAN. If the gentleman will only give us time we will show just exactly what this is.

Mr. TRIGG. All the vouchers upon which this is based I hold now in my hand, and they have been as carefully and thoroughly examined by me as I have ever examined any case in my life, and I state on my responsibility to the House that the vouchers, including $21,000 for claimant's services, amount to $103,577.15, and that no interest was computed to arrive at that amount.

A MEMBER. What are the items?

Mr. TRIGG. Here they are, and I wish gentlemen would examine them. Deduct from the $103,577.15, the amount heretofore paid, $31,652.39, and it leaves the sum of $71,824.76, exclusive of interest.

Mr. BYNUM. Did not the gentleman state in his report that but $63,000 was what they found due?

Mr. TRIGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYNUM. How, then, do you make it $100,000?

Mr. TRIGG. I have fully explained the reason heretofore. It was a matter of compromise in the conference committee, and it is a sum added to the $63,000 or $71,000, on account of the act throwing the machine open to the use of the public.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will show that my statement is true if I can have the floor for a few minutes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TRIGG. The gentleman can not show it. I deny that he can show anything of the kind.

The SPEAKER. The time has expired.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. In the remarks of my esteemed friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] he made the general charge that the members of the Committee on Claims and of the subcommittee were lazy. [Laughter].

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not charge it specially against the committee. I made the charge against the whole House, as far as the merits of claims are concerned and the opportunity for investigation.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I have to say—and I have a right when such a charge is made against me to say—in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina, that I have served my constituents with as much industry if not with as much ability as he has served his; and if I have not served them with more, God help my constituents, for his are objects of sympathy. [Laughter.]

As to being approached by a lobbyist, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has not stated a question of privilege.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then I rise to another question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. There was something in the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina which alluded to a certain class of persons whom I have understood to be tolerably plenty around the city of Washington, called "lobbyists." I wish to say that no lobbyist ever approached me. I do not know the claimant in this case personally. Perhaps the reason why the gentlemen from Indiana, South Carolina, and from Illinois are so well acquainted with those gentlemen is because they have had more to do with them than I ever expect to have. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. SPRINGER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 98, not voting 84; as follows:

So the report was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.
Mr. SPRINGER. I object.
The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.
The following additional pairs were announced:
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. BAKER on this vote.
Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. BRAGG with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.
Mr. RANDALL with Mr. DUNN.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
Mr. TRIGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate requested the return of the bill (S. 3104) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.
Mr. LAIRD. I trust the gentleman will yield to me to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of a bill which will take but a moment.
Mr. HATCH. I rise to make a privileged report if the gentleman from Illinois yields the floor.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BRADY. I rise to question of personal privilege.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BRADY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, which affects, I think, the integrity of the proceedings of the House more than it does my right as a member of this body. In Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice it is said: "By strict adherence to the rules the weaker party can only be protected," and that "the rules should not be subject to the caprice of the Speaker or captiousness of the members."
Under the rules of the House of Representatives (Rule XVI, section 2) it is prescribed that when a motion has been made the Speaker shall state it, or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House; hence, debate is not allowed on any motion or question until it has been stated or read.
Mr. MILLS. I rise to a question of order, that the gentleman from Virginia is not presenting a question of privilege. If there be a question of privilege, what is it?
The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. Will the gentleman from Virginia state what is his question of privilege?
Mr. BRADY. I will state it presently. Mr. Speaker, it is parliamentary law "that the privilege of a member is the privilege of the House;" also, "when a member stands up to speak, no question is to be put, but he is to be heard, unless the House overrule him;" and, further, "when the House commands it is by an order."
Section 3 of Rule XXVIII of the House prescribes:

When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of, and one-half to debate in opposition to, such proposition, &c.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not stating a question of privilege.
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia state his question of privilege? The point of order is made that what the gentleman is stating is not a matter of privilege.
Mr. BRADY. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for the reading from the RECORD of the proceedings of the House on Monday last.
The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that the session this evening be continued after 9 o'clock for public business.
Mr. BRADY. I object.
Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the following resolution and move the rules be suspended for its adoption.
The Clerk read as follows:
"Resolved, That the following resolution, adopted on the 26th instant, namely:
'Resolved, That on Monday, February 28, the House take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. to 7.30 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of resolutions relating to the Hon. William H. Cole, deceased, late a Representative from the State of Maryland.'
be continued so that at 8.30 p. m. the House shall resume its legislative business.'"
Mr. BRADY. On that I demand a second.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as tellers.
The House divided; and the the tellers reported—ayes 164, noes not counted.
So there was a second.
Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the gentleman has not presented a privileged question.
Mr. BRADY. I submit as a question of order that the rules of the House were not observed at that time.
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state what is his point of privilege?
Mr. BRADY. I desire to state it in my own way.
Now, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that the rules of the House were not observed in the proceedings I have had read under the motion to suspend the rules. A second was ordered by the House, of which fact the House was not advised.
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state distinctly what is the question of privilege to which he has risen?
Mr. BRADY. I am stating it. The order of the House should have been stated, and then, and only then, would it have been in possession of the House for debate. I was on the floor standing up in view of the Speaker, desiring to speak, but under the rule I had no right to speak, because debate was not in order until the question had been stated. The question then in order, and the only question, has thirty minutes' debate, and under the rule it should have been put to the House.
Mr. Speaker, since these proceedings in the House on Monday last I have taken the trouble to ascertain the practice of the Speaker whenever a second is ordered upon the motion to suspend the rules, and invariably it has been as follows:
The Speaker makes this statement to the House, to wit: "A second is ordered. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate;" and he then names the gentlemen to control the time in support of and in opposition to the motion. This practice—the rule of the House, which so far as I can ascertain has never been disregarded—was not observed on Monday last when the House ordered a second. It may be said that we were near the close of the session, and that important legislation demanded all the time that could be secured. Permit me to ask attention to the proceedings had during the last hour of the Forty-eighth Congress, when General Grant was placed on the retired-list of the Army.
Mr. RANDALL made the motion to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill. Mr. MCMILLIN demanded a second. It was ordered; and thereupon, in the hurry and confusion of the expiring hour of that Congress, when every moment of time was precious and valuable, the Speaker stated to the House (I quote from the record), "There are now thirty minutes for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the proposition, and fifteen minutes against it."
Mr. Speaker, in availing myself of the privilege under the rules to discharge my duty by making the foregoing statement to the House, I desire to say that my respect and regard for the Speaker of the House is too great for me to entertain for a moment the idea that he would not, under all circumstances, render equal justice to every member of the House, nor would I intimate that he would do anything improper. But I do say that under the rules and under the practice of the House there was a disregard of the rules on the occasion to which I refer.
The SPEAKER. On the occasion to which the gentleman from Virginia refers a second was ordered by a vote of the House, as the Chair now remembers, and the Chair did not state, as is generally done, that under the rules there were thirty minutes allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the resolution and fifteen minutes in opposition to it. But no gentleman, so far as the Chair knows, took the floor for the purpose of engaging in debate, and the question was put on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.
Mr. BRADY. I make the point that the floor could not have been taken by any member to address the House until the Chair stated the question.
The SPEAKER. The Chair did state the question as being on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.
Mr. BRADY. My point is that the Speaker should have stated that thirty minutes were allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.
The SPEAKER. In other words, the Chair did not make proclamation what the rule of the House was, and no gentleman rose to address the House.
Mr. BRADY. How could I rise to address the House until the Speaker stated the question?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia had a right to rise to address the House, because the Chair had stated the question.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to present a conference report. But I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] for a motion that the House take a recess.
Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has been recognized to present the report of a committee of conference.
Mr. HATCH. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

RELIEF OF SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LAIRD. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That for the purpose of reimbursing persons and the grantees, heirs, and devisees of persons, who, under the homestead, pre-emption, or other laws, settled upon or purchased lands within the grant made by an act entitled 'An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas Railroad and Telegraph,' approved July 23, 1866, and to whom patents have been issued therefor, but against which persons, or their grantees, heirs, or devisees, decrees have been rendered by the United States circuit court on account of the priority of said grant made in the act above entitled, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as shall be required for said purpose, is hereby appropriated: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be paid to any one of said parties until he shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of the said decree, duly certified, and also a certificate of the judge of said court rendering the same to the effect that such decree was rendered in a bona fide controversy between a plaintiff showing title under the grant made in said act and a defendant holding the patent or holding by deed under the patentee, and that the decision was in favor of the plaintiff on the ground of the priority of the grant made by said act to the filing, settlement, or purchase by the defendant or his grantor; and said claimant shall also file with the said decree and certificate a bill of the costs in such case, duly certified by the clerk and judge of said court. Thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the amount due to each defendant on the basis of $3.50 per acre for the tract his title to which shall have failed as aforesaid, and the costs appearing by the bill thereof. He shall then make a requisition upon the Treasury for the sum found to be due to such claimant, or his heirs and devisees, or assigns, and shall pay the same to him, taking such release, acquittance, or discharge as shall forever bar any further claim against the United States on account of the failure of the title as aforesaid."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the last section of the House bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall only apply to the actual and bona fide settlers on the lands therein referred to, and no one person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act for compensation for more than 160 acres of land: Provided, That all other persons who purchased any part of said land at $1.25 per acre, and the money was actually paid into the Treasury, shall be entitled to repayment of the money so actually paid by them.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the understanding that that provision will be retained by any conference committee that the Speaker may appoint, I shall not object to the conference. Otherwise I should object.

Mr. LAIRD. The case is just this: The Committee on Claims, to whom this bill was referred, have recommended non-concurrence in the Senate amendments and agreement to the conference asked.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in and the conference was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. HATCH. I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] who desires to offer a resolution.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the resolution usually adopted at the end of each Congress in relation to the distribution of documents to members of the outgoing Congress. I send the resolution to the desk to be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That all documents and books ordered to be published by the present Congress which are actually printed prior to the first Monday of December next, together with documents and books hereafter ordered to be printed which have not been actually printed, to which members of the present Congress are or would have been entitled if published prior to the 4th day of March next, and which are actually printed prior to the first Monday of next December, shall be allotted, as heretofore, to members of the present Congress, and transmitted to their residences as fast as printed, unless otherwise ordered by the members themselves.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is the usual resolution, and I move its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS, TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Mr. HATCH. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 5959) granting the right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following section:

SEC. 6. This act shall be at all times subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal, as in the judgment of Congress the public good may require.

The amendment was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] demands the regular order. The Chair will lay before the House a message from the Senate returning a bill at the request of the House. The message will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 2, 1887.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill of the House (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. This is one of the bills passed last evening. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] intended to present the bill with the amendments which the committee had recommended, but, by an oversight, the bill was passed as it had been introduced originally. The purpose of recalling it is to correct that mistake by inserting the amendments recommended by the committee. If there be no objection, the bill will be engrossed accordingly.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the conference report presented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 10912, making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, and 16.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 8, 9, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 25, and 26, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5, line 1, after the word "including," insert "$50,000 for the continuation of experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies; in all, $56,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby required to make separate report to Congress stating fully and accurately an itemized account of every expenditure made under this provision and the results of all experiments made;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5, line 2, strike out "eighty-one" and insert "in all, fifty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert "and a like sum of $5,000 for the same purposes and under the same restrictions and conditions to the California Ladies' Silk Culture Association of California," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede frem its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 24 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment as follows: "One hundred thousand dollars of this sum, or so much thereof as may be necesssary, to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. H. HATCH,
WHARTON J. GREEN,
MILO WHITE,
Managers on the part of the House.
WILLIAM MAHONE,
P. B. PLUMB,
WILKINSON CALL,

The explanatory statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House submit the following statement in writing to accompany conference report on H. R. 10912, making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes:

The Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, and 16.

Amendment numbered 1 increases the salary of the botanist from $2,000, amount now paid, to $2,250; an increase of $250.

Amendment numbered 3 is simply formal, being one of additions to make the total conform to the change above stated.

Amendment numbered 4 provided an additional clerk at $1,000 per annum for the chemical division, and amendment numbered 5 is simply formal, being one of additions to make the total conform to the change.

Amendment numbered 6 reduced the salary of the ornithologist $250, and amendment numbered 7 corrects the addition and leaves it as it passed the House.

Amendment numbered 10 increased the amount in botanical division from two to five thousand dollars, and amendment numbered 11 was as follows:

"And the Commissioner of Agriculture may use for the purpose of a station for said investigations such abandoned military reservation as the Secretary of the Interior may temporarily assign to him for this purpose."

In view of the passage of the experiment-stations bill, your conferees deemed this appropriation unnecessary.

Amendment numbered 16 appropriated $5,000 for the promotion of bee culture, which is fully embraced in the general appropriation for the entomological division, and therefore unnecessary.

The House recedes from amendments numbered 2, 8, 9, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 25, and 26.

Amendments numbered 2, 8, 9, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 25 are merely formal, perfecting and correcting the text of the bill, and in nowise change the amounts appropriated as passed by the House.

Amendment numbered 15 increases the appropriation to the entomological division from $15,000 to $20,000.

Amendment numbered 22 is as follows:

"Provided, That in the expenditure of the money herein appropriated no discrimination shall be made in the compensation paid to persons employed in the seed-room for the same class of work."

Amendments numbered 23 and 24 as amended apply to the Bureau of Animal Industry and increase the sum appropriated by the House from $100,000 to $500,000, with the following proviso added at the end thereof:

"One hundred thousand dollars of this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available."

Amendment numbered 26 is as follows:

"SEC. 3. That all machinery purchased under the provisions of this act shall be built in the United States, wholly of domestic material."

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 13 and 14, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out "eighty-one thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand," with the following additional proviso:

"Fifty thousand dollars for the continuation of experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, in all $56,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby required to make a separate report to Congress stating fully and accurately an itemized account of every expenditure made under this provision, and the results of all experiments made."

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agrees to the same with the following amendment:

"And a like sum of $5,000, for the same purposes and under the same restrictions and conditions, to the California Ladies' Silk-Culture Association of California."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. HATCH,
WHARTON J. GREEN,
MILO WHITE,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the House that there are only two important amendments placed on this bill by the action of the Senate. The first is an appropriation of $50,000 to continue the experiments in progress for the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane by what is known as the saturation process. The House will remember that at the last session of Congress we appropriated for this purpose $94,000. The experiments are incomplete. Valuable machinery has been purchased by the Government and experiments are now in progress. At the last session it was stated to the House by the committee that that appropriation was deemed sufficient to complete these experiments; but experience has demonstrated that it was not, and the Commissioner has asked a further appropriation of $75,000, which the Senate agreed to and placed in the bill. As a compromise on this subject the conferees on the part of the House have agreed to an appropriation of $50,000, with the understanding that this shall complete these experiments and that no further appropriation will be asked in this direction.

Mr. LORE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether it is provided that the machinery required shall be manufactured in this country.

Mr. HATCH. It is. That is the last amendment—amendment 26. It provides that any additional machinery which it may be found necessary to purchase for the completion of these experiments shall be purchased entirely in the United States.

Mr. MILLS. Whether good, bad, or indifferent.

Mr. HATCH. Whether good, bad, or indifferent. The statement has been made by the Commissioner that no additional machinery is necessary except in the way of repairs to the existing machinery or replacing parts which have proved defective.

Mr. HAMMOND. What is the use of the restriction if that is true?

Mr. HATCH. I do not think there is any necessity for it at all; but the amendment was suggested by a distinguished gentleman——

Mr. MILLS. Why not require everything consumed in the United States to be made here?

Mr. MCKINLEY. All right; bring in your bill.

Mr. WILSON. And why not also prevent anything going out of the country?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir; let us be entirely self-sustaining.

Mr. HATCH. It is not necessary for me to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] or to this House that I have as little sympathy with any hide-bound rule on this subject as he or any other gentleman on this floor has. But I did not deem it necessary to make a contest over a matter that was entirely immaterial. In view of the quarter from which the proposition came, I did not feel like opposing it because the gentleman who made the suggestion said that the proposition had passed the Senate without division and without objection on the part of any member of the Senate.

The Commissioner has stated to me that but very little additional machinery will be required. All that is necessary to complete the experiments will be some repairs and the replacing of some parts of the machinery which have proved to be defective. The main machinery has all been purchased and is now in the possession of the Government, a part of it being at Fort Scott, Kans., and a portion of it having been moved down to Louisiana to make the test with sugar cane during the coming season. Every particle of that machinery was manufactured in the United States except a portion amounting in value to about $2,000, which the Commissioner ordered from Europe because it was required in haste.

Mr. CANNON. So far as this machinery is concerned, the gentleman from Missouri will allow me to say that in my portion of Illinois there is some for sale very cheap, which has been used in making hundreds of barrels of sugar, but which, in spite of reasonably cheap labor and magnificent soil, can not now be used with any advantage, owing to the cheapness of sugar.

Mr. HATCH. I am obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for having made that statement. I hope he will send a copy of his remarks to the Commissioner of Agriculture calling attention to the fact he has stated. I have nothing to do with executing the law. I am simply attempting to perfect it in the interest of the sugar growers of the great Mississippi Valley.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague [Mr. EDEN] understands about this matter.

Mr. HATCH. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, just one word on the subject of this appropriation. We are all familiar with the figure this question cut a year or two ago, at the last session of Congress or the session before. Ninety-four thousand dollars, then appropriated, has been absolutely wasted, thrown away, this expenditure constituting one of the most disgraceful scandals—I do not mean in the sense of stealing money, but in the squandering of it without any intelligent direction and for no useful purpose. The matter was exposed most freely by the press of the country.

It is now proposed to continue these operations, and to do so with machinery made in this country. A very significant fact in this connection is that there is now before the Committee on Ways and Means a bill introduced by some one representing the sugar-growing interest of this country—I think the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]—asking that this kind of machinery be permitted to come into this country free of duty—asking that just one set of it be permitted to come in free; for the process is an old one in Austria and Germany. There is no novelty about it, and there is plenty of machinery with which to carry it on if people wish to put their money in it and buy it like anything else which may be bought and paid for.

And it is perfectly feasible for our machine manufacturers in this country to take copies and make the machine and sell it here. Therefore I say it is singular that we should be called upon to make these appropriations for a machine to be made in this country when up to this time there is not a machine manufacturer who has undertaken to supply the trade with it; not one. And when the example of our past most liberal appropriation is one of no practical utility whatever, for my part I trust the House will not agree to this appropriation with something of a vigorous protest. It not only involves in this appropriation the sum of $50,000, but it involves the question of an unwarranted and indefensible waste of the public money.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that if he will report that bill, to which he has referred, to this House, he will find me an earnest and an ardent advocate in its support.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But it is in conflict with a similar provision in this bill.

Mr. MCKINLEY. It is not here at all.

Mr. HATCH. It will not interfere with this in any respect. This is for the purchase of machinery to be used by the Government in its experiments. The proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana is to bring in machinery from abroad to be used by an individual or by a corporation. I believe that bill is right, and I would vote for it if it was before the House.

But further than that, sir, I want to state to the gentleman that the question he presents has nothing in the world to do with the question now presented, for it is only a controversy between two chemists in the United States. When the Commissioner of Agriculture makes his report, which he has not yet done because his experiments had not been concluded in this direction—if that report bears out the facts stated by the press, and now reiterated by the gentleman from Arkansas, I will stand up in my place on this floor and ask the House to adopt a resolution of investigation as to the expenditure in the department of the amount of these appropriations.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much of the $94,000 already appropriated is left?

Mr. HATCH. Up to this time—the last financial statement sent to my committee shows about $34,000 was left of that appropriation.

In other words, about $60,000, possibly a little more or less, has been already expended, the bulk of it, in the purchase of machinery, and he can not make his report intelligently to Congress until he concludes the experiments in that line, and the reason why this delay has occurred is because it was too late in the season for him to get the proper cane in Louisiana to make the tests which it was necessary to make in order to determine the success of the experiment.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if I understand him now to be in favor of using this appropriation for continued experiments in the diffusion process, under the chemist of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I have nothing in the world to do, as the gentleman from Louisiana knows, with the appointment or continuance in office of the present chemists of the Agricultural Department. I have not interfered in any way with the Commissioner in the appointment of any of his staff.

Mr. KING. Then I will limit it to one question. Are you in favor of continuing this appropriation for experiments in the manufacture of sugar from vegetables by the process of diffusion?

Mr. HATCH. I will say this much to my friend from Louisiana: That I am informed, and the Commissioner of Agriculture has so stated to more than one member of the Committee on Agriculture, both in the House and Senate, and it was stated in conference when pressed by the Senate to agree to the terms of this amendment, that the present chemist who had charge there would not have it this season.

Mr. KING. That is not the question. I want to ask the gentleman this: Are you in favor of additional appropriations for the purpose of making experiments by the diffusion process?

Mr. HATCH. There is nothing included in this appropriation except for experiments for making sugar from sorghum or from sugar-cane; and the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas that this was an old process, the machinery for which had been perfected in Europe, by which sugar had been made by this process either from sorghum or from sugar-cane, is a mistake. My friend is laboring under an error when he makes that statement. It has been perfected and it has worked admirably in producing sugar from beets, and all of the machinery has been perfected to extract the sugar by this process from beets. But when tried here, we found that the machinery for slicing it in various ways, using beets for this process, would not answer for cane, and that is the reason these experiments have been made, and the only reason.

The only experiment as far as our information extends that has been made with sugar-cane at all with this process in the old country has been made in Spain, and as far as it has gone it has proven a success.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. With the permission of the gentleman from Missouri, I want to say this: I am not a sugar-grower and can not pretend to any great information in that line, but we have had before the Committee on Ways and Means, or before some of us there, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], who certainly understands all about this business, and also the German representative of this machinery; and they profess, and I suppose they know what they are talking about, that they are in possession of all the facilities of which the gentleman from Missouri has spoken for working the cane. Therefore I say upon that authority that the gentleman is mistaken. And furthermore, when he expresses his willingness to vote for that bill and help to pass it through this House, and thinks thereby to draw any strength from the feeble argument that I am making to-night, I will say the very reason I am glad the measure is not here is that gentlemen like him are too willing to vote for it.

Mr. HATCH. I know of no other process for making sugar from cane than as stated.

Mr. KING. Are you in favor now of another appropriation by this House for experiments in regard to the manufacture of sugar by the process of diffusion from vegetables?

Mr. HATCH. There is nothing of that kind included in this amendment.

Mr. KING. Or in this bill?

Mr. HATCH. It is not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to make a brief statement? The conference committee struck from the appropriation bill——

Mr. HATCH. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri when we get to the amendment to which I suppose he was about to refer. Let us deal with one amendment at a time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, this is a Senate amendment.

Mr. KING. What is the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. I am referring to the sugar amendment. It is a Senate amendment. The proposition did not originate in our committee nor was it reported by our committee to the House.

Mr. DUNN. Does the Commissioner of Agriculture ask for it?

Mr. HATCH. He has asked for it. He went in person before the Senate committee and urged it, as I am informed.

Mr. DUNN. From my reading of his last report I supposed he did not want it.

Mr. KING. What amendment is the gentleman from Missouri referring to?

Mr. HATCH. There is but the one amendment referring to sugar, and it includes nothing but sorghum and sugar cane.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield further on this subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the next most important amendment in this report is that increasing the appropriation to carry out the act known as the act establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry and to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State to another from $100,000, as it passed the House, to $500,000, with the same proviso as is in the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year, except the added words of "exposed" as well as diseased cattle and "quarantine."

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HATCH. With pleasure.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is there any change in the machinery of the old statute?

Mr. HATCH. Not a particle.

Mr. MILLS. Then the only change is in the appropriation?

Mr. HAMMOND. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Missouri, is the only change what he has just now mentioned?

Mr. HATCH. I do not understand what the gentleman from Georgia means by the machinery of the old statute. This matter is placed in charge of the bureau of animal industry, and this simply removes the restrictions that are embodied in the proviso that was added to the bill last session.

Mr. HAMMOND. I asked the question for information.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be happy to give the gentleman all the information I have.

Mr. HAMMOND. It will perhaps bring your mind to the point I have in view if I ask you——

Mr. HATCH. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the section read to which the amendment pertains.

The Clerk read the proposed twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate as follows:

After the word "dollars" insert the following:
"And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals, and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another."

Mr. HATCH. Now I will state the only change in this amendment from the existing law is in adding the words "or exposed" after "diseased" and the words "and the quarantine of the same."

Mr. HAMMOND. Is not there this other change that you take out of it the restriction that the number shall not exceed thirty-two?

Mr. HATCH. That is already in the law under which the commissioner is operating, the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, but this declares that he may employ just so many as he sees proper.

Mr. HATCH. And I say that the same provision is in the law that he has been operating under ever since the 1st of July last.

Mr. MORGAN. Did not it limit the number to twenty?

Mr. HATCH. It did not. That limitation is in the original act.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will bear with me, it seems to me from the reading that this amendment removes the restriction.

Mr. HATCH. I have stated to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], and I now restate that while that restriction was in the original act, which was passed by the Forty-eighth Congress, the act creating the Bureau of Animal Industry, the law under which the Commissioner is now operating, and has been operating since the beginning of the present fiscal year, has in it this identical proviso removing the restriction.

Mr. McMILLIN. Removing the restriction?

Mr. HATCH. Removing the restriction.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then does the gentleman announce that under this bill, if it becomes a law, there will be no restriction whatever?

Mr. HATCH. I state as fully and frankly as I can that the restriction as to the number of persons is removed and he can employ as many as he deems necessary.

Mr. HAMMOND. And at any rates of compensation he chooses?

Mr. McMILLIN. Then it turns out that the restrictions imposed by the act organizing the bureau are removed. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] if it is not also a fact that there is no restriction upon the Commissioner of Agriculture as to the salaries or compensation that he shall pay his employés when this $500,000 appropriation is made?

Mr. HATCH. Except in so far as they are fixed by the original act.

Mr. McMILLIN. But these new employés, this unlimited number—is there any restriction as to their compensation?

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the gentleman that the employés are classified in the original act, and of course the Commissioner can not exceed the compensation there prescribed.

Now, by way of explanation, I will state that when the outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia occurred at Chicago and the Commissioner went there he employed, under the provisions of the act for the current fiscal year, a large number of persons, twenty-five or thirty or more—I will not undertake to state the exact number, because the figures are not before me.

He employed those persons simply to enforce the quarantine of diseased cattle, and paid them, as I recollect the statement, from $1.50 to $3 a day, having them on duty in relays day and night. They, of course, were not experts; but he has employed a certain number of veterinary surgeons as assistants, and he has uniformly, as he tells me, kept within the provisions of the original act. And now I want to state to the House one reason for this amendment. We are here in the closing hours of the session. The Senate, the night before last, upon information which was received and communicated to that body, and which is now in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—the Senate, I say, after it had by a vote of 34 to 27 agreed to an amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to what is known as the commission bill, then pending in the Senate, which appropriated a million dollars, adopted a substitute, placing in the hands of the President of the United States the sum of a million dollars to be used by him as the emergencies might arise.

That very night, upon the announcement that an outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia had occurred in Boston and, as I am informed, that it had been traced back directly as far as Buffalo and from Buffalo to these cattle-pens in Chicago, the Senate reconsidered their action, rejected the amendment, and passed a bill appropriating a million dollars for this purpose. Now, as a compromise and a settlement of this whole question, and to carry us along until December next, the conferees on the part of the House have accepted this amendment appropriating half a million dollars with this proviso; simply to give to the Government an opportunity to go into the States, and in the interest of the interstate commerce of the country, aid them in stopping the spread of pleuro-pneumonia; and unless something is done now, that disease will extend, inside of six months, to all parts of the country.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Now will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HATCH. With pleasure.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman if there is any limitation in this bill upon the price that may be paid for cattle?

Mr. MORGAN. And how is that to be determined?

Mr. HATCH. I will answer one question at a time. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], that except in so far as the rules and regulations which govern the conduct of the Commissioner have been approved by this administration and are now in force, there is no limit; but those regulations do impose a restriction upon him, and he has never yet exceeded it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Who makes the regulation?

Mr. HATCH. The Commissioner of Agriculture made the regulations and promulgated them under the original act, and, as far as they have been accepted by the States, operations are now conducted under them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then there is, in fact, no limitation in this bill upon the number of persons that may be employed, or to the compensation that may be paid to them, or upon the price that may be paid for cattle taken to be killed; but all that is left to the discretion of the Bureau of Agriculture. Is not that true?

Mr. HATCH. I have already answered every one of the gentleman's questions except the last. I do not care to take up time in reiterating what I have said. I simply state, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio what I have said before, that except in those regulations there is no limit as to the sum to be paid.

I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] and will now do so.

Mr. MORGAN. I have understood the gentleman to state that information was brought to the Senate that there was an outbreak of this disease in Boston——

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. And that it was traced through Buffalo to Chicago——

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. And upon that the vote was reconsidered and the bill was passed. So the gentleman has stated to the House.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I ask the gentleman to point to the RECORD to sustain the statement he has made; for I have examined the RECORD carefully and have made inquiry, and I can not find any evidence in support of the gentleman's statement. Before he makes his answer, I will state to the House that on the morning following the day when this bill was first acted on Mr. DAWES came in and entered a motion to reconsider that vote, stating that he had voted through mistake; and Senator BUTLER, in expressing his amazement at the action taken, charged on the floor of the Senate that it was the result of a caucus—a Republican caucus, and that Mr. EDMUNDS and two or three others had retired; and it was then put through upon that kind of a vote. If there is in the RECORD any such statement as the gentleman from Missouri has referred to, I ask him to turn to it and read it. I believe the gentleman can not find anything in the RECORD to sustain him.

Mr. HATCH. When it was asked on the floor of the Senate what had produced this change, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] asked the question whether there had been a caucus on the question, nobody said there had been. It was not stated that there had been a caucus; and I have seen no evidence of it. No Senator admitted it. I do not know, and do not care, whether there was any caucus on the subject. If there was a caucus upon it, it showed that the gentlemen who entered that caucus had a conception of the danger of this outbreak and were ready to make necessary provision to meet it.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, let the gentleman read from the RECORD the statement on the subject which he said was included in the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I have not said that that of itself and alone produced this change.

Mr. MORGAN. But you have said it is in the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I say it is in the RECORD; that telegram is in the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. Then turn to it and read it.

Mr. HATCH. I have not time. Let the gentleman turn to it and read it. Nobody else doubts my statement.

Mr. MORGAN. I have never seen that telegram. Now, let me ask the gentleman another question. This appropriation is now increased from $100,000 to $500,000. I ask whether there is any limitation whatever upon the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture in the expenditure of this money, whether he may not pay the whole sum for one cow if he sees fit to do so?

Mr. HATCH. I say there is a restriction.

Mr. MORGAN. Where is it?

Mr. HATCH. The restriction is in the common sense, the common integrity, and the common honesty of officers of this administration. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. I say you have no right to make an appropriation which is protected by no other safeguard than that assumption.

Mr. MORRISON. I wish to ascertain whether I have correctly understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. If I understand the order of legislation at the other end of the Capitol (in the Senate), this amendment appropriating $500,000 for the purpose which the gentleman from Missouri has just explained was first made by the Senate, and afterwards that body passed the million-dollar bill with very different provisions from anything in this bill. Is that the order in which the action on this subject was taken?

Mr. HATCH. I am not prepared to state which measure passed first.

Mr. MORRISON. Well, I am prepared to say that the legislation occurred in the order I have just stated. Hence the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken in saying that there is any compromise about this, or that this is the adjustment of the matter. The Senate bill is still here, having been passed after this $500,000 appropriation was put into the present bill; and there has been no adjustment of this matter. Gentlemen of the Committee on Agriculture have gone on and passed the appropriation first made by the Senate without any adjustment with the friends of the other bill, which some of us claim is better than any provision in this bill. That other bill is still pending, and there has been no compromise about it.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] that so far as legislation or the hope of legislation is concerned, the gentleman knows as well as I do, and every gentleman in this House will understand, that the bill to which he has referred came in here yesterday or this morning, and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It has to be considered by the Committee on Agriculture and reported back to this House; and while no opportunity is given to committees having reports in their desks to report bills that were acted on a week or ten days ago, I want the gentleman to tell me how that report is ever going to get back here.

Mr. MORRISON. Just exactly as bills get into your possession—by a motion in the House and a vote of the House. You moved to suspend the rules and pass one bill. Can not that be done again with any other bill?

Mr. HATCH. I am not moving to suspend the rules. There is no motion now before the House to suspend the rules.

Mr. MORRISON. How did you get possession of this bill? Did you not suspend the rules and refer this or pass one bill which had already been referred?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir. This is the regular appropriation bill. It is privileged.

Mr. MORRISON. But you did so refer or pass one bill.

Mr. HATCH. The experimental station bill.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly; and that can be done again.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes.

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is not this bill.

Mr. HATCH. I am not going to be led off into a discussion of a bill not before the House and containing provisions which if presented to this House would evoke discussion which would last for days and weeks.

Mr. MORRISON. I had no desire to interfere with the gentleman; I merely wished to correct the gentleman's inaccuracy of statement.

Mr. HATCH. I say, so far as the conferees on the part of the Senate and House are concerned, this has been accepted as a compromise and settlement at this session on that question. I appeal to the House—I say to the friends of this industry throughout the length and breadth of this land, if you do not accept this provision to-night you will not get one dollar for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia between now and Friday at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope you will not.

Mr. HATCH. It is this or nothing. I believe it is as well guarded, I believe it is as efficacious, I believe it will accomplish the purpose every single friend of that legislation on this floor has at heart, and that is aiding the States in the extermination of this disease. It is a liberal appropriation. The Commissioner of Agriculture has discretion—he is bound to have it, and it would be utterly valueless without that discretion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would like to know if I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say if the bill he now reports is not adopted that the Committee on Agriculture will not ask the House to suspend the rules and pass what is known as the Miller pleuro-pneumonia bill which passed the Senate?

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I speak for myself, and I have no hesitation in saying to him candidly and frankly, as one member, and as the chairman of that committee, I will never ask the Speaker to recognize me to pass it under a suspension by a two-thirds vote, as I am satisfied we would not get 33⅓ per cent. of this House in favor of it. I am trying to do something that is practicable. I am trying to do something in the interest of this great industry. I do not intend to be led off after a will-o'-the-wisp into the swamps of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. I ask you to be accurate in your statement, that is all. The Senate first put this $500,000 appropriation in this bill and afterwards passed a better bill, appropriating $1,000,000, and provided for its efficient use.

Mr. HATCH. I am always accurate. I always try to be accurate in any statement I may make; and if it is shown to me any statement I have made is not entirely accurate, I will be the very first to correct it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What I wish to understand from the gentleman from Missouri is whether, as chairman of the House conferees and of the Committee on Agriculture, I understood him correctly to say, in reference to some measure for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia, this is all there is any chance of getting?

Mr. HATCH. I say to my friend from Kentucky it is all that is possible. That gentleman knows I have in my possession now a bill which passed this House by a majority of 200; that has been amended in the Senate, but having been recognized by the Speaker to pass a bill known as the agricultural experiment-station bill, I can not with any face go to him and ask him again to recognize me until he has recognized other gentlemen and other committees. I can not go to him and ask him to recognize me again for any like purpose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is not the question. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to say he would not ask the Speaker, or get the Committee on Agriculture to ask the Speaker——

Mr. HATCH. I do not speak for the Committee on Agriculture. When they authorize me I am ready to act. I am speaking for myself; and I say when that bill was presented to the Committee on Agriculture it was laid on the table, as we all know, and I have no idea in the world they will reverse that decision.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That does not answer my question. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, that we are driven to that position, that the friends of the bill for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia must take this or take nothing?

Mr. HATCH. I have said it as frankly and as clearly as I can that in my judgment it is the only possible measure of legislation that we can get at this session.

Mr. MILLS. Does the gentleman intend to have discussion on the report?

Mr. HATCH. I am now holding the floor for that purpose.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman to yield the floor to me.

Mr. HATCH. I have promised to yield two minutes to my colleague from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. MILLS rose.

Mr. HATCH. I will yield for two minutes to my colleague.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the Clerk first to read the amendment numbered 20. I ask my colleague to yield me five minutes, as the reading will take up at least two minutes and a half.

Mr. HATCH. What is it the gentleman wants done?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want the amendment struck out in regard to prohibiting discrimination in the pay of employés in the seed department.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I think the House will recollect the amendment to which I now refer. It was adopted here by an almost unanimous vote after a full discussion; and yet, Mr. Speaker, without one word of explanation on the part of either the committee or the Senate, this amendment, which proposed to regulate what I regard as an abuse in the administration of that Department, has been stricken from this bill. It was an amendment which removed one case of gross discrimination exercised in that Department that was known to the members of this House to exist; a case where people sitting side by side at the same desk, doing exactly the same kind of clerical work, were receiving a difference of pay amounting to about one hundred per cent.; and yet, I repeat, that amendment, made for the purpose and in the direction of breaking up the favoritism prevailing in the various Departments, is stricken from the bill without a word of explanation in either House, as though it was a mere trivial whim that was not intended to have any weight in legislation.

The gentleman in charge of this bill should know that the House had a determined meaning in incorporating that amendment to break up this favoritism prevailing in that Department.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, this amendment to which my colleague refers was acted upon by the Senate committee and by the Senate; and I can only state upon the information I have that it was stricken out at the instance and at the request of the Commissioner of Agriculture himself. He went before the committee and stated that no such discrimination existed in the Department.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I state here on the floor of this House, as a member of the House, that it does exist to my personal knowledge.

Mr. HATCH. Well, the gentleman ought to make his complaint to the Commissioner.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And he has now been publicly informed that it does exist, and we will see if he will permit it to continue.

Mr. HATCH. I yield now one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN], my colleague on the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee stated that the Committee on Agriculture had information of the fact of the spread of this disease, and had been able to trace back the disease to Chicago from a case which made its appearance in Boston, and that the information to that effect had come by a certain dispatch. Now, I call for the reading of that dispatch to show what it is, and I send it up to the Clerk's desk to be read. I ask the attention of the House while it is being read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DISEASED CATTLE ON SALE.

BOSTON, MASS., February 25.

It is stated that on January 26 last a lot of milch cows from Buffalo were received at Brighton and disposed of to purchasers in the city of Boston. One of the animals died in South Boston on February 15 with suspicious symptoms, and Dr. Lyman, of the Harvard University Veterinary School, upon investigating the case, found that the cow had died of contagious pleuro-pneumonia. Other authorities having been called in consultation confirmed Dr. Lyman's diagnosis, and the State cattle commissioners have been working diligently since then to recover traces of the herd. The commissioners have been successful in a number of cases, and while they admit that there is great danger that the disease has been spread, they believe that the measures adopted will prevent serious results. Most of the animals have been placed in quarantine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Now, I will state, Mr. Speaker, that while I was speaking rapidly, and in answer to the many questions propounded, I did not wish to be understood as saying that all I referred to as to this disease was embodied in that dispatch. All I stated was that there was a dispatch to that effect; and my information was that the disease had been traced back through Buffalo to Chicago.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, this whole business has been carried forward by excessive extravagance——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored in the fullest and fairest way to lay this matter before the House in all of its details. There is nothing in this report that any member of the Committee on Agriculture desires to keep from the House; and if there was time enough I would not hesitate one minute to throw the doors of this discussion wide open because the more it is discussed the stronger will be the report before the House. But the time allotted to this discussion must be necessarily brief. Other matters are pressing.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the gentleman to answer me one question which I have tried to get him to answer before: whether he favors the expenditure of money for the further experiments in manufacturing sugar by the diffusion process?

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. KING. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. There is no second.

Mr. KING. Then I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House to make a short statement which I think is due to the country and due to the House itself before the vote is taken on this report. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HATCH. I will withdraw my demand for the previous question and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, if that will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. KING. I wish to address myself to the Senate amendment looking to the expenditure of $75,000 for continuing the experiments in the manufacture of sugar by the process commonly known as diffusion; and I simply wish to call the attention of the House to some facts in connection with this matter which I think the House should be fully possessed of, and which should go to the country.

It is rare, sir, that I ever attempt to interfere with the progress of legislative business in this House by any word of mine. I have occupied but little time in discussing these measures before the House, contenting myself with casting my vote as my sense of right dictated.

[For the extension of Mr. KING'S remarks, see Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. I will only occupy half a minute in saying, in reply to the gentleman from Louisiana, that I stated on the floor of this House when I presented the bill at the last session appropriating $94,000 that in my judgment that was enough to complete these experiments; and I did oppose, and opposed till the last, the appropriation of $75,000, and finally got it reduced to $50,000. I accepted that as a compromise—as the very best we could do. I move the previous question.

Mr. KING. I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Objection was made.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HATCH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. The Chair asks the House to come to order, and gentlemen to cease conversation on the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. My question is this: When will it be in order to move to insist on the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a further conference? I am satisfied if that course is taken we can dispose of this to-night.

The SPEAKER. If this conference report is not agreed to by the House the whole subject will then be open to be disposed of by the proper motion.

Mr. MORGAN. If the conference report is not agreed to I will make that motion.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 79, not voting 92; as follows:

So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

During the roll-call the following occurred:

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement to correct a misapprehension.

Mr. KING. I understand the objection to my request for leave to extend my remarks has been withdrawn.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that it was not I who made the objection.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call can not be interrupted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Chair, in view of the confusion prevailing in the Hall, how it would do to call the names of the disorderly gentlemen and enter them on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is using every method in his power to preserve order. It seems difficult this evening, for some reason or other, to transact the business of the House in an orderly manner. The Chair requests gentlemen to preserve order. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement not to occupy more than half a minute.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent. The Chair thinks the regular order is the preservation of order on the floor.

After the completion of the roll-call,

Mr. HATCH asked unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

The names of members voting were read.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. WAIT on this vote.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. KELLEY on this vote.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. HARMER on this vote.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, for this evening session.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. MAHONEY, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH asked unanimous consent that members desiring to print remarks upon the bill might have leave to do so; but objection was made.

BRIDGE AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a message from the Senate, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 2, 1887.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill 3104, to authorize, the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the request will be complied with, and the Clerk will return the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

A bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10396) "making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 4, page 3, of the bill, the words "ten thousand five hundred dollars," and insert in lieu thereof "$11,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$377,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out from said amendment the words "Mahé (Seychelles);" and the Senate agree to the same.

PERRY BELMONT,
ROBERT R. HITT,
WM. R. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

The amendments non-concurred in reduce the salary of the interpreter to the legation to Turkey below the amount named in the House bill, which amount was made in accordance with existing law, and add to the consuls under class 6, Mahé (Seychelles), which was omitted from the House bill on the recommendation of the State Department as being unnecessary.

The amendments concurred in are as follows:

Twenty-four consuls now paid by fees are appropriated for by fixed salaries, amounting to $45,000. The fees collected by them last year amounted to $82,791, of which they retained under authority of law a sum larger than the salaries established.

An increase of $10,000 is made in the appropriation for clerks at consulates, so as to provide for thirteen additional clerks to be distributed in the discretion of the Department.

Appropriations amounting to $16,000 are made for the Haytien and Venezuelan commissions, which were not included in the House bill because the Committee on Foreign Affairs had been discharged from their consideration in that connection.

A secretary of legation and consul-general to Corea is provided at $1,500, and the consulate at Antwerp is transferred from Class IV to Class III. In all other respects the appropriations now reported from conference are precisely the same in amount as those provided for the current fiscal year.

PERRY BELMONT,
WILLIAM R. COX,
ROBERT R. HITT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly necessary to detain the House with a discussion of this bill. The House will have seen from the reading of the statement of the House conferees that they agree in the main to the amendments proposed by the Senate, the Senate having perfected the bill, which had been sent to them in a disgraceful condition, owing to the application of the rules. I now ask the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS M. E. WOODS.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a privileged question, and send to the desk a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the word "twelve" the word "twenty;" and that the House agree to the same.

W. H. NEECE,
JOHN A. SWOPE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
H. W. BLAIR,
JAMES F. WILSON,

Mr. CONGER. I move the adoption of this report, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. This report does not seem to be accompanied with any statement, as required by the rule. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] can make a verbal statement.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to that in this particular case, but I think we should not permit to grow up a practice of allowing conference reports to be presented without the accompanying statement which the rules require.

Mr. CONGER. This is the case of a very meritorious nurse. The bill as passed by the Senate provided for a pension at the rate of $25 per month, which the House amended by making it $12. After a very full conference we have decided to compromise on $20, all the conferees agreeing in this conclusion. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. JULIA DE QUINDRE.

Mr. MORRILL. I send to the desk a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

W. P. TAULBEE,
E. N. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
T. W. PALMER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I move the adoption of this report.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the reading of the explanatory statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that no statement accompanies the report.

Mr. MORRILL. I can make an oral statement of the case.

Mr. EDEN. That will do.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Kansas will be allowed to make an oral explanation in lieu of the written statement. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill, as passed by the Senate, proposed to allow this lady a pension of $25 a month. The House amended the bill so as to make the pension $12. The committee of conference, after investigation, are satisfied that the bill ought to become a law in the form originally passed by the Senate. The circumstances are simply these: This lady, who, at the commencement of the war, was a widow in good circumstances, living in Detroit, devoted three years, without any compensation whatever, to the nursing of sick and wounded soldiers. During that service she contracted a serious disability.

After the war, by one of those misfortunes which are liable to overtake any of us, she lost all her property. She then obtained a position in the Treasury Department; but the disability contracted during her service as nurse continued until, a few years ago, she was obliged on account of that disability to give up her position. She has been an invalid ever since. She was wealthy at the time she entered upon the duty of nurse. She expended during that service $3,000 of her own money, and she never received any compensation. The committee of conference are satisfied that she is entitled to a pension of $25 a month, as originally proposed in the Senate bill. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONROE, LA.

Mr. KING. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 175) for a public building at Monroe, La., and put the same on its passage.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object.

Mr. KING. I have moved to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. EDEN. I call for a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

The bill as amended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or otherwise procure, a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Monroe, in the State of Louisiana, a substantial and commodious public building for the use of the United States courts, post-office, and internal-revenue, land, and other Government offices: Provided, That no money appropriated for said building shall be expended until a valid title to the site selected (which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 50 feet, including streets and alleys) shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Louisiana shall have ceded jurisdiction over the same for all purposes, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, except for the enforcement of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein. The plans and estimates for said building shall first be prepared, examined, and approved as required by section 3734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the ultimate cost shall not exceed the sum of $75,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building, which sum is hereby appropriated for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us have a second on that.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. KING and Mr. SPRINGER.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 147, noes 10.

So there was a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. KING. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done if any gentleman desires to debate the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. KING. I reserve my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. In my time I ask to have the report of the committee read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred Senate bill 175, submit the following report:

Monroe, La., is the largest and most important town in the State of Louisiana north of the Red River, which divides the northern half of the State into nearly two equal divisions. It is situated on the Ouachita River, at the junction of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Pacific Railroad, being a large shipping port for both, and largely controls the commerce of the same, amounting annually to upwards of $11,000,000 by the river alone.

There is no public building there belonging to the General Government. The importance of having one for the use of the United States courts is attested by the following extracts from letters from the judge and chief clerk of the United States courts which sit there, the same being on file with your committee. In a letter from the judge of said court he says:

"The United States court sessions held at Monroe are the most important in the district; we try more cases there than we do at all of the other places in which we have court.

"The court is in session at Monroe about three months of the year, and is busily engaged during the whole time.

"I do not now remember the number of suits on the docket at Monroe, but I expect to be engaged there at the April term for six or eight weeks.

"Monroe is a rich and populous part of the district, and its proximity to that part of the Mississippi River which divides Mississippi from Louisiana will always induce most of the litigation in the United States courts for the western district of Louisiana to be disposed of at Monroe.

"The Government rents a large room for holding sessions of the court at Monroe, but provides nothing else in the way of accommodations for the officers of the court. The clerk has no office, and the papers filed in the court are at the mercy of all sorts of accidents. The marshal has no office; I do not know how he keeps or takes care of his papers."

In his letter on this subject the Chief Clerk says:

"I write to urge the necessity of an appropriation for the erection of a public building (United States court-house) at this place.

"The business in the United States courts here is constantly increasing, and, as a matter of fact, which can be substantiated by the court records, there are a larger number of cases on the docket at this place than at all the other points in the district combined.

"In the building (Masonic Hall) now rented by the Government for use as a court-house there are no rooms for use of the judge, officers of court, or the grand and petit juries. In fact, the marshal has been compelled to rent two rooms over a bar-room, two blocks distant from the court-house, for use of the juries.

"I am compelled for safety to keep the books and records of the court in my room at my boarding-house."

A petition signed by all the lawyers and leading citizens of Monroe and the country adjacent thereto substantially sets forth the above facts also, and asks for a public building at that place. The petition further shows that Monroe is a large mail-distributing point and has no suitable post-office, nor has it accommodations for the deputy internal-revenue or other agencies of the Government.

From these evidences it appears—

1. That the business of these courts is constantly increasing, and that there is a larger number of cases on the docket at Monroe than at all the other points in the district combined.

2. That there is no place of safety in which to keep the records and papers of said courts, in which are involved large amounts and important interests.

3. That the clerk is compelled for safety to keep the books and records of the court in his room at a boarding-house.

4. That the marshal has no apartments owned by the Government in which to convene his juries, but is compelled to rent a room for that purpose at a distance from the hall in which the court holds its sessions, and has to keep his papers and documents as best he can.

5. The United States courts hold sessions at Monroe twice a year, during which it sits about three months, and has a large and increasing business. It is expected, as stated by the judge, that it will be engaged there from six to eight weeks alone the coming April term.

It appears that Monroe is an old and substantial town, that it has a steadily growing population and influence, and is located in the heart of a district embracing a population amounting in number to about 180,000 people, who transact there all the business they have before the United States courts.

Your committee therefore report favorably upon the bill, and recommend its passage, with the following amendment: Strike out the words "one hundred thousand dollars," and insert the following:

"Seventy-five thousand dollars; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building."

Mr. SPRINGER (before the reading of the report was concluded.) I am willing the remaining portion of the report be inserted in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEELE. Is there a post-office there?

Mr. KING. Yes, a presidential office. I will not consume the valuable time of the House by a speech. I know great measures are pressing from behind and in front. I will only state that Monroe is the most important and flourishing city in central North Louisiana. It was once the capital of the State. This measure stands on its own merits. Its importance is shown by the report just read, which is correct. In 1879, in the Forty-sixth Congress, I got an act passed dividing the State of Louisiana into two judicial districts—the Eastern and Western—and the establishment of the United States courts at Monroe, for the relief of the people. This bill is for a public building there for the accommodation of these courts. They sit in Monroe from four to five months in the year, and transact more business, as is seen by the statement of the clerk, than at all the other points in the district put together. I have carried this bill eight years practically in my pocket, urging, waiting, and watching for the time to come to get it through; that moment has arrived; it is a matter of public interest; I call for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. If a gentleman desires to debate it further, the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The bill was passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes not counted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask for no further vote.

So the House refused to adjourn.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I rise to a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I have sent it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution for printing the regular number and 39,000 additional copies of the second annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, have considered the same, and after examination of the documents, submit the following report:

The estimated cost of printing and binding, the same as furnished by the Public Printer, is $19,994.30. This committee recommends the amendment of the resolution by inserting $19,994.30 in the blank space in line 1 of section 2 of said resolution, and striking out the word "dollars." The Public Printer estimates the approximate cost of amount of printing previously authorized by Congress within the present fiscal year at $191,959.43.

The committee recommend the passage of the resolution as so amended.

As amended, the resolution would read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed 39,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the second annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, 26,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 13,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $19,994.30, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the cost of the publication of said report, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I wish to state for the information of the House that the Committee on Printing has not been called for the consideration of its reports during the present session of Congress, and unless it is now permitted to have its reports considered there will be no printing authorized for either House or for the Departments during the present session.

I wish to say further that the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture, of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, of the Coast Survey, of Education, of Fish and Fisheries, of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia, of the Smithsonian Institution—none of these reports have been ordered for the use of either House. Therefore, I will move a suspension of the rules to consider these reports from the Committee on Printing, all of them. I ask this resolution be put on its passage immediately, and then I will move a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, &c., in certain cases, and for other purposes.

STATISTICS OF AMERICAN FISHERIES, ETC.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk as a substitute for Senate bill 2287, being a bill to secure statistics of and to protect the vessel fisheries of the United States, to provide for the taking of testimony relative to injuries inflicted by British authorities upon citizens of the United States engaged in the fisheries, and to amend the shipping act of June 19, 1886.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever the papers of any vessel of the United States of over 5 tons burden, engaged in the capture or transportation of any kind of cetacea, fish, shell-fish, crustacea, sponges, or any other products of the sea, rivers, or lakes, whether said vessel be enrolled or licensed for either the fisheries or the coasting trade, shall be surrendered or shall have expired, the owner or agent of said vessel shall furnish to the collector of customs for the district in which the papers are to be surrendered or renewed, or to his duly authorized representative, an accurate and detailed report of the quantities of fish, shell-fish, crustacea, sponges, oil, whalebone, ivory, skins, and other primary or secondary products of the fisheries taken or transported by the crew or crews of said vessel during the period that may have elapsed since the last issuance or renewal of the papers under which the vessel has been sailing, specifying therein the quantity of each of the different kinds of fish and other products, the locality where obtained, the quantity taken within three miles of the mainland or islands of the United States or of the mainland or islands belonging to other countries, and such other particulars as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury; and if at any time the vessel shall change ownership, the former owner or agent shall, prior to the transfer of said vessel to her new owner or owners, make out and deliver to the collector of customs at the former home port of the vessel a full and accurate report, as above described, for such portion of the year as may have elapsed between the issuance or renewal of the last papers and the date of sale, evidence from said collector of the receipt of the same being required by the collector in the district into which the vessel has been brought; and if any owner or agent of any vessel employed as above described shall fail to deliver such record to the proper collector of customs, or his duly authorized representative, covering the period beginning with the issuance or renewal of the last papers and ending with the date of proffered surrender of the papers or application for their renewal, which in no case shall exceed one year, or, in case of sale, prior to the transfer of the vessel to her new owners, said vessel shall be debarred from receiving a new license, any existing law or laws to the contrary notwithstanding, until such record or statement shall have been produced; and the owner or agent failing to conform to these requirements shall be liable to a penalty of $200, which may be collected and distributed in the same manner as are fines for the violation of the customs-revenue laws; and the form of such record or report shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and such records shall be returned within thirty days by the proper collectors of customs to the Secretary of the Treasury; and the pecuniary penalty herein described shall be subject to remission or mitigation by the Secretary of the Treasury if, upon investigation, he shall be satisfied that it was incurred without willful disregard of law; and any law or laws now in force and authorizing the issuance of documents to vessels shall remain inoperative in the case of vessels above described until such time as the owner or agent shall have complied with the requirements of this act.

SEC. 2. That the master of any vessel of the United States under permanent enrollment, employed in the whale, seal, or other fisheries, whenever landing all or any portion of his cargo within the limits of the United States, shall furnish to the collector of customs, or his duly authorized agent for the district in which all or any portion of said cargo may be landed, the same information and particulars as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury from the owners or agents of vessels licensed for the fisheries or the coasting trade and employed as above described; the figures to include the actual quantity of the various products landed which may have been obtained by the crew or crews of said vessel in their capacity as fishermen, and, in separate entry, the quantity of each of the various products obtained by the above-named crew or crews that may have been landed in foreign ports, or transferred to other vessels at sea for the purpose of being landed by them, during the period that may have elapsed since January 1, 1885, or, after one report shall have been made, since the last report covering the operations of said vessel was furnished; and he shall, further, furnish separate reports of all products secured by the crew or crews of other vessels, which may have been transferred to his vessel for the purpose of being landed by him, either in American or foreign ports, during the period above described, mentioning separately the information for each vessel, accompanied by the name and home port of said vessel; and if the master of any vessel sailing under permanent enrollment, and employed as above described, shall fail to deliver such record to the proper collector of customs, or his duly authorized representative, within twenty-four hours after the landing of the portion or portions of the cargo as above described, the papers of the vessel shall be forfeited, and it shall be the duty of said collector of customs to take possession of the same and to forbid the issuance of any others, any existing law or laws to the contrary notwithstanding, until such report shall have been furnished; and the master failing to comply with said requirements shall be liable to a penalty of $200, which may be collected and distributed in the same manner as are fines for the violation of the customs-revenue laws; and such record shall be returned within thirty days by the proper collector of customs to the Secretary of the Treasury; and the pecuniary penalty herein described shall be subject to remission or mitigation by the Secretary of the Treasury if, upon investigation, he shall be satisfied that it was incurred without willful disregard of law; and any law or laws now in force and authorizing the issuance of documents to vessels shall remain inoperative in the case of any of the aforesaid vessels until such time as the master shall have complied fully with the requirements of this act.

SEC. 3. That any vessel of foreign nationality, within the meaning of the term "vessel" as defined in section 3 of the Revised Statutes, found engaged in taking fish of any kind within 3 marine miles of any of the marine coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of the United States, or within sea, lake, or river waters of the United States, shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture, and to proceedings to enforce said forfeiture; and any person employed on or with such vessel found taking fish of any kind in such waters shall be liable to a fine of $50 for every such offense; and said penalty shall be a lien upon the vessel in connection with which such person is employed, to recover which penalty such vessel shall be subject to libel: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to affect any right or liberty granted by treaty or reciprocal agreement, or to affect any exclusive rights of a State to regulate fisheries within State jurisdiction: And provided further, That the penalities and forfeitures herein described may be remitted or mitigated by the Secretary of the Treasury, when incurred without willful disregard of law, under such regulations and modes of ascertaining the facts as may seem to him advisable.

SEC. 4. That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint a commissioner to proceed to such places in the United States or elsewhere as may be designated by the Secretary of State, to take testimony, under oath or affirmation, in relation to the losses and injuries inflicted since the 31st of December, 1885, by British authorities, imperial or colonial, upon citizens of the United States engaged in the fisheries on the northeast coasts of British North America. Said commissioner shall everywhere have, in respect to the administration of oaths or affirmations and the taking of testimony, the same powers as a commissioner of a circuit court, and shall be paid the same fees as are prescribed for similar services of a commissioner of a circuit court, together with traveling expenses.

SEC. 5. That section 11 of an act to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes, approved June 19, 1886, be amended by striking out of the sixth and seventh lines of the subproviso of said section the words "of the country in which such port is situated, or on the cargoes of such vessels," and substituting in lieu thereof the words "of such country, or on the cargoes of such vessels; but this proviso shall not be held to be inconsistent with the special regulation by foreign countries of duties and other charges on their vessels, and the cargoes thereof, engaged in their coasting trade, or with the existence between such countries and other states of reciprocal stipulations founded on special conditions and equivalents, and thus not within the treatment of American vessels under the most-favored-nation clause in treaties between the United States and such countries."

SEC. 6. That section 1 of the act mentioned in section 5 be amended, in the third line from the end of said section 1 by inserting after the words "shipping commissioners" the words "and clerks of steamboat inspectors, and such allowances for fees of United States marshals and witnesses for services under the steamboat-inspection laws, and for expenses of steamboat inspectors provided for by section 4461 of the Revised Statutes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Maine moves to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which has just been read. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask for a second.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to make a brief explanation. I wish to say with reference to this bill that the first two sections are a bill that has already passed the Senate unanimously and been reported unanimously by the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests of this House. They provide simply that masters of fishing vessels in surrendering their papers to collectors of customs shall also furnish statistics of the fish they have caught during the voyage, and the collector shall make a return of the same to the Secretary of the Treasury to be by him transmitted to the Fish Commissioner. This is very much desired by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Fish Commissioner. Those sections involve no expense.

The sections which have been added compose another bill, which has been reported unanimously by the committee on shipping and make two amendments to the shipping act of 1886, which are desired by the Secretary of the Treasury, and which were recommended, it will be remembered, in a communication sent to the House by the President of the United States at the last session. There was an accidental omission in the shipping act in the transfer of the fees of inspectors of steam vessels, and the President of the United States in his communication, and the Secretary of the Treasury, desired the omission should be corrected.

As regards the next section, the Secretary of State desired that the exception that was provided in section 11 of the shipping act of 1886 should be made a little clearer. I want to say with reference to these sections that they have all been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State, who will have to administer them. They are desired by those officers and are approved by them.

Another section added is what passed this House unanimously the other day but which has fallen out by virtue of the action of the House to-day with regard to the retaliation bill; the provision prohibiting fishing by foreign vessels within 3 miles of our coasts. This is also approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and has been unanimously approved by the House.

As regards the remaining section, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to state the effect of it, because it is a report from his committee.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand the bill includes the bill which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs authorizing the taking and perpetuating of testimony as to the damage received by American vessels by the action of the Canadian authorities.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to say, also, that that has been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State, and they have not only approved of it, but say it is of the utmost importance that this legislation should be enacted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the gentleman from Maine, what is the purpose of making a record of the number of fish caught? It entails a hardship on our fishermen.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will state the object. The Secretary of the Treasury asks that these statistics be obtained, and they are obtained in this manner without expense; and the fishermen themselves say they are willing to take the trouble for the purpose of having these statistics. The Secretary of State has also stated that if these facts had been known when the Halifax commission met in 1871 this Government would not have been obliged to pay five and a half million dollars.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. How many sections does the bill contain?

Mr. DINGLEY. Six.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understand there are six sections, and they are all very long.

Mr. DINGLEY. Only those relating to statistics.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to ask this question: Is this a very safe way to legislate in a hurry at a midnight session?

Mr. DINGLEY. The various sections of the bill have been approved by the committees of this House and this is the only chance of passing them. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State both say the bill is of the utmost importance. The President of the United States also has sent a communication to this House in regard to one of these sections, saying it ought to be passed at once.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire for one to protest against this kind of legislation in this kind of way. Here is a bill compounded of half a dozen different bills relating to different subjects. It might not inaptly be described as a conglomerate mass of heterogeneous incongruities.

Mr. DINGLEY. But all relating to the same subject.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The bill in the form in which it is now presented has never been laid upon our desks and we have had no opportunity of studying the effects of these various provisions.

Mr. DINGLEY. The various sections of this bill have been printed and have been on the desks of members for months.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They may have been printed in separate bills, but they have not been brought together as they are in this bill. And not one of these bills has ever been brought up for consideration in Committee of the Whole; and not one man in ten in this House to-night can vote intelligently on this bill without further explanation than we have had. It may be all right, but representing, as I do, a number of constituents vitally interested in these matters, I protest against being compelled to vote upon measures affecting their interests without having an opportunity to know more about them.

There is a provision here that every owner of a fishing vessel of five tons and over shall, on the surrender of his papers, make return to the collector of the port of the statistics of his trip, and if he fails to do so he is liable to a penalty.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How much?

A MEMBER. Two hundred dollars.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will please state how much. I could not preserve in my memory all the details of the bill as it was read, in the hubbub and confusion incident to this evening session, but I say the owner is liable to a penalty, and I do know that the bill will work a hardship upon the fishermen upon our own coast. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation ought not to pass in this hasty way, and I for one protest against it. The bill seems to me to have a strong local flavor, and that local flavor savors very much of the coast of Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish simply to say that this bill is in line with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Commissioner of Fisheries, who desire these returns, and upon consultation with fishermen in various parts of the country they regard these statistics as of the utmost value. I wish to say further that this bill has been reported and printed in two or three parts, and has been before members in that form for more than a month, and that the Committee on Shipping have been seeking an opportunity to bring the subject before the House in the regular way, but have not been called; that this is the first and only opportunity they have had; and the choice is now between doing nothing in reference to a matter which the officials of the Government pronounce to be so important, or doing what the Senate has agreed to unanimously, what the Shipping Committee have recommended unanimously, what the Secretary of State desires, and what the Secretary of the Treasury desires.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is there any provision in this bill that has not been favorably reported by some committee of this House?

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all. They have been unanimously reported.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When?

Mr. DINGLEY. Within the past month.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But within the past two weeks has not this House reversed the action of committee after committee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman a further question for information. This bill consists, as I understand, of a section which has been passed by the Senate unanimously——

Mr. DINGLEY. Two sections.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The bill consists, then, of two sections which have been passed by the Senate unanimously, and then of provisions framed for the purpose of curing defects pointed out by the President in his message as existing in the bills passed nearly a year ago.

And then it contains a section of the bill passed the other day by the House, but which was lost by the House receding from its amendments on that very bad vote which the gentleman helped to swell this morning; and lastly, it contains a section reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations pointing out the means by which testimony can be preserved as to the outrages committed upon our fishermen by Canada.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then this bill is composed of parts of three bills.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And nobody has had an opportunity to examine them and see how they agree with each other.

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has had an opportunity to do that, and he says they do agree.

Mr. DINGLEY. They have all passed under the supervision of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I know; but that is not a good way to prepare legislation.

Mr. FELTON. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa how many bills do we pass here day after day merely upon the reports of committees?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Entirely too many, I will say to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LORE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] what interest would suffer if this bill should not pass?

Mr. DINGLEY. In the first place there are no provisions of law prohibiting fishing by foreign vessels within the three marine miles of our coast.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman permit me to ask what reply he makes to the question of my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] as to the effect of this bill upon the fishing interests on our coast, where we have no deep-sea fishing?

Mr. DINGLEY. So far as I know, they are all in favor of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But how far do you know? I undertake to say that the gentleman has not heard from a single fisherman on our coast.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to suspend the rules and pass the bill in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have not occupied my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that no other gentlemen desired to address the House, and was about to put the question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] desires any time, I shall be glad to yield it to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama arose to ask unanimous consent. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 73, noes 71.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received advantage from the United States.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the House (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson, State of Missouri.

It further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I send to the desk a privileged report, the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill. As almost every member of the House is interested in this bill, I ask that there may be order during the reading so that members who desire to give attention to the interests of their constituents may be enabled to do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 9, 19, 20, 23, 33, 34, 38, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 56, 61, 67, 69, 151, 156, 164, 166, 168, 173, 182, 184, 186, 187, 191, 192, 196, 204, 209, 211, 214, 217, 223, 224, 233, 252, and 258.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 22, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 36, 37, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 53, 62, 63, 65, 66, 71, 73, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 152, 153, 155, 157, 159, 160, 163, 165, 167, 174, 175 176, 177, 178, 181, 183, 185, 188, 190, 195, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 210, 213, 216, 222, 225, 226, 227, 228, 231, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 253, 259, 261, and 262, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "dollars" where it first occurs in said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15; and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the word "commencement" in lieu of the word "erection" in said amendment, and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "roof," in said amendment, insert the words "and for painting;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the word "commencing" in lieu of the word "completing" in said amendment; and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55; and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert:

"For post-office, custom-house, and court-house at Wilmington, N. C.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $50,000.

"For court-house and post-office at Jefferson, Tex.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.

"For post-office at Houston, Tex.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.

"For public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.: For completion of the building, $62,148.

"For court-house and post-office at Augusta, Ga.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $50,000.

"For court-house and post-office at Chattanooga, Tenn.: For continuation of the building, $50,000.

"For heating apparatus to be furnished before June 30, 1888, for the following new public buildings, namely:

"At Aberdeen, Miss.; Augusta, Me.; Clarksburg, W. Va.; Columbus, Ohio; Concord, N. H.; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Dallas, Tex.; Erie, Pa.; Hannibal, Mo.; Jefferson City, Mo.; Leavenworth, Kans.; Lynchburg, Va.; Macon, Ga.; New Albany, Ind.; Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Quincy, Ill.; Shreveport, La.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Toledo, Ohio; Tyler, Tex.; and Waco, Tex., $190,000.

"Contracts shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury for furnishing and putting in heating apparatus for public buildings upon advertisements in some leading newspaper in the State where each building is situated, containing specifications of the kind of heating apparatus required; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidder therefor.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for the fiscal year 1887, and for each fiscal year thereafter, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons employed outside of the District of Columbia as superintendents, clerks, watchmen, and otherwise, and paid from appropriations for the construction of public buildings, showing where said persons are employed, in what capacity, the length of time and at what rate of compensation; and hereafter, where public buildings shall be completed with the exception of heating apparatus and approaches, but one person shall be employed by the Government for the supervision and care of such buildings."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The same to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three persons familiar with the cost of building and the value of ground in the city of Washington, who shall appraise as to its value for the use of the Government the land and buildings thereon, being lots numbered 11 and 12 of subdivision of square numbered 689 of the original plat of land in the city of Washington, bounded north by South B street, east by New Jersey avenue, and west by South Capitol street, and he is hereby directed to report the result of such appraisement to Congress at its next session and whether in his judgment at such appraised value the same can be used economically and for what purpose, provided nothing herein contained shall in any way commit the United States to the purchase of such property."

And that the Senate agre to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter to be inserted insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to make examination respecting the needs of the Government for a marine hospital at or near the vicinity of New York city, and, in case such hospital is required, to submit a plan for the same and estimate of the cost thereof, said hospital to be erected on property now belonging to the United States, if such property can be found suitable for the purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: After the word "light-house," in said amendment, insert the following:

"At Cape Meares, Tillainook Bay, Oregon, at Cape Lookout, Oregon, if in the opinion of the Light-House Board that site is more advantageous to mariners."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 6, in line 24 of the bill, strike out "ninety" and insert "eighty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$325,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8, line 23 of the bill, after the word "Louisiana," insert "at Chico Pass and to make navigable channel along Grand Lake, Louisiana;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000," and after the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Lighting the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor: For building four engines and boilers, $10,000; incandescent light plant, $2,500; dynamos, lamps, and lens for torch, $4,000; removing present machinery to new building, additional houses for said lamps, putting grounds in order, fencing and incidentals, $3,000;" in all, $19,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 75 to 145, inclusive, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For triangulation, topography, and hydrography of the coast of Maine in Cobscook Bay and Saint Croix River, and for off-shore soundings between Matinicus and Seguin Lights, $10,000.

"For resurveys, for triangulation, topography, and hydrography in the vicinity of the east end of Long Island, Block Island, Nantucket, Nantucket Shoals and approaches, including Vineyard Sound, $15,000."

For physical hydrographic surveys on Monomoy Shoals, $4,000.

For physical hydrography in New York Harbor and its approaches, $3,000.

For observing the movement, lodgment of, and obstructions by ice in the Delaware River, and noting the changes caused thereby in Cherry Island Flats, $200.

For examinations and resurveys on the Virginia coast from Chincoteague to Cherrystone, and especially at Cape Charles and in its vicinity, including triangulation, hydrography, and topography, $5,000.

To continue the surveys in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., and up the Cooper and Ashley Rivers to the head of navigation; and to continue the astronomical, latitude, and azimuth work, and, in connection therewith, the recovery and remarking of old triangulation stations, for their preservation, and the connection of some detached triangulation between Beaufort and the mouth of the Cape Fear River, North Carolina; and the connection of the Cape Fear River triangulation with the coast triangulation at Masonsborough, $2,000.

To continue the primary triangulation from Atlanta toward Mobile, $3,000.

For continuing the survey of the western coast of Florida from Cape Sable north to Cape Romano, and for hydrography off the same coast, $6,500.

For continuing the survey of the coast of Louisiana west of the Mississippi Delta and between Barataria Bay and Sabine Pass, $7,000.

To make off-shore soundings along the Atlantic coast and current and temperature observations in the Gulf Stream, $8,000.

For continuing the topographical survey of the coast of Southern California, $10,000.

For continuing the primary triangulation of Southern California, and for connecting the same at Mount Conness and Macho stations with the transcontinental arc, and for a primary base line in the vicinity of Los Angeles, $6,000.

For continuing the survey of San Francisco Bay and of San Pablo and Suisun Bays and the Strait of Carquinez, the examination of San Francisco Bar and entrance, and the mouths of Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, $5,000.

For continuing the survey of the coast of Oregon, including off-shore hydrography, and to continue the survey of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Willamette toward the Cascades, triangulation, topography, and hydrography, $7,000.

For continuing the survey of the coast of Washington Territory, $9,000.

For continuing explorations in the waters of Alaska, and making hydrographic surveys in the same, and for the establishment of astronomical longitude and magnetic stations between Sitka and the southern end of the Territory, $10,000.

For continuing the researches in physical hydrography relating to harbors and bars, including computations and plottings, $3,000.

For examination into reported dangers on the eastern, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, $1,000.

"To continue the compilation of the Coast Pilot, and to make special hydrographic examinations for the same, $2,500.

"For traveling expenses of officers and men of the Navy on duty, and for any special surveys that may be required by the Light-House Board or other proper authority, and contingent expenses incident thereto, $3,000.

"For objects not hereinbefore named that may be deemed urgent, $3,000.

"And 10 per cent. of the foregoing amounts shall be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named; in all, for party expenses, $160,700.

"For repairs and maintenance of vessels: For repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels used in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 169, 170, and 171, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"That as soon as practicable after the completion as provided for in the sundry civil act approved August 4, 1886, and not later than December 1, 1888, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be removed to the Pension Bureau, the General Land Office, the Bureau of Education, the Office of the Commissioner of Railroads, and the Bureau of Labor, and vacate the buildings rented for and now occupied by said offices and bureaus, or portions thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Heuse recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert:

"BUILDING FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

"That the Library commission is hereby empowered to make leases and collect rents for such houses on the Library site as in its judgment may remain temporarily without obstructing the work; the proceeds from such rents to be paid into the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter proposed to be inserted the following:

"For purchase of horse, $200, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 198, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the matter proposed to be inserted the following:

"The same to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 230, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the first line of said amendment substitute the word "at" for the word "in," and strike out the word "cemetery;" and in lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 245 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "open" in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the words "opened by the judge;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 246 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"And no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made or other fees in any prosecution under the internal-revenue laws unless the prosecution has been approved either before or after such arrest by the attorney of the United States for the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed or the prosecution is by indictment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 19, page 61 of the bill, strike out "twelve" and insert "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 14, page 62 of the bill, after the word "department," insert the words "including the Civil Service Commission;" and the Senate agree to the same.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
W. H. FORNEY,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAMES B. BECK,

The following statement by the managers on the part of the House was read:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, submit the following in explanation of the accompanying conference report:

The Senate made 262 amendments, increasing the aggregate sum appropriated $4,038,647.74 over the amount of the bill as it passed the House. Of this sum the Senate conferees have yielded $1,693,216.75.

The bill as it passed the Senate aggregated $23,792,059.71; the House, when it considered the Senate amendments, added to the bill $195,648. In the conference $12,000 of this sum was yielded, being for a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio, and $100,000 was added on account of public buildings at Augusta, Ga., and Chattanooga, Tenn.

The bill, therefore, as it is agreed upon by the conference committee, aggregates $22,382,490.96, being $2,629,078.99 in excess of the bill as it passed the House, and $279,819.62 less than the law for the current year, and $9,158,371.11 less than the estimates which were submitted to Congress.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
WM. H. FORNEY,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question, but will hold it in abeyance with a view to answering any questions which any member may desire to put to me.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered, there will still be thirty minutes allowed for debate. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve my fifteen minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the bill and amendments. I also ask that the bill and amendments be printed.

Mr. BUCK. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the Senate amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 175) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 3330) for the erection of a national memorial bridge over the Potomac River from Washington to Arlington; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the amendments.

Mr. BUCK. I desire to object to the request for unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments unless it be understood on the part of the House, and be so stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that this action is to be considered as only formal, and not expressing the sentiment of the House on those amendments.

Mr. HERBERT. Of course the object is merely to get the bill into conference.

Mr. BUCK. There are amendments which involve an amount of $21,000,000 in addition to the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am not willing that the House should take action on such important amendments without its being understood that the con-concurrence in them is merely a formal matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. Perhaps it may be agreed to strike them out.

Mr. REED. Let the gentleman in charge of the bill speak for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Maine is not in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does that include the printing of the bill with the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. That is embraced in the request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. HERBERT, Mr. SAYERS, and Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

MAIL MESSENGERS.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

THOMAS B. WARD,
J. M. RIGGS,
J. B. WAKEFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

O. D. CONGER,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
E. K. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement accompanying the report of the conferees on bill H. R. 8346.

Mr. WARD, on the part of the House conferees on the bill (H. R. 8346) "Authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service," submits the following statement explanatory of the report of the joint conferees, herewith submitted for adoption by the House. The sole effect of the action of the conferees is to leave said bill as it originally passed the House.

THOS. B. WARD,
On the part of the House conferees.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARKSDALE. I rise to ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of such bills and joint resolutions and concurrent resolutions——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman rose to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BARKSDALE. That is my purpose.

The SPEAKER. But this is a resolution to suspend the rules.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Oh! I shall not consent to that. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The Clerk again read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of such bills and joint resolutions and concurrent resolutions reported from the Committee on Printing, as may be indicated by said committee, and pass the same.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his objection. If there be no further objection the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, as the Chair understood from the reading, suspends the rules and passes the bills and joint or concurrent resolutions to which it refers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; there is nothing passed by the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair misunderstood the reading owing to the disorder in the Hall.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is it necessary to read the list now, or may they be filed with the Clerk?

The SPEAKER. There is no list at all. The effect of the resolution is to permit the Committee on Printing to present any bills or joint or concurrent resolutions that they see proper, whether one or many.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is a list.

The SPEAKER. There is no list. The resolution, on the contrary, provides that the House shall consider such bills, or joint or concurrent resolutions as the Committee on Printing may present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is intended to cover the measures in the list.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what it is intended to cover. It covers nothing unless the committee present measures for the action of the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask unanimous consent now to take up these reports from the Committee on Printing, read them by title, and put them on their passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; we want to hear the reports read.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, in order to a better understanding of this matter, I move to reconsider the order just adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope that will not be done. It is as simple as it can be. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE], representing his committee, has now authority to report the titles of the matters that he desires to have acted on.

Mr. LONG. All I want to know is what the list contains.

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is in the hands of the Clerk.

Mr. WILLIS. A motion to reconsider is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is in order. The resolution does not indicate what printing is to be done. Unanimous consent was given simply to adopt the resolution that has been read.

Mr. LONG. Let the gentleman [Mr. BARKSDALE] indicate the measures that he desires to have considered.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I have already sent up the titles of the bills and resolutions that I ask to have put upon their passage.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks that each be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, understanding that the list is limited to the one on the Speaker's desk, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that the titles be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 198) to provide for the distribution of the Statutes of the United States and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to designated incorporated bodies, institutions, and associations within the several States and Territories.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; estimated cost, $1,300.

Miscellaneous Document 102, concurrent resolution to print the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. Estimated cost, $9,058.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to provide for printing the fourth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1887.

The SPEAKER (interrupting the reading). As the Chair understands, the gentlemen from Mississippi does not desire to have read now anything more than the titles of these resolutions.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 243) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

Concurrent resolution for the printing of Captain Healey's report upon cruise of steamer Corwin in Arctic for 1884 and 1885.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 257) to print a revised edition of the report of the Agricultural Department on insects affecting the orange culture.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) to provide for the printing of 4,500 copies of Finley's storm-track charts of the North Atlantic Ocean.

House concurrent resolution providing that 15,000 additional copies of the report on internal commerce by William Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, being part 2 of Commerce and Navigation, be printed.

Joint resolution (S. R. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed.

Concurrent resolution to print copies of a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Concurrent resolution to print the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of precious metals in the United States.

Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1885 and 1886.

Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1886.

Senate concurrent resolution to print 2,000 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show held in Philadelphia.

Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of Lieut. Henry D. Allen of his explorations in Alaska and to print 35,000 additional copies thereof.

Joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 266) authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1885 and 1886.

Senate concurrent resolution to print indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees provided for in public resolution 24 of the first session, Forty-ninth Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Education.

Senate concurrent resolution to print 4,000 additional copies of Wharton's Digest of International Law.

The bill (S. 3296) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered upon the late John A. Logan.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask to amend the resolution which relates to the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The Clerk read as follows:

That joint resolution (H. Res. 238) be amended by inserting:

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the printing of said report."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. The first title which was read is out of the usual order; it does not refer to the subject of printing, but to the mode of distribution. I hope that first title will be read again.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] whether the proposition is to pass all these measures in gross and at one time?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, because we ought to see these things in the RECORD and know more about them before we act upon them. There are in this list some propositions for printing which ought to be adopted, and some which ought not. The House ought to have a chance to examine them.

Mr. BARKSDALE. If the gentleman will indicate the matters which he thinks ought not to be printed, we can reserve those for separate consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, would not this proposition be the first business in order?

The SPEAKER. It would, unless some conference reports or some other privileged matters should come in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have the first title read again.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman has the right to call for the reading of each one of these resolutions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether these are the ordinary reports of the Departments which are usually published during the session?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKSDALE. They are.

A MEMBER. Some are not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to reconsider——

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] has indicated a willingness, as I understand, to let this matter go over and be acted on to-morrow.

Mr. BARKSDALE. No. If any gentleman will indicate a resolution or bill to which he has objection, then, in order to have this important business dispatched to-night, I will——

Mr. MCMILLIN. We can not have the list before us. We are acting blindly. I think it is important to have part of the printing done, but there is a part that ought not to be done, and will not be done if the House acts on the subject deliberately.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has not the House adopted this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It has not, and does not purport to be. It merely provides for the consideration of such as are reported by the committee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to reconsider the order.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will each member have the right to the reading of any resolution or bill asked to be passed?

The SPEAKER. They will.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I have no objection, if it is not the purpose of the gentleman to pass them in gross.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will consent to the reading of the report on any resolution or bill, if called for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read again that part of the resolution, so gentlemen may see what the fact of it is. The resolution discharges the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of joint resolutions and bills reported by the said committee, and passes the same.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is adopted.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The resolution does it.

The SPEAKER. Nothing is indicated. The House can not pass resolutions without knowing what they are.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolutions and bills which have been read.

The SPEAKER. The House agreed to the resolution. The rules were not suspended, because the Chair announced if the gentleman desired to suspend the rules the Chair must proceed in regular order to recognize gentlemen for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is it not in order for the gentleman to make the motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman can get the floor for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has not the gentleman the floor for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] to suspend the rules, and pending that the Chair recognized the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] for this purpose.

Mr. BARKSDALE. May I be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That will not do.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Will this resolution be the pending question in the morning when the House meets, if the motion to take a recess is carried?

The SPEAKER. Unless it be displaced by some privileged report it will be the first thing in order.

Mr. MORGAN. And will then resume its present status?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOWDEN. My point of order is that there is so much confusion in front of the Speaker it is absolutely impossible to know what is being done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again appeal to gentlemen to resume their seats and to preserve order upon the floor.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MORRISON for a recess, the House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 77.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 74.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I wish to make an explanation.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I believe I have been recognized.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I understood the Speaker had recognized the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did; but pending that the gentleman from Mississippi rose and asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of these matters relating to printing. That consent was given; and the gentleman from North Carolina will be entitled to the floor when this matter is disposed of.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I wish to state for the information of the members of the House that if any of them will ask for the reading of a report pending the consideration of any one of these resolutions, I will cheerfully accede to the request. I do not want to force upon the members any measure they are unwilling to pass, or to ask the House to adopt any proposition to which it may object.

Mr. WILLIS. Is the gentleman willing to have the titles of these resolutions read, and if one objection is made to have the resolution passed over?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I withdraw my motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the resolutions.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be understood—— [Cries of "Regular order."]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I do not want any misunderstanding of this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's statement will not admit of any misunderstanding.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading now of the first resolution indicated on that list.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will pass over that to save time, as I know there is objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States.

Mr. BARKSDALE. That is what is usually called the Blue Book.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the title of the next resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STORM and others objected.

The SPEAKER. That will be laid aside.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I want to make a statement in behalf of the Committee on Printing—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous document 102, concurrent resolution to print the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Why?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall object to this method of proceeding; and shall object to every one of these resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the Clerk will read the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to provide for printing the fourth annual report of the bureau of animal industry for the year 1887.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I would be glad to have the gentleman state some reason.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. For the same reason stated before.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. By what authority does one objection made by a member defeat the consideration of these resolutions?

The SPEAKER. That was the agreement.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not consent to any such agreement. I heard no such proposition submitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi stated it himself.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I did not intend to consent to such an agreement as that. I intended to be understood that whenever a report was called for I would consent that it should be read. In the confusion I misunderstood the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS]. I intended to say that I would consent to the reading of the report accompanying any bill or resolution which might be called for.

Mr. BAYNE. I claim the floor on my point of order. I heard no such proposition submitted to the House. If I had heard it I should save objected to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read from the Reporter's notes the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] in response to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who had moved to reconsider the order. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi the gentleman from Tennessee withdrew his motion to reconsider.

Mr. BAYNE. But the Chair did not submit the proposition to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi who had control of the matter made the statement himself, and upon that the gentleman from Tennessee withdrew his motion to reconsider.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not hear the statement.

The SPEAKER. What occurred will be read from the Reporter's notes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILLIS. Is the gentleman willing to have the titles of these resolutions read, and if one objection is made to have the resolution passed over?
Mr. BARKSDALE. Certainly, sir.
Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I withdraw my objection to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the resolution provides for the consideration of such resolutions as may be indicated by the Committee on Printing. Thereupon the chairman of the committee announced, as has just been read, that if an objection was made to any resolution it would not be insisted on; which was equivalent to saying that it would not be indicated for consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I can settle this difficulty. I objected to the printing of the report of the board of health in good faith. I do not think the Federal Government should pay for the printing of that report. If paid for by the Government it should be paid in part by the Government and in part by the District of Columbia. But sooner than have other reports interfered with that ought to be published, I withdraw the objection to this resolution and allow the House to vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] withdraw his objection to the resolutions, the titles of which have been read?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Will the House be entitled to vote separately on these propositions?

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman desires a separate vote on any resolution he can have it read. The resolutions will be considered in the usual way except by consent.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I desire to have a vote on the first proposition.

The SPEAKER. That was passed over and was not read.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. As I understood it was read and objected to and the objection was then withdrawn. Perhaps it was the second on the list.

The Clerk continued to read the titles of the various resolutions, as follows:

Miscellaneous document. Concurrent resolution for printing additional copies of the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs touching our fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYNE. The Chair, I understand, has decided that any member can demand the reading of any proposition

The SPEAKER. He can.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not object to that. But I presume no member can defeat the passage of any particular proposition under the resolution submitted by the committee by a single objection.

The SPEAKER. That is what the gentleman from Mississippi stated, according to what the Chair a few moments ago caused to be read from the reporter's notes.

Mr. BAYNE. But the Chair has never submitted that to the House; and I, as a member, do not feel bound by that consent, even if given by the chairman of the Committee on Printing. He can not speak in that respect for the committee, and I do not feel bound by his giving his consent.

Mr. BARKSDALE. To what consent does the gentleman allude?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that the resolution provides only for the consideration of such joint and concurrent resolutions as may be indicated by the Committee on Printing; and the chairman of the Committee on Printing makes a statement equivalent to saying that he will not indicate any one to which objection is made.

Mr. LONG. The objection is not to the passage of the measure but to the consideration.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; to the consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCOTT. It is that if the Chair has decided the question further debate is not in order. I submit further, if gentlemen on this floor take issue with the Chair whether they should not take an appeal from his decision?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. The resolution on which I wanted to vote is the one for printing 2,500 copies of the health officer's report.

The SPEAKER. That opportunity will be given when the Clerk has read what are objected to.

The Clerk continued to read the titles of the resolutions, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. After the Clerk has finished the reading of the list, when the House knows what are the resolutions to be considered, the votes will be taken.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 243) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

Miscellaneous document, concurrent resolution for the printing of Captain Healey's report upon the cruise of the steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean for 1884 and 1885.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that covered by private enterprise?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No, sir; this is the manuscript now for the first time sent to the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the estimated cost of the printing of that resolution?

Mr. BARKSDALE. The estimated cost is $437.10.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 257) to print a revised edition of the Report of the Agricultural Department on Insects Affecting the Orange Culture.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of 4,500 copies of Finley's storm-track chart of the North Atlantic.

House concurrent resolution providing that 15,000 additional copies of the report on internal commerce by William M. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, being part 2 of Commerce and Navigation, be printed. Estimated cost, $8,384.30.

Senate resolution No. 94, joint resolution ordering the printing of the annual report of the National Academy of Science, with accompanying memoirs. Estimated cost for 1,900 copies, $113.50.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object. Let that go over, and I will look at it in the mean time.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Well, let it go over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution: That there be printed, to correct an error in public resolution No. 28, 2,000 additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show in Philadelphia. Estimated cost, $3,160.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to that.

Mr. HATCH. I object to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate resolution 88, joint resolution authorizing the printing of 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia. Estimated cost, $1,300.

Senate concurrent resolution to print report of Lieut. Henry T. Allen of his explorations in Alaska, and to print 35,000 additional copies thereof. Estimated cost, $3,790.45.

Senate concurrent resolution to print the indexes to the compilation of reports of House and Senate committees provided for in public resolution No. 24, first session Forty-ninth Congress. Estimated cost, $5,913.

The SPEAKER. These seem to be all.

Mr. RANDALL. Now let us have a vote on them seriatim.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a separate vote on the joint resolution providing for the printing of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit that all the matters have not been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquired of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BARKSDALE] and understood him to state that these were all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are others.

Mr. FARQUHAR. They have not all been read. There are others on the desk that were not upon that list.

The SPEAKER. If they were not upon this list of course they have not been read. The Clerk will read the others.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate bill 3296, to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan.

Concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of Wharton's Digest of International Law, 4,000 additional copies.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that had better go over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I trust not. That is a very important work, one of the most important on the list.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the Public Printer to deliver to the Commissioner of Education 1,000 copies of report on education in Alaska printed in compliance with the concurrent resolution of August 2, 1886, the distribution of which was not therein directed.

Concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees provided in public resolution 24, first session Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. McMILLIN. That I object to because it does not show what is to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, it does.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not see that it does.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me explain that this relates simply to the mere mechanical matter of printing the indexes. A law was passed at the last session covering all that work, so that the objection does not hold. There was simply a clerical omission in the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 266, joint resolution authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner on Education for 1885 and 1886.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to know how many copies are authorized by this. I object for the present.

The Clerk continued the reading:

Joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents.

Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report of Lieut. Henry D. Allen.

Mr. McADOO. I would like to have the report of the committee read in connection with that.

The SPEAKER. That can be called for when the House comes to act on this matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will object to that for the present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That has already been passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been read before and not objected to.

Mr. McMILLIN. My only object was to see what it was.

The Clerk continued the reading:

Senate concurrent resolution that there be printed, to correct error in public resolution 28, approved August 4, 1886, 2,000 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show at Philadelphia.

Mr. BARKSDALE and others. That is objected to.

The Clerk continued the reading:

Senate concurrent resolution providing that the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for 1886 be printed.

Senate concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1885 and 1886.

House concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1886.

Senate concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the usual number of copies of a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the cost of that?

The CLERK (reading). Estimated cost $918.10.

Joint resolution (S. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed.

Joint resolution (H. R. 258) providing for the printing of 4,500 copies of Finley's storm track charts of the North Atlantic Ocean.

The SPEAKER. Now, if gentlemen will indicate upon which of these propositions they desire a separate vote, the Chair will cause them to be selected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the consideration of the resolution providing for printing Wharton's Digest of International Law. I do not think that work ought to be published by the Government; but in deference to the wishes of gentlemen around me I will not insist on the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the objection to the resolution providing for printing Wharton's Digest of International Law. Is there further objection? If not, that is one of the matters to be considered.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move the adoption of the resolutions the titles of which have been read.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I renew the objection to the resolution providing for printing Wharton's Digest of International Law.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the objection is too late. The Chair asked for objection, and there was none.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdrew my absolute objection to printing the report of the health officer of this District so that the House might vote on that matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman demands a separate vote on that. The Chair is endeavoring to ascertain whether separate votes are demanded on any other proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is understood that the motion now submitted does not embrace the first title which was read.

The SPEAKER. It does not. That was passed over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have that read, if it is to be voted on.

The SPEAKER. It is not. As the Chair understands, it was passed over. If there be no further separate vote demanded, the Chair will put the question upon all these resolutions except the one to print the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Before that question is put, I desire to submit an amendment to the resolution for printing the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture. I ask that it be read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of these matters whether these resolutions authorize the printing of the usual number of the reports which are to be printed?

Mr. BARKSDALE. They do in every instance; and all are accompanied by estimates as to their cost.

The question being put upon agreeing to the several resolutions and passing the several joint resolutions, except the resolution for printing the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, they were respectively adopted or passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the resolution providing for the printing of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized to print 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate, 350 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,050 for the use of the said health officer of the District.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as this seems to be of mere local interest I will move to amend by adding the words "one-half of which shall be paid out of the funds of the District of Columbia."

Mr. RANDALL. That will not take it out.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me say in behalf of the Printing Committee that this report has been printed for the last fourteen years. It is the only exchangeable report that this country sends to Europe. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was disagreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the joint resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 32.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MORRISON. I will also withdraw the motion to adjourn.

So the resolution was passed

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TUCKER. I have a conference to submit.

The SPEAKER. That is in order, even pending a motion to adjourn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for bringing suits against the Government of the United States——

A MEMBER. Where is the bill?

Mr. TUCKER. The bill is in the Senate. The report ought to be made here, as the bill passed the House and the Senate amended it.

Mr. RANDALL. It depends on which House asks for the conference.

Mr. TUCKER. The Senate did. I submit the report, and ask that it be laid upon the table for the present.

Mr. MORRISON. I insist on my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; there were—ayes 70, noes 33.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 3, 1887.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal of the preceding day will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, March 2.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the reading is dispensed with.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. STANFORD presented the credentials of GEORGE HEARST, chosen by the Legislature of California a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution adopted by John F. Reynolds Post, No. 6, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of the Potomac, disapproving the action of the President in vetoing the dependent pension bill, and asking its passage notwithstanding the veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 73 citizens of Ohio, praying that the citizens of the District of Columbia may be permitted to vote on local option; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VAN WYCK presented petitions and resolutions from posts of the Grand Army of the Republic in Nebraska, praying the passage of the invalid and dependent pension bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota favoring an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of making a scientific survey for a canal connecting Lake Superior with the Saint Croix River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3356) to regulate the compensation of watchmen in the Executive Departments of the Government, reported it without amendment.

NEW SENATE MANUAL.

Mr. FRYE. At the suggestion of the Committee on Printing, finding some difficulty about a former resolution, I present this resolution:

Resolved, That there be prepared, under the direction of the Committee on Rules, a revision of the Senate Manual, and that said committee have leave to report said revision in print: Provided, That the clerk of said committee shall prepare such revision without any compensation other than his salary.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service; and

A bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

WORK IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there is a resolution on the table that came over from yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule from a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. COCKRELL, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee to consist of five Senators be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and examine the methods of business and work in the Executive Departments of the Government, the time and attention devoted to the operations thereof by the persons employed therein, and generally to inquire into and report to the Senate the causes of the delays in transacting the public business said to exist in some of said Departments.

The said committee shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to inquire and report what further public buildings are necessary to the transaction of the public business in Washington and the proper uses of the public buildings now existing in said city.

Said committee is hereby authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and to sit during the recess of the Senate next to occur. The compensation of any clerk or stenographer, not exceeding the rate of $8 per day, employed by said committee, and its other necessary expenses shall be paid out of the appropriation for the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the mover of the resolution which refers to the delay of public business in the Departments accept an amendment inserting "and also the occasion for the delay of business in Congress?" Then the whole matter will be before the committee. I suggest an amendment inserting "the occasion of the delay of public business in Congress," to come in immediately after the words referring to the delay of business in the Departments.

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator who offered the resolution is not now in his seat I hope he may have the privilege of calling it up later, and let it go over at present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have sent for the Senator from Missouri, who is in the Appropriations Committee room. He will be here in a moment; and meantime I wish to appeal to my friend from Nebraska not to embarrass the resolution about inquiring into the causes of delay in Congress. We all know what they are. We do not work at the beginning of the session, and at the end we want to do it all at once.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senate knows the cause of delay of business in the Departments as well as in Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, we do not; and it is thought and hoped by the Senator from Missouri, who has given a great deal of attention to that subject, that an exploration of the methods of doing business in some of the Departments and the means of co-ordinating their work will show how we can get on with the public business there which is now so much delayed in some respects, as we know, without much further increasing the force. I think, therefore, that the resolution of the Senator from Missouri is a very useful one, and I shall vote for it accordingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The resolution was read.

Mr. CULLOM. I am very glad that the Senator from Missouri has introduced the resolution. It is high time, it seems to me, that the Congress of the United States should find out what is necessary to be done in reference to the public business in the Departments and provide some means by which it shall be done promptly. If there is any additional force necessary Congress ought to provide it. If additional force is not necessary we ought to find out that fact, and we ought also to find out whether any additional public buildings are needed. I think it is very imporiant that this investigation should be made.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire why it is that the compensation of the clerk to be employed by this committee is placed at a higher rate than the ordinary compensation of a committee clerk.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no special reason except that that has been generally the price paid.

Mr. HOAR. No; $6 a day.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to changing it to the usual price.

Mr. HOAR. I believe the usual compensation is $6 a day.

Mr. COCKRELL. I accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can not get a good stenographer for $6 a day.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that it would be probably difficult to get a stenographer at that rate.

Mr. HOAR. I make no criticism on the matter of the stenographer, and I make none on the other. I merely inquired for information.

Several SENATORS. Leave it as it is.

Mr. VEST. I have not any objection to finding out the truth in regard to the public business and the reasons for delay, but I want to call attention to one fact. We are now called on to create another committee to remain in session here with attendants. We have a committee, and have had for the eight years I have been in the Senate, which was constituted for the purpose of examining into the different branches of the civil service. If that committee has done anything at the present or the last session of Congresss I must confess that I do not know it. We have this regular standing committee to examine into the several branches of the civil service, which was inaugurated and established expressly for the purpose of finding out the very thing that this resolution looks to accomplish. We have a standing committee of the Senate on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I have the honor to be a member. We have endeavored to do our duty. We have introduced bills here, one specifically that I have introduced, which has been passed by the Senate three times, of the highest public necessity, to establish a hall of records for the storage of valuable papers belonging to the Government. It is a reflection on that committee to take away from us our function and place this matter in the hands of a special committee. I think I can claim without any immodesty that we have endeavored to discharge our duty properly. In my judgment there is no necessity for it, and I am constrained to oppose the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire that the amendment I offered shall be stated by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk informs the Chair that the resolution has not been amended on the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. As the Chief Clerk is very skillful in the art of writing, I thought probably he would have taken it down. I will repeat it. I propose to insert:

And also the cause of the delay of public business in Congress.

I propose these words to be inserted following the inquiry as to the delay of public business in the Departments. That needs a good deal more remedy than the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the first paragraph of the resolution it is proposed to insert:

And also the cause of the delay of public business in Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], has said that there is much delay of public business in the Departments. I wish he would particularize a little, so that we may have a more intelligent understanding or designation of the Departments in which the delay occurs, and the nature of the public business that is delayed.

I know that there is an allegation made that there is a delay of business in the Departments at Washington. Now, allow me to say that if we are to have a special committee appointed to investigate such a matter, there ought to be some groundwork laid, some reason given. If there be delay in the public business in the Departments, it is at least due to the Senate and to the country to know what it is. I have heard nothing during our stay here at this session or the last that public business was suffering by reason of any delay in the Departments. Where is it? Is it in the Treasury Department?

What public interest is suffering by reason of any delay in the Treasury Department? Is it in the Interior Department? Is there difficulty in replying to applications in regard to pensions in the Pension Bureau? I take it replies come speedily to letters sent to the Land Office. Then the trouble is not in the Land Office. Is it in the Navy Department? If so, the fault is with Congress that they do not give them any ships. Does the public business suffer in the Navy Department? We have no knowledge of that, because from the speeches made here and the action of the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Naval Affairs it would seem as if there is no responsibility for delay anywhere in the Navy Department. The Department can not build ships unless Congress appropriates millions of dollars for the purpose. If there is any delay in the Navy Department the fault is with Congress, because I presume they have in commission all the ships that they can float and they have all the officers assigned to duty that they can find places for. Is it the War Department? We hear no special complaint about that. Therefore, here is a distinct charge in this resolution—will the Chief Clerk please read that part of the resolution again about the delays in the Departments, that we may see what the charge is?

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee to consist of five Senators be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and examine the methods of business and work in the Executive Departments of the Government, the time and attention devoted to the operations thereof by the persons employed therein, and generally to inquire into and report to the Senate the causes of the delays in transacting the public business said to exist in some of said Departments.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well. They are charged with delay which is said to exist. Said by whom? It seems impossible to get a bill of particulars in this matter. The charge is that there is delay in the Departments, and without any proof that there is any such delay the committee is asked to ascertain the cause of a difficulty which is not proved to exist, because I venture to say that very few Senators here can make such a charge. Here are committees on the different branches; the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Public Lands Committee, and the Appropriations Committee, to designate some cause of delay, if there be any, to be remedied.

We do know that there is delay in legislation. Therefore it is I have suggested this amendment that this committee shall also be instructed to ascertain the cause of the delay of public business in Congress. The Senator from Vermont says we do know it. That is the only point we have now before us on which we have any proof.

If it is necessary to have this committee appointed, which I very much doubt, I take it that every cabinet minister in charge of a Department can readily tell you in a letter of ten lines what the cause of delay is in his Department, and I submit whether it would not be the better way for Congress to put itself in communication by letter of instruction with the heads of these Departments. They know all about the matter better than a committee of five or seven men can ascertain it. Every cabinet officer in ten minutes, if there be cause of delay, can very readily tell Congress the reason. But I apprehend Congress already knows it. I apprehend that this body and the other know if there be any delay. If there be any delay in the Pension Bureau or the Land Office, Congress knows what the cause is. It is because Congress does not give them force enough to transact the business of the offices. There can not be any other reason. It does not reflect on the ability of the Cabinet Ministers or their subordinates. There is only one reason and Congress knows it, and that is they have not sufficient force in their offices to do the business.

Now, let Congress do its duty; and there is where the burden of the question comes in. What is the cause of the delay of public business in Congress? We know it just as well as we know the other. We know that three-fourths of the session is wasted—a criminal waste of time. Three-fourths of all the measures that have consumed time this session and last session have not passed into laws, and it was known they would not pass into laws. What is the cause of delay here, or rather what is the remedy for it? We all know the cause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All see it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We can all see, and when it comes to the last two or three days of the session we can all feel it. We are struggling at the last end of the session to get important bills through which are actually for the public interest and for the public benefit. Our friend from Colorado and the Senator from Michigan said to us that there were fifteen or twenty bridge bills here that ought absolutely to pass, and yet no time is furnished for them.

If it is necessary to have a committee appointed to find out what every Senator probably knows and what he can find out in two hours, I say if it is necessary to have a committee with all the paraphernalia of a committeee to sit during the recess with a clerk and stenographer to do that, they can make the inquiry suggested in the amendment I have offered, which is the most important of all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] to the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out that part of the resolution which relates to public buildings.

Mr. PLATT. I hope that will not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out:

The said committee shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to inquire and report what further public buildings are necessary to the transaction of the public business in Washington, and the proper uses of the public buildings now existing in said city.

Mr. PLATT. I hope that will not be done. I am thoroughly convinced that we shall never have the public buildings required for the transaction of business in the Executive Departments in Washington until the matter is investigated specially by some committee of this character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]?

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the Chair appoint the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order will be made directing the Chair to appoint the committee.

Mr. MAHONE subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion now or give notice that I will make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution in reference to appointing a select committee to examine the Departments in Washington and report to Congress what public buildings are necessary was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia gives notice of a motion to reconsider the resolution adopted on motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA STREET RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. VAN WYCK, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 10899.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be postponed.

KERREMAN'S CONGO MAP.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Kerreman's map of the European possessions on the Congo be printed to accompany the report of Lieutenant Taunt, Executive Document No. 77.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the ninth number of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the fiscal year 1886, prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, be printed for the use of the Senate.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, and I may as well do it now, that I find in some remarks I made suddenly the other night on the subject of a private land claims bill that my friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] understood me to reflect upon him personally, which I did not in the least intend to do. My observations were based upon a misunderstanding or misrecollection of what had been said among the gentlemen of the committee. As my friend from North Carolina feels that my language as printed implied a reflection upon him, I wish to assure him and everybody else that I did not intend anything of the kind.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. Res. 130) to distribute copies of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey, to report it without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. Now I move that the joint resolution (S. R. 42) providing for the distribution of reports of the United States Geological Survey be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON ASIATIC CHOLERA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] without amendment, and I ask for its present consideraiion.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward O. Shakespeare in Europe and Asia, concerniug the nature, causes, method of prevention and cure of epidemic or Asiatic cholera, made by the direction of the President of the United States, be printed, with the accompanying illustrations, and that there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of State, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, said report to be printed under the editorial supervision of Dr. Shakespeare.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This should be a joint resolution—not concurrent. If there be no objection, it will be changed in that way.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. R. 118) to print the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward O. Shakespeare concerning the nature, &c., of epidemic cholera, was read three times, and passed.

MESSENGERS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. CONGER. I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Cleak read as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

O. D. CONGER,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
E. K. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOS. B. WARD,
J. M. RIGGS,
J. B. WAKEFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 264) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor was read twice by its title.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that that be referred to the Committee on Printing without printing.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 3296) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan;

Joint resolution (S. R. 88) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia;

Joint resolution (S. R. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed; and Joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of 4,500 copies of Finley's Storm-Track Charts of the North Atlantic Ocean.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, and Mr. EVARTS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAMPTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BRIDGE AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

Mr. VEST. The bill authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill., has come back from the House of Representatives. I want simply to correct a word in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

Mr. VEST. I wish to correct a mistake in the bill by an amendment striking out, in section 3, line 41, from the word "current" down to and including the word "bridge," in line 44 in the same section, and inserting:

The main or channel span shall be 85 feet in height, measuring from high-water mark as understood at the point of location to the bottom chords of the bridge, and the other spans shall not be less than 50 feet in height, measured in the same way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment may be agreed to by unanimous consent, and the bill returned to the House of Representatives amended in that way.

WEIL AND LA ABRA CLAIMS.

Mr. MORGAN. I call up the resolution I offered on the 1st instant in regard to the Weil and La Abra claims against Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves to proceed to the consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in consequence of the inability of the Senate to act upon Senate bills 2207 and 2208, to amend act for the distribution of awards under a treaty with Mexico, so as to give said measures proper consideration, the President of the United States be requested to suspend further payments under the awards named in said bills to the representatives or persons claiming under Benjamin Weil and the La Abra Silver Mining Company, respectively, until the question of fraud in obtaining said awards by the claimants, respectively, or their agents and attorneys, shall have been duly investigated by the courts of the United States, under the direction of the President, or under the further direction of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very anxious to have this resolution disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. It is important that the appropriation bill shall be considered.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps to-morrow the Senator will have time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that as the reading proceeds the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be taken if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," to insert "in full compensation;" so as to read:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Senate," in section 1, line 15, after the words "hundred and," to strike out "eighty-eight" and insert "forty-two thousand nine hundred and ninety-two."

Mr. ALLISON. There is a misprint in the printed bill. I move to strike out, after the word "hundred," in line 14, the words "thousand three hundred."

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14, after the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "thousand three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, $342,992.82, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for "clerks and messengers to committees," in line 53, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations" from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 77, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of "clerks and messengers to committees" from $59,240 to 59,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for "office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper," in line 87, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "one messenger, acting as assistant doorkeeper," from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 97, after the words "document-room" to insert "(Amzi Smith)," and strike out "two thousand five hundred and ninety-two" and insert "three thousand;" so as to read:

Superintendent of the document-room (Amzi Smith), $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 124, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One type-writer for use of the Senate, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 132, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper" from $141,017.42 to $142,517.42.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 137, to insert:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, $40,896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses" of the Senate, in line 153, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "seventy-five cents" and insert "one dollar;" so as to read:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 158, after the word "packing-boxes," to strike out "seven hundred and eighty" and insert "eight hundred and seventy," and, in line 166, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and eighty" and insert "three hundred and seventy;" so as to read:

For fuel, oil, and cotton-waste, and advertising, for the heating apparatus, $7,500; for furniture and repairs of furniture, $8,000; for packing-boxes, $870; for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $15,000; and for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.50 per printed page, $15,000; in all, $46,370.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the next amendment is read, I desire to insert after the word "and," in line 167, the word "hereafter."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be inserted in the next amendment. Does the Senator from Iowa desire the word "hereafter" or the words "hereafter all" to be inserted?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to "all."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified and stated as modified.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 167, to insert:

And hereafter all purchases of coal and wood for the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States shall be made by advertising once a week for at least four weeks, in three of the principal papers published in the District of Columbia, for sealed proposals for supplying the same; and the contract shall be given to the lowest bidder, provided he shall give satisfactory security to perform the same, under a forfeiture not exceeding double the contract-price in case of failure. When immediate delivery is required by the public exigency, such supplies may be procured by purchase in open market, at the places and in the manner in which such supplies are usually bought and sold. Purchases of stationery and materials for folding shall be made in accordance with sections 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided further, That all contracts and bonds for purchases made under the authority of this act shall be filed with the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, or the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 187, to insert:

No payments shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, or from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, unless sanctioned by the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives; and payments made upon vouchers approved by the respective committees shall be deemed, held, and taken, and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all the departments and officers of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 217.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 217, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "ninety-five" and insert "sixty-eight;" so as to read:

For compensation of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories, $1,668,000.

That is the exact amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 223.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 222, after the word "thousand," I move to strike out "one hundred and thirteen" and insert "three hundred and sixty-three;" so as to read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $388,363.50, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in line 246, after the word "clerk," to insert "and financial clerk;" and in line 247, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" and in the same line, after the word "for," to strike out the words "disbursing clerk;" so as to read:

For printing and bill clerk, and financial clerk, at $2,500 each; for file clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,250 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 272.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 272 I move to strike out "$85,954" and insert "$86,104," it being a total.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 284, before the word "stenographers," to insert the word "skilled;" so as to read:

For two skilled stenographers to committees, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 434, to insert:

To enable the Librarian to continue the preparation of the historical manuscripts in the Library known as Force's American Archives, for publication at the Government Printing Office, under direction of the Joint Library Committee, as provided by act of March 3, 1885, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 450, after the word "shrubs," to strike out the words "for general repairs to conservatory and propagating houses, extending concrete walks," and in line 454, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For procuring manure, tools, fuel, purchasing trees and shrubs, and for labor and materials in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Garden, under direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 483, to strike out the words "one clerk of class 1" and insert "two clerks of class 1; one clerk at $1,000;" in line 485, to insert "one assistant messenger;" and, in line 486, to strike out "$24,800" and insert "$27,720;" so as to read:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer; one clerk of class 3, one clerk of class 2, two clerks of class 1, one clerk at $1,000, two clerks at $900 each, one messenger, one assistant messenger, and one laborer: in all, $27,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 511, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred," and in line 512, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

For proof-reading the laws of the United States and reports to Congress, including boxes and transportation of the same, $1,280; for stationery, furniture, fixtures, and repairs, $5,000; for books and maps, and books for the Library, $2,500; in all, $8,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 572, before the word "charwoman," to strike out "80" and insert "90;" and in line 579, to increase the total of the appropriations for the Treasury Department, Secretary's Office, from $51,517 to $53,917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 613, to increase the total of appropriations for the division of public moneys, Treasury Department, from $24,110 to $24,510.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for division of loans and currency, Treasury Department, line 621, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to read: "Four clerks of class 1;" in line 623, to strike out "two copyists at $840 each," and insert "one copyist at $840;" and in line 630, to increase the total of the appropriations from $69,062 to $69,422.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the division of stationery, printing, and blanks, Treasury Department, line 646, before to word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five," so as to read: "Five clerks of class 4;" in line 647, before the words "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to read: "Two clerks of class 2;" and in line 652, to increase the total of the appropriation from $31,799 to $32,399.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 739, to reduce the total of the appropriations for office of Commissioner of Customs from $53,030 to $49,430.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 753, before the word "clerks," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-two;" in line 753, after the word "class," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" in line 756, before the word "clerks," to strike out "forty-four" and insert "forty-eight," and in line 759, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-six" and insert "fifty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

Second Auditor: For Second Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; six chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; ten clerks of class 4; forty-two clerks of class 3; additional to one clerk of class 3 as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty-five clerks of class 2; forty-eight clerks of class 1; eight clerks, at $1,000 each; one messenger, three assistant messengers, eight laborers, and two charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $254,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 243) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 257) to print a revised edition of the report of the Agricultural Department on insects affecting the orange culture.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A concurrent resolution for the printing of Captain Healey's report upon cruise of steamer Corwin in Arctic for 1884 and 1885;

A concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1886; and

A concurrent resolution for the printing of 15,000 additional copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1886.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of the indexes to the compilation of the House and Senate reports of committees, provided for in public resolution 24, first session Forty-ninth Congress, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most acccessible point between the City of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri;

A bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery;

A bill (S. 175) for a public building at Monroe, La.;

A bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods;

A bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes.

HOUSE RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of 4,500 copies of Finley's storm-track charts of the North Atlantic.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 957, after the word "dollars," to insert "one clerk acting as deputy commissioner, $2,000;" in line 958, before the words "of class 4," strike out "two clerks" and insert "one clerk;" in line 960, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in line 961, before the word "clerks," to strike out "ten" and insert "nine;" and in line 963, before the word "hundred," strike out "twenty-seven thousand nine" and insert "twenty-eight thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Navigation:

For Commissioner of Navigation, $3,000; one clerk acting as deputy commissioner, $2,000; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; four clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; nine clerks at $900 each; one assistant messenger, and one laborer; in all, $28,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 976, after the word "designate," to insert:

For which purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $17,000, which shall be added to and made a part of the appropriation for "plate-printing, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, 1888."

So as to read:

And the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, including piece-workers, shall be allowed leave of absence, with pay, not exceeding fifteen days in any one year, at such time as the Chief of the Bureau may designate, for which purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $17,000, which shall be added to and made a part of the appropriation for "plate-printing, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, 1888."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for "Office of Construction of Standard Weights and Measures" in line 1008, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For purchase of materials and apparatus and incidental expenses, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1069.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1068, I move to strike out "twenty-five" before "thousand," and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

For stationery for the Treasury Department and its several bureaus, $30,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury says it is impossible to get on with $25,000 in that item.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "buildings," in line 1084, to strike out the words:

For the Bureau of Statistics, the Marine Hospital Service, and a portion of the Second Auditor's Office, for a period not longer than until February 29, 1888, $5,750; and on or before February 29, 1888, the above named offices shall be removed to rooms to be assigned to them by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Winder Building, corner of Seventeenth and F streets.

And to insert "$8,625," so as to read:

For rent of buildings, $8,625.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 1094 to line 1096, inclusive, the following words:

For rent of stables for the Treasury Department from March 1 to June 30, 1888, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "harness," in line 1099, to strike out the word "robes;" so as to read:

For purchase of horses for office and mail wagons, care and subsistence of horses, including shoeing, and for wagons, harness, and repairs of the same, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1124, after the word "fixtures," to strike out "type-writers" and insert "type-writing machines;" and in line 1132, to strike out "tumbles" and insert "tumblers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "collecting internal revenue," after the word "dollars," in line 1144, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the number of deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased, nor shall the salary of said officers and employés be increased beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year, exclusive of the number employed under the said act defining butter, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1154, to increase the appropriations "for salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses," from $1,900,000 to $1,950,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). In line 1169 there is evidently an error in the print. The word "two" is repeated.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1169 I move to strike out the word "two" where it first occurs, so as to read "twenty-two hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1207, to reduce the appropriation for the salary of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans from $4,500 to $4,000; and in line 1214, to reduce the total from $15,390 to $14,890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1269, in the items for the office of assistant treasurer at Philadelphia, after the word "seven" to insert the word "hundred;" so as to read:

Seven watchmen, at $720 each.

The next amendment was, in the items for the "office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis," line 1279, after the word "seven," to insert the word "hundred;" so as to read:

Three watchmen at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1303.

Mr. ALLISON. At the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] I ask that the amendments of the committee, contained in the paragraphs from line 1303 to line 1320, relating to the mint at Carson, Nev., be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be passed over for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of land on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. SOWDEN, and Mr. LAIRD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, and William H. Cole.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator in charge of the bill kindly intimated that he would yield that I might have two matters of current printing passed. I report from the Committee on Printing and ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the House joint resolution concerning the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 264) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed 39,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the second annual report of the Commissioner of Labor; 26,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives and 13,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $19,994.30, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of the publication of said report, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON CONGO COUNTRY.

Mr. HAWLEY. One more is a resolution of the Senate simply. The Secretary of the Navy asked for a thousand extra copies of the report of Lieutenant Taunt, who has made an expedition to the Congo country. The Committee on Printing has added 500 copies for the Senate and changed the resolution accordingly. We report a substitute for the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute reported by the Senator from Connecticut will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 1,500 additional copies of the report of Lieutenant Taunt, United States Navy, Executive Document No. 77, be printed, with the accompanying map, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,000 copies for the use of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT FOR 1886.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the statistical abstract of the United States for the year 1886, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

CRUISE OF THE CORWIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions from the House of Representatives; which were referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies each of the reports of Capt. M. A. Healy, United States revenue marine, with all accompanying charts and documents, upon the cruise of the revenue steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean in the years 1884 and 1885, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to the House any charts, drawings, and maps relating thereto not heretofore transmitted.

Resolved, further That of the 5,000 copies each of the above reports, 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Treasury Department.

REPORT ON PRECIOUS METALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1886 be printed, and that 9,000 extra copies be printed, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

COMPILATION OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of the indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees provided for in public resolution 24, first session, Forty-ninth Congress, which was to add at the end of the resolution the following proviso:

Provided, Said compilation of reports shall include reports of Senate and House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

A bill (H. R. 4476) for the relief of Alexander Worrall; and

A bill (H. R. 6663) for the relief of Thomas P. Westmoreland.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "judicial," in the appropriations for office of Attorney-General, in line 2659, after the word "claims," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand;" so as to read:

Examiner of claims, $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain that. What has been the salary heretofore?

Mr. ALLISON. This is the examiner of claims in the State Department. It is the position now occupied by Mr. Wharton. The appropriation for a good many years has been $3,500 per annum. The law provides a salary of $4,000, and a majority of the committee after investigation recommended that the salary be appropriated for as provided by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law creating the office?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that, in the organization of the Department?

Mr. ALLISON. In the organization of the Department of Justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be adopted, and if it is necessary to go back to it we can do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think to make that understood hereafter, that after the words "examiner of claims" the words "State Department" should be inserted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In parenthesis.

Mr. ALLISON. Let them be put in parenthesis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON). That amendment will be made unless there be objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in lines 2678 and 2679, to increase the total appropriation for compensation of the Attorney-General and the assistants, clerks, and employés in his office from $112,610 to $113,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, in line 2704, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" in line 2705, after the word "dollars," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in line 2706, after the word "three," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in line 2707, after the word "two" to insert "two clerks of class 1;" and in 2708, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-six thousand one hundred" and insert "twenty-eight thousand;" so as to read:

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury: For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,500; assistant solicitor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $28,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the Court of Claims, line 2743, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk, $1,200," and insert "two clerks, at $1,200 each;" and in line 2745, after the word "dollars" to strike out "thirty thousand" and insert the words "thirty-two thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Court of Claims:
For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; one assistant clerk, $2,000; bailiff, $1,500; two clerks, at $1,200 each; and one messenger; in all, $32,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 300, page 13, after the words "war claims," there should be inserted "$2,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Though I am not authorized to do so by the Committee on Appropriations, I move, in line 103, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 103, before the word "dollars," strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" so as to read:

One page in the document-room, $900.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained as a matter of justice to all the pages.

Mr. ALLISON. I have here a letter from the superintendent of the Senate document-room suggesting the amendment. He states in regard to this person:

I take pleasure in stating that since his appointment he has proved himself an industrious and intelligent employé, and is, in my judgment, deserving of such increase.

This young man has been in the document-room many years, and has grown up from boy to man receiving a compensation of $720 until now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend in line 426, page 18, which will be unanimously agreed to I am quite sure, for the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator wait a moment? On line 133 I ask that the footing be corrected by adding one hundred and eighty, making the total appropriation $42,697.42.

Mr. HARRIS. Before agreeing to that amendment I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that I wish to offer an amendment in line 105 that will affect the amendment now proposed. I propose an amendment, to strike out the last word in line 105, "two," and insert "four;" and after the word "hundred," in line 106, insert "forty;" so as to read:

One assistant in the folding-room, $1,440.

I desire to say that it is simply an increase from $1,200 to $1,440 of the assistant in the folding-room.

Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid that I have been led into trouble. I had better withdraw my own amendment than to allow this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa to allow an amendment——

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps, as I was recognized by the Chair and yielded merely to the Senator from Iowa, I had better make my amendment, as I desire to leave the Chamber in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the change in the total of the paragraph proposed by the Senator from Iowa. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. That may be suspended until we know what we are about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I move to add, after the word "dollars," in line 426:

The Law Library to be kept open every day so long as either House of Congress is in session.

It is found very inconvenient when it is necessary to refer to statutes and other books to ascertain that the Library is closed. It seems to me the Law Library should be kept open while either House is in session. That is the desire of several Senators.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 426, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

The Law Library to be kept open every day as long as either House of Congress is in session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to the amendment; it is very important and necessary for the convenience of both Houses; but I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there ought to be added to it a provision appropriating a sufficient sum of money, say $1,000 or $2,000, for introducing gas or some other means of lighting the library—say electric lights, if you please. The room there is perfectly safe against fire. I suppose, unless such an appropriation be made, they can not execute the direction.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that in the deficiency bill, which we hope will be reported very soon, there will be a proposition looking to the lighting of the entire Senate wing of the Capitol, including this library.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; that is satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the subject of increasing salaries, I was going to appeal to my friend from Iowa, as other people are appealing to him, to increase the salary of one of our messengers, who was a gallant soldier, and who has been standing here at the east door year in and year out, sick and diseased, and who is now a mere messenger getting $1,440 a year, when he ought to have $1,600, and he ought to be made, I think, an assistant doorkeeper.

I have stated to the friends of this gentleman that I did not think anything could be done about it at this time, because it required a change of the law, and that I did not suppose the Committee on Appropriations would consent at this late period to go into the matter of rearranging compensations. Otherwise, it would have given me the greatest pleasure to call it to their attention. If we are to go into this thing, I want to have a provision of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we shall not go into it, and if there is a persistence in that regard I shall move to reconsider the vote by which I asked for an increase of the pay of the young man in the document-room, and I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the vote by which the last amendment offered by him was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Iowa to withhold that amendment for a moment to allow me to offer the amendment I suggested a while ago, and to make an explanation that will not take half a minute.

I move that in line 105 the last word in the line, "two," be stricken out and "four" inserted, and in line 106, after the first word "hundred" in that line, to insert "and forty;" the effect of which will be to make the salary of the assistant in the folding-room $1,440 instead of $1,200.

The assistant in the document-room receives a salary of $1,440, and I am informed by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate that there is no more responsible position in his staff than that of this assistant, filled at present by an eminently competent man, who deserves at least the salary of a messenger. I therefore move to strike out what I have indicated and insert that which will increase the salary from $1,200 to $1,440; and I hope the Senator will allow the amendment that has already been made in respect to the page in the document-room to stand.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order that this is beyond the estimates, and the salary can not be increased in this way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HARRIS. Necessarily, if the Senator makes it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I give notice that when we get into the Senate I will make a point of order on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], not because it is not right, but because we can not go into this matter at this time.

Mr. BLAIR. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that it gives to the page in the document-room who works the year round, now having $720 only, the same compensation as the ordinary pages on the floor. His compensation long since should have been raised. It has been proposed by myself several times. It only gives this man, who is equal in the work he renders, as Mr. Smith informs me, to any of his assistants who get $1,400 a year—it simply gives him the pay of an ordinary page on the floor. I hope the Senator will not make any point on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the question on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to reconsider was not determined. The Chair will put the question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn by leave of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what was done, if anything, with reference to the matter referred to that committee pertaining to the Surgeon-General's Office. I see on page 68 and for several pages that there seems to have been no amendment to the House bill in relation to the force in the Surgeon-General's Office. There is no increase of clerks or any additional service provided for in that department, so far as I can see, for the purpose of disposing of the work in those bureaus as rapidly as it ought to be disposed of. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, whether the committee made an investigation of that subject so as to satisfy themselves that there was no additional clerical force necessary, or what the reason is why there was nothing additional provided.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend will allow me to put a question, because it will save time for him to answer all at once in that connection. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee how much increase in the number of persons employed in the public service in the various Departments has been made by this bill over that established for last year or two years ago?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the question of the Senator from Vermont first. I do not think there is in this bill any increase, taking all the Departments together, over the service as it exists this year and as it existed last year. There has been an increase in the Department of the Interior over the service now provided for during the current year, and there has been a slight decrease of the clerical force in a few of the bureaus of the Treasury Department, but as a rule in the Treasury Department the clerical service as provided for in this bill for the next fiscal year is the same as that for the current year.

In the War Department the force as provided for in this bill is substantially the same as was provided for the current year.

The reason that the Committee on Appropriations recommended an increase of the force in the Interior Department was that the matter was pressed upon us by the Secretary of the Interior as strongly as it could be, he stating that it was absolutely necessary that he should have this increase in order to carry on the current business of his Department, and he sent to us a communication showing that to-day in the Department of the Interior proper there are detailed from the several bureaus of the Department forty-three clerks, and that in each and every one of the bureaus these clerks are needed for the current work of the bureaus.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are they detailed to do?

Mr. ALLISON. They are detailed for the revision of the work of the several bureaus in the Interior Department proper. They are detailed to the Office of the Secretary of the Interior. They are detailed to the Office of the Secretary of the Interior, and he asks us to put in an increase here equal to the forty-three detailed clerks, saying that every one of these clerks is necessary in their original bureau. Instead of doing that the Committee on Appropriations have only proposed an increase of some sixteen or perhaps seventeen clerks in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do you not give all that he asks for?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a very pertinent inquiry. The committee thought they would try and see if he could not get along with the number which we have provided for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it turns out, as I understand, that in that particular Department the force that existed before was not exuberant and did not furnish fat places for the people, but was really inadequate for carrying on promptly the business that was going on there.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true. But I will say that so far as these Departments are concerned the Committee on Appropriations found that every one of them desires an increase of force and desires an increase of compensation for the existing force, with the single exception of the Treasury Department. I believe that Department has not asked for an increase of force in any of the bureaus of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have they recommended any substantial diminution in the Treasury Department?

Mr. ALLISON. A very small diminution. They have here and there dropped a clerk or dropped a copyist, and so on.

Now, in response to the question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I will say that the Committee on Appropriations did make inquiry of the Secretary of War and asked him to make an estimate of the clerical force necessary to do what he was doing with reference to pension claims without the employment of clerks for extra hours, and the Secretary of War in answer to that request sent us a letter, inclosing a letter from the Surgeon-General and a letter from the Adjutant-General, showing the increased number of clerks required if the men now employed there are not to work over-hours. I have the letters before me. The Committee on Appropriations, however, at this late hour of the session, the day before final adjournment, did not feel itself authorized to enter upon the question of largely increasing the clerical force in the War Department and in the bureaus of that Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did not the committee consider it before?

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true at the present time that the work in the Surgeon-General's Office upon pension claims has been brought up to date?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the work in the Surgeon-General's Office with reference to pension claims will be up to date about the 1st of April. There has been a marked improvement in the clerical force in that office.

I will say in response to the Senator from Vermont that the Committee on Appropriations have made these inquiries as rapidly as they could make them, but the Senator must remember that this bill only came to the Committee on Appropriations yesterday morning.

The Adjutant-General asks for twenty-five additional clerks, and the Surgeon-General for an additional number.

I want to say one further word respecting this bill. It came to the Committee on Appropriations yesterday morning in print. It came there an entirely different bill from the bill that was printed in the House of Representatives originally. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate had made such investigation of that bill as they could make from time to time in advance, but it is impossible to make up these bills with accuracy in advance of their presentation to the Senate, so that this bill came to the Committee on Appropriations only yesterday morning. We spent the entire day and night, until 11 o'clock, on it, and we were convinced that in many of these bureaus it would be necessary to have additional clerks if the current work was to be brought up to date.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he knows of any other committee of either branch of Congress which has had any communication from the War Department asking for additional service for the purpose of performing this work without requiring the clerks to work at night, out of hours and without extra pay, before the present communications of which he has spoken.

Mr. ALLISON. There was no additional estimate, I think, for clerical force in the War Department, or at least there was an estimate for a small additional force and an estimate for increased compensation of clerks already there; but this letter is in response to a telegram sent by the Committee on Appropriations to the Secretary of War after the resolution of the Senator from Illinois had been referred to it.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not surprised that the Committee on Appropriations, having but one day after getting possession of this important bill, should desist from adding very largely to it, because everybody knows that the proper consideration of such a bill ought to require, not one day, but two weeks, in order to thoroughly understand just what ought to be in it and what ought not.

I have been very anxious myself, and I desire it understood now, that as long as the Government undertakes to make a portion of the clerks work beyond the ordinary hours of a day's work, requiring of them, subject to being dismissed for refusal, to go to the Department and work three or four hours of the night, I shall insist upon making war upon that sort of proceeding against these poor men occupying those places who are expecting if they do not obey that sort of an order to be dismissed summarily from the service and turned out upon the cold world. I do not think it is right that an order of that sort should be enforced. This Government is well enough able to make such appropriations as are necessary in order to pay the force that is required to do the work and do it promptly in the settlement of pension claims and other claims of the soldiers of the country on the Government.

Mr. TELLER. The claim made by the present Secretary of the Interior of the lack of force in his office is a well-founded claim, and the evil has been complained of by his predecessors for a number of years. I only regret that the committee should have declined to give him the full number that it is necessary for him to have that he may return to the several bureaus to which they belong the clerks already detailed.

The committee have given him fifteen or sixteen clerks. Three of those are for the purpose of disposing of pension appeals. There are a great number of appeals pending in that Department from the Commissioner of Pensions; appeals that come up and must be examined—two or three thousand of them lying there now, as I understand, unacted upon. A Senator near me says they are six months behind. These three men can only take a very small number of these cases and do justice to the Government and do justice to the parties lodging their appeals for examination. I think it is greatly to be regretted that the committee did not give the Secretary of the Interior the full complement that he asked for—forty-three clerks.

I think it is to be regretted also that the committee did not give to the Commissioner of Pensions an additional force to enable him to dispose of the new cases that will come up under what is called the Mexican pension bill.

I do not believe that there is any economy and I do not believe it meets with the approbation of the people of the United States to compel an Executive Department of the Government to proceed in its business with less force than is necessary to do the business with celerity. The people want their business done promptly and well, and I think we should have had in this bill the full force asked for by the head of the Department unless the Appropriations Committee are prepared to say that in their judgment the head of the Department has asked for more than is necessary. I am prepared to certify that he has not asked for a single man that he did not need and that has not been imperatively needed in that office for several years past.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 133 it is proposed to change the total amount of the appropriation for "Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper" from $142,517.42 to $142,697.42.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WHEELER, Mr. ERMENTROUT, and Mr. CUTCHEON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WHEELER, Mr. WOLFORD, and Mr. STEELE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WHEELER, Mr. VIELE, and Mr. NEGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WHEELER, Mr. DARGAN, and Mr. LAIRD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. NEGLEY the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. In the appropriations for "Office of Director of the Mint," after the word "dollars," in line 1028, I move to add:

Provided, That no charge for transportation shall be made against any person or persons depositing gold for sale or coinage to any mint or assay office of the United States, under the provisions of sections 3519, 3544, 3545, and 3553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. On page 4, line 70, after the words "Public Buildings and Grounds," I move to insert "clerk to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. On page 39, line 946, I move to increase the appropriation for the salary of the principal clerk and accountant of the Life-Saving Service, who is chief clerk and manager, from $1,800 to $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 946, after the word "accountant," it is proposed to strike out $1,800 and insert $2,000; so as to read:

One principal clerk and accountant, $2,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that if I can. It is not estimated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not estimated for.

Mr. CONGER. This has been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that relieves the amendment of the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the Secretary of the Treasury does recommend this increase, but he recommends forty or fifty other increases, and the Committee on Appropriations could not go into this question at this late day of the session.

Mr. CONGER. The Life-Saving Service and the officers of it, I think, have the most laborious and most responsible duties to perform of almost any service in all the offices without exception, as I have found by looking over them.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator proceeds I must say that I was mistaken in reference to the matter of estimates. This is estimated for. So I can not insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. CONGER. I will not discuss the matter. Everybody familiar with the subject knows that the Life-Saving Service has grown to such proportions, and is so familiar to the people, is managed so well that it demands that the chief clerk and accountant in charge of the service should have more salary than an ordinary clerk. This is the sum recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, Mr. Kimball, whom we all recognize as one of the most economical and careful men in the public service. He urges the increase of the salary of this clerk, who is overworked continually; and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to, because if it is we shall have any number of other applications.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish to detain the Senate on the subject; but this recommendation has been made two years in succession, and to my own personal knowledge the services performed by this officer in a service which is very dear to me, of which I am proud, and of which the whole people of the country are proud, when compared with like services in other officers, are such that to pay him several hundred dollars less than is paid in other Departments with corresponding duties is gross injustice. I hope the amendment will be supported by all those who are in favor of maintaining the Life-Saving Service of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. If this amendment is agreed to it is the beginning of a series of amendments which will change the bill materially. Here sits the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] by me, who is preparing an amendment looking to the increase of the compensation of ten or twelve persons in the General Land Office. They are also estimated for. The Book of Estimates is full of proposed increases in the clerical compensation of the force in the Departments. So that if the Senate at this late hour of this late day is to enter on the question of increasing the compensation in all the Departments of the Government it will vote for this increase.

Mr. CONGER. That is no answer to my proposition. The fact that there are other good things which ought to be done is no reason why other good things that are proposed should not be done. I do not know about the others; but about this I do not know that there ought to be an increase; that no person performing like duties receives so small a compensation in any Department of this Government. I think the performance of the duties of the Life-Saving Service, the vast number of lives, the great amount of property saved by that service to the people and to the United States, demand that we should give at least to the clerk a reasonable compensation. I ask for but one, though there are several others that ought to be increased. I trust the friends of the Life-Saving Service will save my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—30.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Coke, | Ingalls, | Sherman, |
| Allison, | Cullom, | Jones of Arkansas, | Vance, |
| Beck, | Edmunds, | Mahone, | Vest, |

| Dawes, | Harris, | Maxey, | Spooner, |
| Evarts, | Harrison, | Mitchell of Pa., | Wilson of Md. |
| Fair, | Hoar, | Platt, | |

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER. In the General Land Office there are ten divisions presided over by chiefs of division receiving $1,800 a year. In every one of those divisions I think there are one or more clerks receiving the same salary that the chief of the division receives. The Department for a number of years has estimated for the payment of these chiefs at from $2,000 to $2,500, but Congress has always allowed their salaries to remain at $1,800. During this session the Senate, without a dissenting voice, passed a bill to provide for the payment to these ten principal chiefs of a salary of $2,000 per annum. I understand a respectable scrutiny was given to the question in another body and it found so far as the committee was concerned a favorable response, but it has not yet become a law. Now, it seems to me that it is hardly consistent with good administration that the chief of a division shall receive exactly the same as his subordinates, or some of them at least. I therefore move an amendment that these ten principal chiefs receive a salary of $2,000 per annum. I offer the amendment to come in on page 85, line 2094.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 85, line 2094, it is proposed to insert:

That there shall be in the General Land Office ten principal clerks, chiefs of division, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 each per annum.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I can not make the point of order on this amendment, because it is estimated for. Therefore I move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In view of the recent vote I shall not call for the yeas and nays upon it, because it seems to be the opinion of the Senate not to raise these salaries.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment, in line 2154, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "one," and in line 2155, after the word "each," to insert:

Fifty at $840 each, and fifty at $720 each.

I ask that the amendments be reported in connection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend in line 2154, page 88, after the words "sixty-one clerks of class one," so as to make the clause read:

One hundred clerks at $1,000 each, fifty at $840 each, and fifty at $720 each.

Mr. MORGAN. It will be observed that the amendment I offered reduces the appropriation. I suppose therefore neither this House nor the other will have any objection to it on that account.

I desire to take out of the class of one-thousand-dollar clerks, of which there are two hundred reported in the bill, one hundred of them, fifty of whom shall receive $840 a year and fifty, $720. My purpose is to enable a large number of persons to have the opportunity of rendering the Government of the United States this service, merely copying service, no more, without having to undergo the thorns of the civil-service examination.

I desire to say to the Senate what I suppose almost every Senator here knows, that in consequence of the stringency of the civil-service regulations a large number of persons are found in Washington city to whom the offices are not accessible, who are quite as respectable as any that are inside the offices and quite as competent to perform the duties of copyists and work like that as any who are in these offices. Many of them have been employés of the Government heretofore in the Census Bureau and in other bureaus that have had a sort of ephemeral existence. I have had persons that I knew to be competent, intelligent, educated people of the very best character come to me in the Senate Chamber, send their cards to me in the Senate Chamber to see me in the Marble room, to get places of the kind that I think we ought to prepare for them in this bill, whose cheeks were actually blanched with hunger in making the application.

The application of the civil-service regulations to a mere copyist, one that is to sit down at a book and take off the contents of a piece of paper and transfer them, is something that in itself is entirely ridiculous.

More than that, there is a defect in the civil-service rules and in the civil-service law, as administered, that ought never to have been allowed to creep in. An applicant for a civil-service examination has nothing to do but to get some respectable friend or some person who has a good character for respectability to give him a certificate of character, or of an acquaintance for two, three, or four years, and to get a surgeon's certificate of physical ability, and himself make an affidavit which perhaps does not contain the truth—and if it does not nobody can ever find it out—as to what the person's profession and calling in life has been, what his character is, what he can do or not do, and elect himself to office, provided he has a sufficient amount of education to pass a decent examination before the civil-service examiners.

Now, I believe that if the chiefs of these different bureaus and of the Departments had the right of selection as to a number of these people they would get very much better characters than those who are now in office in the city of Washington. It can be pointed out by Senators on this floor that there are persons who have thus imposed themselves upon the Government of the United States who are totally unworthy in character. There is no chance of preventing it. These examinations are made ex parte. They are entirely private. Nobody knows who is going to apply to the Civil Service Commissioners to be admitted to office. So persons put in their applications for examination, they get the certificate of friends who are indulgent to them or who perhaps know very little about them they undergo the examination they are selected upon the papers referred to the chief of the Department or bureau, they are judged entirely by the amount of education that they appear to possess as shown on the face of the papers, and the question of their actual worth, their private character, is never brought to the attention of the Commissioners or the bureau officers.

I protest that we ought not to cut off these people, many of whom have come to Washington city years ago under the invitation of this Government to be appointed to office, and who are now more competent than many persons of the same grade to be found in the offices in this city.

We ought not to cut them off from any chance whatever when they will come and render to the Government of the United States service just as good or better for $840 a year or $720 a year that we are now paying a thousand dollars a year for.

Let there be competition in respect to these appointments in some other direction as well as in the direction of education. Let the Government see whether or not it can not employ people to do this copying work who are entirely competent to do it without paying a thousand dollars a year for it.

Sir, an exclamation of joy would arise throughout this city to-day if the Congress of the United States would provide one hundred places where poor starving women in this town could get employment who are just as respectable and just as competent as any that are in office.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the amendment in the shape he puts it, as I understand, will not accomplish what he proposes.

Mr. MORGAN. Why not?

Mr. TELLER. It will simply reduce the salary of one hundred clerks already there.

Mr. MORGAN. These are not graded clerks. They are below class 1.

Mr. TELLER. The bill provides for "two hundred clerks at $1,000 each." Now the Department has those two hundred clerks already in. If the Senator strikes out "two" and inserts "one," he will either have discharged one hundred of these clerks, or those one hundred clerks will take this salary.

If the Senator will move his amendment so as to provide an additional force in the office he will accomplish his object, and there is great force in what he has said; and otherwise he will do very great damage and injury to the clerks already there by reducing their salary from $1,000 to $720 or $840, or else turning them out, one or the other.

Mr. MORGAN. I would be very willing indeed to put an additional force of one hundred clerks in that office, but the committee have not recommended it, and I suppose it would have a very serious effect on the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if any additional clerical force has been allowed the Pension Office in this bill for the execution of the Mexican pension law?

Mr. ALLISON. There has been a very small addition; indeed I may say no addition; but the Commissioner of Pensions, I understand—though I only speak now from having heard this by word of mouth—hopes that the Mexican pension bill will be executed presently before the 1st of July, and provision is to be made in the deficiency bill for a sufficient force to enable him to execute that law up to the 1st of July.

Mr. HARRIS. That is, perhaps, the proper bill; but he needs two hundred and twenty-one additional clerks with which to execute the Mexican pension law in his opinion by the 1st of July.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course he will need them if the work is to be all done in fifteen or twenty days, but the Mexican war pensions of course will be disposed of within a very few months.

Now, I will say in response to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that we have appropriated in this bill precisely as the clerical force now stands in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MORGAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. ALLISON. One or two things will happen if the Senator's amendment should be adopted, namely, that the clerks now there employed will be summarily dismissed with all their experience, with all their knowledge of the business, and one hundred or two hundred new people must come in without any knowledge whatever of the business, and thus the whole service will be disrupted for four or five or six months without any material benefit to the service.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not be indisposed to answer this question: In the provision made in the deficiency bill do the rules of the civil-service examination apply to these additional clerks?

Mr. ALLISON. The deficiency bill, I am sorry to say, is under process now of construction, in a condition of evolution, and I do not know certainly whether it will come out with a classified service, or whether it will come out with a lump sum. Of course if it comes out with a lump sum it will be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, but if it appears with a classified service, of course all those from $900 and above must be passed through the ordeal of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware of course what the deficiency bill would contain, as it has not been reported to the Senate, and I was not aware that any other opportunity would be presented for considering this question than the one that is presented on this bill; but finding that another opportunity is to arise on the deficiency bill that is to meet my views, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I am much obliged to the Senator. That will enable us to get on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; because I am very glad to know that the Committee on Appropriations find it necessary to make an appropriation in the deficiency bill; rather a curious bill to put it on, however, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the current year, and the only bill to which it belongs.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very glad to know that this additional force is to be given for the purpose of executing the Mexican pension law. Of course I shall be glad also to know that it is only for six months; but I shall greet with joy, and relief too, if we can assist these poor people in the District of Columbia who are entirely competent to do this work, even by giving them a lease upon life for six months in the bread that they can earn in the service of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask the Senator to return to page 54. There is a series of amendments there relating to the mint at Carson, which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] asked me to withhold until he could be present.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I hope the committee will not insist on the amendments relative to the Carson mint.

A year or two ago that mint was reduced to an assay office, not by law, but by a Treasury order (an order entirely unauthorized, as I think), greatly to the inconvenience of the people in that section. An attempt is now made to further reduce it so that it shall be merely a receptacle, a haven for a few officials, without their having any duties whatever to perform.

That mint is located in the very heart of one of the greatest bullion-producing sections of the United States, but under the recent management of the Treasury Department the Government seems to regard institutions of this character as established not for the benefit of the people, but as catch-penny, money-making affairs on the part of the United States. The theory of the Department seems to be that if the Government can coin a dollar cheaper in one place than in another the coining shall be done where it can be done most cheaply to the Government, no matter what it may cost those who produce the bullion to transport the bullion to that place.

The State of Nevada receives no assistance from river and harbor bills, or from any other governmental source whatever; while, on the other hand, its resources have, in a brief period, added hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of the nation. The people of that State have an idea that mints are established for the convenience of the public, and not for the purpose of effecting a paltry saving to the Government—a saving of a mere fifth of 1 per cent. or eighth of 1 per cent. in the expense of coinage—by compelling those who produce bullion to transport it to vast distances in order that it may be coined.

It is not at all impossible that there may be a largely increased output of bullion in that region within the present year. All the indications point to such a result.

In view of the great public convenience involved, I trust the amendments offered by the committee will be non-concurred in by the Senate. I hope the mint will be left where the law put it—where it is now—with its officers and their salaries as they are, and with the appropriation necessary and proper for conducting it at its full capacity.

Mr. ALLISON. After the statement made by the Senator from Nevada I do not know that I shall insist upon the committee amendments. The Committee on Appropriations in preparing the bill and suggesting amendments have confined themselves to the Book of Estimates, and I think in no case have we advanced the appropriations beyond the estimates made in the Book of Estimates, except in one or two instances respecting our own clerical force. I admit there is great force in what the Senator from Nevada says, and these items will be important if it shall turn out that in a few months there will be a large production of gold or silver in that vicinity. Silver, I suppose, is the chief production.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Both; the production is equal.

Mr. ALLISON. In that case it will be a wise thing to have in hand machinery of this kind to coin the gold or silver. I leave it to the judgment of the Senate whether this matter shall stand or whether the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations shall be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a series of amendments, all relating to the Carson mint. I will say that the Committee on Appropriations simply reduced the House propositions to the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the amendments will be considered as one question.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations report to insert in line 1305 the word "and" before "melter;" to strike out in line 1306, after the word "refiner," the words "and coiner;" in line 1307, after the word "each," to strike out the words "assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each;" after the words "two thousand," in line 1309, to reduce the appropriation for chief clerk from $2,250 to $2,000; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words "cashier, book-keeper, and weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; abstract clerk and register of deposits," and to insert "two clerks;" in line 1312, after the word "each," to insert "one clerk at $1,600;" in line 1314, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-nine thousand five hundred and fifty" and insert "sixteen thousand four hundred;" in line 1317, to reduce the appropriation for "wages of workmen and adjusters" from $60,000 to $25,000; and in line 1319, to reduce the appropriation for "incidental and contingent expenses" from $25,000 to $10,000; so as to read:

Mint at Carson, Nev.: For salary of superintendent, $3,000; for assayer, and melter and refiner, at $2,500 each; chief clerk, at $2,000; two clerks, at $1,800 each; one clerk, at $1,600; assayer's computation clerk, at $1,200; in all, $16,400.
For wages of workmen and adjusters, $25,000.
For incidental and contingent expenses, $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. It is suggested by the Senator from Nevada to disagree to the committee amendments?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Yes; I ask that they be disagreed to.

The amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have an amendment which I offered a day or two ago at the request of the Delegate from Montana, and had referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2440, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$8,000;" and in the same line strike out "$5,500" and insert "$13,000;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Montana, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $8,000; in all, $13,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Owing to the condition of business in the House of Representatives, when the bill was under consideration there, this matter was omitted, and it evidently should be put in by the Senate. I do not know whether the committee will be disposed to oppose the amendment. The appropriation here is but $3,000, and that, as appears in the papers and in the report to the Land Office from the surveyor-general, is barely enough to examine and make returns upon the surveys already made in that Territory, and the surveys which are to be made in the future will have to remain there, because there is not a clerical force in the office sufficient to do the work.

The Senate will remember that on the sundry civil appropriation bill we increased the appropriation for the survey of lands in that Territory so that the railroad lands could be surveyed. The object, as was conceded by the committee, was to put in force the provision of law whereby railroad lands should be subject to taxation, as only surveyed lands could be so subject to taxation, and therefore it was necessary to increase the appropriation in order that the lands could be surveyed.

Another point made in regard to that section of country was the great depredation made upon the timber-lands, notably the Montana Improvement Company, whereby they had been stripping those forests of millions of feet of timber, and the court there had decided that a suit could not be sustained until there was a survey of the land in that country. Therefore, it became doubly important that appropriations should be made so that the lands could be surveyed.

On one hand we make a beneficent law providing that the lands in that country, which the railroads own, shall be subject to taxation, and on the other hand we withhold the money for surveying them, which is necessary to make them subject to taxation, and after the appropriation has been made for the survey it becomes doubly necessary now that we should furnish clerical force sufficient in the surveyor-general's office to examine the returns, because practically, as far as anything can be done toward stopping these depredations and making the lands subject to taxation that are still unsurveyed, if surveyed the surveys must lie in the office of the surveyor-general and not be examined and returned to the General Land Office, in Washington, because the clerical force is insufficient to do that work.

This item has been estimated for and the estimates show precisely what is required. I have here letters from the surveyor-general and from the Commissioner of the General Land Office showing that this $3,000 barely covers work on the surveys made to this time, and any surveys made in the future, as the chairman of the committee knows, will have to remain in the surveyor-general's office until this handful of clerks can make the examination and return. In Montana there are thousands upon thousands of acres of public land requiring survey in order to make them subject to taxation, so that the Government may recover for the depredations upon the public land. I trust the chairman of the committee will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I dislike very much of course to oppose anything suggested by the Senator from Nebraska; I would look into it very carefully first; but if I agree to this amendment and if the Senate shall agree to it then we must go through with all the appropriations for the offices of the surveyors-general and increase them all. The argument made by the Senator from Nebraska will apply to every one of the surveyors-general. The appropriations found in the bill as it came to us from the House are precisely the appropriations of the current year, and the committee did not see proper to change them, except in one instance, for special reasons.

Montana is not likely to be disturbed in the next year with surveys, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska. On the sundry civil bill, which I hope will be considered in the Senate immediately after the pending bill is disposed of, the Senate was obliged to reduce the amount for surveys. We increased the amount for surveys from the enormous sum of $50,000 to $75,000, and so intent are the House of Representatives upon surveying the public land that they required us to release the additional $10,000 which we provided. So along with this appropriation for clerks in the offices of the surveyors-general there goes an appropriation of $50,000, $10,000 of which may be used in going about the country and digging up the surveys already made.

It seems to me that with an entire appropriation of $40,000 for the next fiscal year covering the entire area of our public land, which I think would give Montana about $3,500, the amount that we have appropriated for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general there is sufficient. Therefore I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, and that we shall not increase all the appropriations for clerk-hire in those offices.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senate will excuse me for saying just one word more in regard to the matter. Any neglect on the part of the House of Representatives certainly does not excuse us for any neglect on our part. It is true the House of Representatives appropriated $50,000, but that is no reason why we should not appropriate more. My friend from Iowa did not seriously oppose it when we added $25,000 for the surveys, and that was done upon the express ground that it would be a survey of railroad lands and subject them to taxation, so that the people might avail themselves of the benefit in taxing their lands; and the other reason was that those corporations were despoiling the public domain of its timber, and under the decision of the court it was necessary that the lands should be surveyed.

Mr. ALLISON. The conferees on the part of the Senate were obliged to surrender that additional $25,000 because the other House said they had appropriated all the Commissioner of the General Land Office asked. As the surveys now stand under the appropriations for the fiscal year for which this clerical force is required, the total appropriation is $50,000, $10,000 of which may be used in making investigations.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the House of Representatives refuse to concur, that is another great charge in the indictment which is preferred against them by the chairman of the committee, and very properly so.

Mr. ALLISON. I am saying nothing about that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We are endeavoring to investigate and help such labors by the committee we agreed on this morning, to find out the cause of delay, and very properly. The surveyor-general says:

> On the 30th of June, 1886, the said appropriation of $9,000 for clerk-hire in this office lapsed, and the new appropriation for clerk-hire was only $3,000, or sufficient to pay the salary of the chief clerk and one draughtsman.
> In consequence of the delay in letting these said contracts and the small appropriation for clerk-hire for the current year, this office is confronted with the returns of thirteen contracts, aggregating $23,330 liability, with virtually only funds sufficient to pay one draughtsman to work up the returns under said contracts.

That is all he can do, and the additional contracts and all the additional surveys will remain in that office because there are not clerks enough to examine and make the return. It is for the Senate to determine, but it seems to me this is an important matter.

Here is a public duty, and it is a question between the House and the Senate as to which body is the most responsible. Here are millions of acres of the public domain properly subject to taxation. These land-grant railroads have been exempt from taxation for this immense domain because Congress did not pass a law which should have been passed years ago, allowing the lands to be subject to taxation.

When that law was finally passed, as I stated, we required the lands to be surveyed, and now it is a question between the House and the Senate as to who is most responsible for this neglect. The law which was intended to protect the people is of no benefit to them, and no recovery can be had in the courts under the decision of the court for the immense spoliation of the public domain until the land is surveyed.

I submit this matter to the Senate. I desired to make these suggestions so that it might seem that we should do something ourselves. If the bill has come here in a peculiar shape in almost the last day of the session, is that a reason why we should deny proper appropriations for the purpose of transacting that business which is conceded to be important?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee;

A bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service;

A bill (S. 3296) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan;

Joint resolution (S. R. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed;

Joint resolution (S. R. 88) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, William H. Cole, and Austin F. Pike; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 130) to distribute copies of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas. It is the bill which has been recalled from the other House, and I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed, that we may disagree to the amendments and adopt the bill as it passed the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the vote by which it was passed as amended be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the motion of the Senator from Colorado include the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He can only make one motion at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on reconsidering the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading.

PRINTING OF LIST OF CLAIMS.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that I ask to lay before the Senate a list of certain claims which are usually printed, and I ask that the list be printed. The claims will be included in the deficiency appropriation bill when it is reported, and it ought to be printed immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH). The order to print will be made.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me further to submit to the Senate the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report, which the Chief Clerk proceeded to read:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
> That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 9, 19, 20, 23, 33, 34, 38, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 56, 61, 67, 69, 151, 156, 164, 166, 168, 173, 182, 184, 186, 187, 191, 192, 196, 204, 209, 211, 214, 217, 223, 224, 233, 252, and 258.
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 22, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 36, 37, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 53, 62, 63, 65, 66, 71, 73, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 152, 153, 155, 157, 159, 160, 163, 165, 167, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 181, 183, 185, 188, 190, 195, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 210, 213, 216, 222, 225, 226, 227, 228, 231, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 253, 259, 261, and 262, and agree to the same.
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.
>
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agreed to the same.
>
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "dollars" where it first occurs in said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the word "commencement" in lieu of the word "erection" in said amendment, and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the amended paragraph the words "and heating apparatus," and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "roof," in said amendment, insert the words "and for painting;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the word "commencing" in lieu of the word "completing" in said amendment; and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For post-office, custom-house, and court-house at Wilmington, N. C.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $50,000.

"For court-house and post-office at Jefferson, Tex.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.

"For post-office at Houston, Tex.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.

"For public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.: For completion of the building, $52,148.

"For court-house and post-office at Augusta, Ga.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $50,000.

"For court-house and post-office at Chattanooga, Tenn.: For continuation of the building, $50,000.

"For heating apparatus complete to be furnished before June 30, 1888, for the following new public buildings, namely:

"At Aberdeen, Miss.; Augusta, Me.; Clarksburg, W. Va.; Columbus, Ohio; Concord, N. H.; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Dallas, Tex.; Erie, Pa.; Hannibal, Mo.; Jefferson City, Mo.; Leavenworth, Kans.; Lynchburg, Va.; Macon, Ga.; New Albany, Ind.; Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Quincy, Ill.; Shreveport, La.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Toledo, Ohio; Tyler, Tex.; and Waco, Tex., $190,000.

"That contracts shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury for furnishing and putting in heating apparatus for public buildings upon advertisements in some leading newspaper in the State where each building is situated, containing specifications of the kind of heating apparatus required; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidder therefor.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for the fiscal year 1887, and for each fiscal year thereafter, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons employed outside of the District of Columbia as superintendents, clerks, watchmen, and otherwise, and paid from appropriations for the construction of public buildings, showing where said persons are employed, in what capacity, the length of time, and at what rate of compensation; and hereafter, where public buildings shall be completed with the exception of heating apparatus and approaches, but one person shall be employed by the Government for the supervision and care of such buildings."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The same to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three persons familiar with the cost of buildings and the value of ground in the city of Washington who shall appraise as to its value for the use of the Government the land and buildings thereon, being lots numbered 11 and 12 of the subdivision of square numbered 689 on the original plat of lands in the city of Washington, bounded north by South B street, east by New Jersey avenue, and west by South Capitol street, and he is hereby directed to report the result of such appraisement to Congress at its next session and whether in his judgment at such appraised value the same can be used economically and for what purpose, provided that nohting herein contained shall in any way commit the United States to the purchase of said property."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to make examination respecting the needs of the Government for a marine hospital at or in the vicinity of New York city, and, in case such hospital is required, to submit a plan for same and an estimate of the cost thereof, the said hospital to be erected upon property now belonging to the United States, if such property can be found suitable for the purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "light-house," in said amendment, insert the following:

"At Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon, or at Cape Lookout, Oregon, if in the opinion of the Light-House Board that site is more advantageous to mariners."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 6, in line 24 of the bill, strike out "ninety" and insert "eighty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$325,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8, in line 23 of the bill, after the word "Louisiana," insert "at Chico Pass and to mark navigable channel along Grand Lake, Louisiana;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000," and after the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Lighting the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor: For building for engines and boilers, $10,000; incandescent light plant, $2,500; dynamos, lamps, and lens for torch, $4,000; removing present machinery to new building, additional houses for side lamps, putting grounds in order, fencing and incidentals, $3,000; in all, $19,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 75 to 145, inclusive, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraphs insert the following:

"For triangulation, topography, and hydrography of the coast of Maine in Cobscook Bay and Saint Croix River, and for off-shore soundings between Matinicus and Seguin Lights, $10,000.

"For resurveys, for triangulation, topography, and hydrography in the vicinity of the east end of Long Island, Block Island, Nantucket, Nantucket Shoals and approaches and including Vineyard Sound, $15,000.

"For physical hydrographic surveys on Monomoy Shoals, $4,000.

"For physical hydrography in New York Harbor and its approaches, $3,000.

"For observing the movement, lodgment of, and obstructions by ice in the Delaware River, and noting the changes caused thereby in Cherry Island Flats, $200.

"For examinations and resurveys on the Virginia coast from Chincoteague to Cherrystone, and especially at Cape Charles and in its vicinity, including triangulation, hydrography, and topography, $5,000.

"To continue the surveys in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., and up the Cooper and Ashley Rivers to the head of navigation; and to continue the astronomical, latitude, and azimuth work, and, in connection therewith, the recovery and remarking of old triangulation stations, for their preservation, and the connection of some detached triangulation between Beaufort and the mouth of the Cape Fear River, North Carolina, and the connection of the Cape Fear River triangulation with the coast triangulation at Masonsborough, $2,000.

"To continue the primary triangulation from Atlanta toward Mobile, $3,000.

"For continuing the survey of the western coast of Florida from Cape Sable north to Cape Romano, and for hydrography off the same coast, $6,500.

"For continuing the survey of the coast of Louisiana west of the Mississippi Delta and between Barataria Bay and Sabine Pass, $7,000.

"To make off-shore soundings along the Atlantic coast and current and temperature observations in the Gulf Stream, $8,000.

"For continuing the topographical survey of the coast of Southern California, $10,000.

"For continuing the primary triangulation of Southern California, and for connecting the same at Mount Conness and Macho stations with the transcontinental arc, and for a primary base line in the vicinity of Los Angeles, $6,000.

"For continuing the resurvey of San Francisco Bay and of San Pablo and Suisun Bays and the Strait of Carquinez, the examination of San Francisco Bar and entrance, and the mouths of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, $5,000.

"For continuing the survey of the coast of Oregon, including off-shore hydrography, and to continue the survey of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Willamette toward the Cascades, triangulation, topography, and hydrography, $7,000.

"For continuing the survey of the coast of Washington Territory, $9,000.

"For continuing explorations in the waters of Alaska, and making hydrographic surveys in the same, and for the establishment of astronomical longitude and magnetic stations between Sitka and the southern end of the Territory, $10,000.

"For continuing the researches in physical hydrography relating to harbors and bars, including computations and plottings, $3,000.

"For examination into reported dangers on the eastern, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, $1,000.

"To continue magnetic observations on the Atlantic and Gulf slopes, $500.

"For continuing magnetic observations on the Pacific coast, at the Los Angeles Magnetic Observatory, $1,200.

"For continuing the exact line of levels from Cairo westward, $2,000.

"For continuing tide observations on the Pacific coast, at Kadiak, in Alaska, and at Saucelito, near San Francisco, in California, $2,300.

"To continue tide observations on the Atlantic coast, at Pulpit Harbor, Maine, and at Sandy Hook, New Jersey, $2,000.

"To continue gravity experiments, at a cost not exceeding $500 per station, except for special investigations and experiments authorized by the Superintendent at one or more stations, the unexpended balance of the appropriation therefor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

"For furnishing points to State surveys, to be applied, as far as practicable, in States where points have not been furnished, $7,500.

"For determinations of geographical positions (longitude party), $3,000.

"For continuation of geodetic work on transcontinental main line between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $19,000.

"To continue the compilation of the Coast Pilot, and to make special hydrographic examinations for the same, $2,500.

"For traveling expenses of officers and men of the Navy on duty, and for any special surveys that may be required by the Light-House Board or other proper authority, and contingent expenses incident thereto, $3,000.

"For objects not hereinbefore named that may be deemed urgent, $3,000.

"And 10 per cent. of the foregoing amounts shall be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named; in all, for party expenses, $160,700.

"For repairs and maintenance of vessels: For repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels used in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 169, 170, and 171, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"That as soon as practicable after the completion as provided for in the sundry civil act approved August 4, 1886, and not later than December 1, 1888, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be removed to the Pension Building, the General Land Office, the Bureau of Education, the Office of the Commissioner of Railroads, and Bureau of Labor, and vacate the buildings rented for and now occupied by said offices and bureaus, or portions thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"BUILDING FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

"That the Library commission is hereby empowered to make leases and to collect rents for such houses on the Library site as in its judgment may remain temporarily without obstructing the work; the proceeds from such rents to be paid into the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter proposed to be inserted the following:

"For purchase of horse, $200, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 198, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the matter proposed to be inserted the following:

"The same to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 230, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the first line of said amendment substitute the word "at" for the word "in," and strike out the word "cemetery;" and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 245, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "open" in said amendment, and in lieuthere of insert the words "opened by the judge;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 246, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"And no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws unless the prosecution has been approved either before or after such arrest by the attorney of the United States for the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed or the prosecution is by indictment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 19, on page 61 of the bill, strike out "twelve" and insert "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 14, page 62 of the bill, after the word "department," insert the words "including the Civil Service Commission;" and the Senate agree to the same.

During the reading,

Mr. TELLER. Would it be in order to move to concur in the report without having it read? Nobody is paying any attention to it, and it is only taking time.

Mr. HARRIS. Unanimous consent can be given.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be concurred in without further reading.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make an explanation before the report is concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. That is better than having it read.

Mr. ALLISON. This is an important bill, and it is a bill to which the Senate added nearly $4,000,000 of appropriations. The Senate conferees have surrendered about $1,700,000 of the $4,000,000 addition made.

I desire to explain briefly that the Senate conferees, in order to secure an agreement upon the bill, were willing to postpone a great many expenditures that are necessary, as we believe, to the proper conduct of the Government. For illustration, the Senate inserted in the bill a provision appropriating a sufficient sum of money to complete the international survey of what is known as the Mexican boundary, a survey that we are bound to make by a treaty provision that we made some three years ago with Mexico. In pursuance of that treaty some two years ago the Senate inserted in a sundry civil appropriation bill a provision providing for that survey, but in conference we were compelled to surrender one-half of it in order to secure an agreement upon the bill. So one-half the sum estimated as the cost of that survey is lying in the Treasury because it is not worth while to begin it in association with Mexico until the whole sum is appropriated. Each succeeding Secretary of State has recommended that the survey be completed, because of the uncertain condition of more than a thousand miles of our boundary lying on land between the Rio Grande River and the Pacific Ocean. When the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was under consideration the Secretary of State sent to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate a most urgent letter, saying to us that our treaty obligations with Mexico required that this survey should be made.

There was also in the bill a provision for surveying the Alaskan boundary between British Columbia and Alaska. That survey was also urgently requested by the State Department in a letter which is now upon our files and printed, showing that it was necessary to our peaceful and cordial relations in that region that the survey should be entered upon. But the Committee on Appropriations were not able to hold these two important provisions, resting upon treaty stipulations, because the House of Representatives stated they were not willing to make the appropriation this year.

In further illustration of what was given up by the Senate, we have surrendered the $250,000 appropriated for the purpose of constructing the Library building in this city.

Mr. HOAR. The entire amount?

Mr. ALLISON. The entire amount we were obliged to surrender, because the House of Representatives stated that there is now on hand some $480,000, which is true, and that they were not willing now to appropriate an additional sum because the sum now on hand would be sufficient to carry on the operations for the construction of the Library building until December, when Congress would be again in session, and if it should be necessary then to make appropriations for the Library building it could be done in a deficiency bill. They absolutely refused to appropriate one dollar for that purpose, although those in charge of the construction of the Library building said to us that they could economically expend, in addition to the sum they have now on hand, during the fiscal year $350,000, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate inserting $250,000, reducing the amount $100,000 below the estimate made by those in charge of the construction of the building.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my honorable friend from Iowa a question, if it will not be disagreeable to him.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator whether in his opinion these reductions of expenditure insisted upon by the House of Representatives, although making an immediate showing of saving, do not result in ultimate loss to the Government in the final cost of the public work that has been already ordered?

Mr. BECK (in his seat). There is no doubt about it.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for putting to me that inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, if the Senator from Kentucky is willing, to have him make the statement publicly, and I should like also to have the Senator from Iowa make it.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; I said to the Senator from Iowa there was no doubt about it. What I meant was this: Whenever there is a small public building, costing say $150,000, we have said finish it at once. We are paying rent now for buildings outside, and instead of appropriating one-half this year and one-half the next year, and keeping a superintendent and watchman and clerks and all sorts of supernumeraries until the last brick is laid, we proposed to close up at once and save rents and avoid the expenses to which I have referred, caused by a delay in the completion of the building.

Mr. HOAR. In that way large sums would be saved?

Mr. BECK. Large sums would be saved in that way.

Mr. HOAR. Although, on the other hand, there is a pretense of a saving.

Mr. BECK. There may be in delay an appearance of economy, but it is an actual loss in the end to do it that way. That is what I meant.

Mr. ALLISON. The illustration so well made by the Senator from Kentucky in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts applies to this Library building. The Government of the United States has entered upon the project of providing a Library building, and the act was passed by the unanimous judgment of both Houses of Congress, I believe, one year ago. We have expended one-half million of dollars for the site of the building. We need a large portion of the space which is now occupied by the Library in the Capitol for the convenience of the public business of the two Houses. As the expenditure has been entered upon and nearly one-half the entire cost has already been appropriated, it is manifestly true economy for the Government to continue that work with as rapid progress as it can be done usefully and economically. Yet the House of Representatives refused to make an appropriation with reference to this building, simply saying that it is a matter that can be postponed until next year.

Whilst I am on the question of public buildings I desire to say that the Senate of the United States was obliged to surrender large appropriations with reference to public buildings, generally for the reason that the House of Representatives are not willing to adopt the economical principle which the Senate has adopted with reference to these public buildings. Whenever an appropriation is made for a public building, whether it be for $50,000, $100,000, or $200,000, there at once enters into that appropriation an expenditure for a superintendent of the building, and the moment construction is entered upon for a clerk to the superintendent, and a watchman, messenger, &c. A building costing $100,000, fire-proof, whether built of brick or stone, can be completed in a single season.

Mr. BECK. Or one costing $150,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Or one costing $150,000. In examining with care this subject and in consultation with the Supervising Architect of the Treasury he told us that if he could have the whole of the appropriation at once he could make a single contract for the construction, and construct the building in a single season, and thereby save a large sum of money, and thus either secure a better building or a saving of the appropriation itself. When we presented this question to the House of Representatives they said to us: "No; we will appropriate for these public buildings in tid-bits. We will give $25,000 for a building that costs $50,000; we will give $50,000 for a building that costs $100,000; and will give $75,000 for a building that costs $150,000."

I will illustrate by calling the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that at this session of Congress we provided for a public building at Worcester costing $150,000, which the Architect of the Treasury said he could build in a single season if he had the money. The House refused to appropriate more than $75,000. There was passed at this session a law providing for a building at Los Angeles, Cal., costing $150,000, where we are paying large rents on the part of the Government for the use of buildings for the public service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nearly 2 per cent. a month.

Mr. ALLISON. We are paying nearly 2 per cent. a month, as the Senator from California tells me, on the cost of the building where the United States courts have to sit and where there is a rapidly increasing population and a rapidly growing development of the country. We said to the House of Representatives: "It is true economy to expend $150,000 in that construction and save the 2 per cent. a month that the Government is paying there in the shape of rents, when the Government itself, if need be, can borrow money at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum, and when it has in the Treasury undisposed of more than a hundred million dollars." The House of Representatives said: "No; we will give you only $75,000 for the public building at Los Angeles, Cal."

So I might run through this gamut of public buildings and show that we were compelled to make concession after concession with reference to these items, thus appropriating money in tidbits, as I have said, for buildings which ought to be completed in a single year.

There are other appropriations in this bill where the Senate was obliged to make concessions. We have now a Coast Survey that has been established since 1807. It is a scientific survey. Its personnel, its employés, except the clerical force, are men skilled in science, who have devoted their lives to the great scientific subjects which are being developed by that Coast Survey. Two or three years ago those in charge made the statement that if they had appropriations upon a fair scale, such as were then going on, the Coast Survey upon the Atlantic coast in its primary survey could be completed within the period of five years, and that within the period of nine years the entire Pacific coast, except Alaska, could be completed in the same way. We appropriated in all for this survey for the field-work, so called, in round numbers, $200,000; I think $218,000; I will not trouble myself with the details. We did that because the Superintendent in charge and the scientific men having control said that amount could be expended economically during the coming season.

We had a struggle over this appropriation, and it was a struggle renewed from last year, when we were compelled then to compromise with the House of Representatives and make the total appropriation for this purpose of $160,000. In order to secure a final report upon this bill the managers on the part of the Senate proposed to the managers on the part of the House that we should give them the appropriations of last year, which amounted in round numbers to $160,000; but we said that in order to distribute that money we would require the scientific people in charge of that survey to propose the method of its apportionment, to which they agreed. The managers on the part of the Senate sent for these people and they distributed this sum of $160,000 so that it would best carry out the purpose and intent of the managers of the two Houses.

In making this distribution over a vast number of items it appeared that the scientific experts in the Coast Survey who made this computation ran up the sum to $162,500 in round numbers, and these were handed to the clerks to make up the report. The managers upon the part of the House of Representatives, discovering that these scientific experts had gone $2,000 or $2,500 above the agreement of last year, came back and demanded of the managers on the part of the Senate that we should reduce these small sums so as to bring it exactly to the apportionment made by the appropriation act of 1886. So in regard to the Coast Survey, the managers on the part of the Senate were compelled to surrender to the House managers in order that the appropriations of the current year should be agreed to without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

So I might go over these appropriations seriatim; and I should be glad to answer any inquiry in reference to any particular appropriation and show that perhaps with the exception of two or three items, these appropriations were actually necessary for the purposes of the Government; that in the surrender of the amounts which we had put on, we have only postponed the time when these appropriations will be made; and that every item in the bill practically which we have surrendered, with the few exceptions I have stated, amounting to less than $100,000 in all, are items which will be in the bills of next year or the year after.

Mr. President, having made these statements in justification of the managers on the part of the Senate, and in vindication somewhat of the Senate itself with regard to the appropriations in the bill, I desire a vote upon the conference report.

Mr. HOAR. For my own satisfaction I desire to respond to the Senator's request in regard to the public building provided for at Worcester, Mass. Worcester is a city of 80,000 inhabitants, probably growing as rapidly as any city in the United States. It is the second city in New England, I think, in post-office work and income. It may possibly be exceeded by Providence, but I think not. That appropriation was cut down to $75,000 the present year. I wish to ask the Senator whether that was done by the absolute insistence of the House conferees.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Against the opinion and judgment of the Senate conferees?

Mr. ALLISON. Absolutely.

Mr. BECK. It was very absolutely.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that we put in $125,000, being one-half of the estimated cost of that building, but the managers on the part of the House of Representatives, after a great deal of persistence on our part, exerted themselves to the tremendous point where they were willing to give $75,000 for the public building at Worcester, Mass.

I think I ought to have mentioned in speaking of the details of the bill that the House conferees insisted that we should strike out from the Senate amendments all provision for the Library; that is to say, they would not agree to the usual appropriation of $10,000 for works of art, and that item is also out of the bill.

Now, one word with reference to the increase of appropriations found upon the bill as it passed from the Senate. This bill was brought to the Senate on the 20th day of December last. It passed the House of Representatives before many of the reports relating to the subjects embodied in this bill were printed. We received it on the 20th of December. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and on the 22d day of December Congress took a recess. It was not convenient for the Committee on Appropriations to secure a majority during the recess, and the committee took up the bill immediately after Congress convened at the expiration of the holiday recess.

Mr. BECK. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an additional fact causing delay, that the supplementary reports, especially the reports of the Light-House Board and two or three other reports, had not been printed either at the time when the other House considered the bill or when we began it, because there is a rule now that nothing can be printed until there is first a report from the Committee on Printing and an estimate made, and we had to wait until we got the printed reports.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to state that.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for the interruption. I was about to state that when we took up the bill about the 4th day of January we were at every step of its examination impeded because we could find none of the reports in the document-room; they had not been printed. So we struggled along with the bill and we reported it to the Senate and it passed the Senate on the 2d day of February. Practically the bill was in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations less than four weeks, although it has been stated elsewhere that the bill was in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate for forty-seven days after it passed the other House.

I will not say what motive guided those who managed this bill, but if they had intended to send to us a bill without the necessary appropriations for the usual purposes involved in it, if they had intended to send us a partial bill in order to force us to increase it with necessary appropriations, they could not have devised a better method to accomplish such a purpose than they did by sending to us on the 20th of December this bill which usually comes to us in February, being one of the last appropriation bills reported, because by the early report of the bill to the Senate it was necessary for the Senate to add many items of appropriation that were entirely omitted from the bill by the other House; and thus it was that the bill was swollen from the original amount appropriated by the body in which it originated.

Having said thus much with reference to this particular bill, I want to add that the Senate Committee on Appropriations have endeavored with the time they have had and the opportunities they have had to secure appropriations for all the necessary purposes of our Government, and if when this bill shall finally become a law great and necessary public objects shall be found to be omitted, it will not be the fault of the Senate of the United States, but the fault must lie elsewhere.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa what disposition was made of the $60,000 amendment inserted in regard to the light-house at Cape Fear?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation for the Cape Fear light-house is left in. There were some modifications of phraseology in it. Also the Northwest Seal Rock light-house appropriation is retained.

Mr. BECK. I do not know that I care to add much to what was said by the Senator from Iowa. Whatever fault we may find with this bill as it now is, it is the very best that can be had at this session of Congress; and whatever may be left out of it, there is nothing in it, so far as I am able to judge, that is not absolutely necessary for the public service, and many of the things that are left will not injure the public service materially by being left out.

It would have been much more economical, in my judgment, to have adopted and maintained the policy suggested by the Senate committee, particularly in regard to public buildings, so as not to deprive ourselves of the use of such buildings. The small buildings can be completed for perhaps 20 per cent. less if the contract is made at once, than they can be if they are postponed and partial contracts made. With all the paraphernalia of superintendents, clerks, and watchmen they are continued for two years instead of one. The rent would be saved to the Government that the Government is now paying for other buildings. But we could not obtain consent in many cases.

Take for instance the Pittsburgh building, which illustrates it better than almost any other. We have spent about a million dollars at Pittsburgh and have to spend a million or so more to complete the building. The House of Representatives saw fit to appropriate $50,000 to continue the building. The Senate committee inserted $200,000. Why? Because the Supervising Architect came to us and said, "$50,000 will do no good; I can make no contract with that. Strike it out altogether, or give us $200,000 with which we can buy stone, go on and make other contracts, and continue the building in good faith." That the Senate inserted. That is part of the increase and that is the character of increase about which a good deal of complaint is made. We had to strike it down to $150,000 in order to get an agreement. I think it is just that much loss to the Government.

So the buildings at Worcester, Springfield, Los Angeles, and other places are in the same category. Where we could not have our own way we had to do the best we could, and we had to keep the buildings going with as much as we could get.

It is said that $1,600,000 has been striken out. Of course it has. We proposed to pay $275,000 to buy the building at the corner opposite the Capitol, owned by General Butler. I do not think the Government could erect as good a building to-day for $500,000, and we are paying rents to the amount perhaps of $150,000 a year in this city besides all the public buildings. The Butler building is adjacent to the House of Representatives. If they did not see fit to buy that, they might have proposed some other arrangement.

We knew we had to have a marine hospital at New York, and the Senate saw fit to put in $250,000 for that purpose, but on examination we concluded it was well enough to let that go and have further investigation in regard to it.

For the Mexican boundary survey the Senate appropriated $100,000, and for the building for the Library of Congress $250,000.

The items I have alluded to make $825,000, half the amount that is said to be saved.

For the terraces about the Capitol we gave up $125,000. I was stubborn about that myself, and in favor of finishing in one year the approaches to the Capitol, but the House allowed $125,000 this year and $125,000 for next year. That meant that we should be having foul air pumped into our nostrils all through the next long session of Congress. I said that work could be done in one year beyond all peradventure, and if the Architect could not do it we would find a man who could. They can close up the terraces on the west end of the Capitol and put all the men they want at work and do it this year, and let us have some comfort during the long session, instead of being annoyed as we are now. I hope that if we have not got men now who can do it, we shall find men who will do it.

There are many people in all these Departments and superintending this Capitol, like the ring that surrounded the Navy Department and others, that are like old rats running in ruts and retiring to their holes, so that if they get out of that track and on fresh ground they can not get on. The sooner we get the infusion of fresh blood into a few things here the better it will be for the country.

I do not mean to talk politics, but things are allowed to drag on and drag on and nothing is done. For the great Library $250,000 ought to be added, and the amount ought to have been $300,000. Indeed we ought to have demanded $500,000, and let the officers make contracts and go on with the work and not let it hang four or five years as it will under the system we are now pursuing.

We found many other things, which I only mention as an illustration to show the good faith with which the Senate committee was endeavoring to carry on the public service. We found that a new light-house district had been made on the Upper Mississippi from Memphis to Saint Paul, and up the Missouri River. For those new districts a tender was absolutely necessary. We had to insert $40,000 for that, and after a long struggle we maintained it.

At the Northwest Seal Rocks Island, about which the Senator from Michigan inquired awhile ago, we gave $20,000 in addition to the $100,000 appropriated, and were informed that unless it was done the Light-House Board would have no material to go on; and while $100,000 would do now, they would be left bare for next year, and no further progress be made. We have spent $170,000 there already, of which $100,000 has been wasted. We can not show anything for $100,000 out of the $170,000 we have given to that great light-house on the Northwest Seal Rocks, simply because we have given it in driblets, and it has been washed away, the plant destroyed or wasted before we got a start again.

There is, perhaps, no other case that more strikingly illustrates the impolicy of giving small appropriations and erecting a little at a time year after year, than the loss of at least $100,000 at the Northwest Seal Rocks; and therefore we inserted the other $20,000 and maintained it, and it is a good thing to do.

In regard to other things, I only want to mention some of them to show that, while most of us may think we are doing right, I believe that every amendment that the Senate put in, or almost every one, should have been maintained. We gave $60,000 for constructing a revenue-marine steamer for the Southern coast. That was left out by the other House altogether. The steamer that was guarding the Gulf coast in the revenue service from the mouth of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Rio Grande was wrecked or lost so as to be unfit for service a year ago. So there was no coast guard there. We endeavored to prepare a ship at New Orleans, but found it could not be done. She was abandoned.

There is a great coast from the mouth of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Rio Grande, opposite the West India Islands, where smuggling can go on more easily than perhaps in any other part of the country, and the House of Representatives sent us this bill without providing for it, and we had to struggle to have it allowed, but we maintained that and endeavored to secure $75,000 instead of $60,000, but we could not succeed in that respect.

This was the character of items with which we had to deal; and whether we were right or wrong in increasing the appropriations as we did, I assert here that after three weeks of hard work by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and myself as a subcommittee, having often to absent ourselves from work in the Senate, not being able to act sooner because for a long time the reports of many of the Departments were not printed, and we had to get them from the Printing Office as best we could, there was not an improper item in this bill as we reported it and as it passed the Senate, with perhaps one or two exceptions that the Senate added I thought unadvisedly and as not conducive to the interests of the public service. I say that this bill as it passed the Senate was a proper bill. I give the members of the other House equal credit with ourselves for endeavoring to do their full duty; but I say the bill as it is now presented in this conference report contains substantially what is absolutely needed, and the matters that were stricken out can be postponed without great detriment to the Government. You will lose money by it, but no principle is sacrificed and no positive public injury is done.

I think the report of the conference committee ought to be agreed to. I know we can not get anything better.

Mr. HOAR. The statement which the two members of the conference committee, representing different opinions in this body, representing different political parties, have united in making, is a very interesting and a very important one, which I hope will arrest the attention of the American people.

It seems that the persons whom the House of Representatives have clothed with a very large authority in dealing with the questions which affect the public expenditures have undertaken to do what in the end is to be in the judgment of the servants of the Senate an extremely expensive thing for the Government, increasing in the end the cost of administration, increasing in the end the burden of taxation upon the people, in order—for we can not doubt that—to temporarily mislead persons who do not look far into the subject by making a showing of economy.

Mr. President, that is bad enough; and unless some other public inconvenience or mischief were occasioned by our refusing our concurrence in this result ought not to be submitted to by the Senate if that were all. But I think it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to what seems to me a much graver evil, one which threatens in substance a revolutionary change in the constitutional methods of government which have existed in this country since its foundation.

What is the effect of this holding back the appropriation bills until the last seven or ten or fifteen days of the session of Congress, a session which is to expire by constitutional limitation on the 3d day of March, and on whose expiration a large proportion of the persons who have been selected to administer the Government for the past two years are to go out of office? The result is that unless the House and Senate both submit to the dictation of some three or four men who happen to be on the Appropriations Committee, members of the majority on the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, either the great appropriation bills fail, and an extra session becomes necessary, and not only are the people of the United States put to the great cost and inconvenience of an extra session of Congress, but the measures of Government which belong to a particular term go over to be enacted by and submitted to persons who are not chosen for that term; so that the House of Representatives and the Senate as constituted for that period of two years are utterly deprived of all constitutional authority or power over the subject.

Mr. BECK. I would be very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts if he would allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. I do not hear the Senator entirely.

Mr. BECK. I ask leave to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts, which I thought he knew more about than I did, and I hope he will think of it, so that either by a rule or by a joint resolution of both Houses we shall require that all the general appropriation bills shall be sent to the Senate at least two weeks before the day of final adjournment.

Mr. HOAR. There has been for thirty years, I believe, among the rules of the House of Representatives a provision that every appropriation bill should be laid before the House of Representatives in the first thirty days of the session.

Mr. BECK. That has been repealed for the last eight years.

Mr. HOAR. It never was obeyed.

Mr. BECK. But the Senate could serve notice, and then the Senate would see where the responsibility was if the requirement were not obeyed after such a joint resolution was passed.

Mr. HOAR. What is the result of this proceeding? It not merely compels the Senate and the House both to submit, under this penalty of an extra session, to the dictation of these three or four men, but it crowds out of the other House the consideration of all other important measures which do not come within the control of that Committee on Appropriations.

Why, Mr. President, it is perfectly notorious that this body has passed bill after bill and passed with substantial unanimity bills having no political significance, bills matured by able men on both sides of this Chamber and having the indorsement of their great authority, and because three or four persons clothed with the authority of the House of Representatives chose to oppose them they could not get the consideration of that body, although there is no manner of doubt that nine-tenths of the House would be in their favor if they were brought up. That is a condition of things which in the time of our fathers, who were in the habit of studying constitutional principles and of insisting that rules of public procedure should be observed which would last as a good rule for all time and all occasions through the generations and through the centuries, would have caused a revolution.

Mr. President, who does not know that is familiar with the course of legislation for the last three or four Congresses that measure after measure which has received substantially the unanimous approval of this body, representing thirty-eight American States, and which would receive substantially the unanimous approval of the other House of Congress, representing the people more directly, are not permitted to be taken up because the appropriation bills, held over the head of all the business, are used to crowd them out as one, two, three, or four persons happen to disapprove them?

Mr. President, further than that, I read the other day in the papers a letter from a gentleman who was said in the paper where I saw the correspondence to be the Speaker of the House of Representatives—I will not undertake here to say whether he holds that office or not—and it was addressed to a gentleman who was said in the same paper to hold the office of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives, and to two other gentlemen of wide national reputation holding high positions in the confidence of the Democratic party.

These three gentlemen wrote to the Speaker a complaint that they had not been recognized by him for the purpose of moving a measure for the revision of the tariff which the American people desired, and which a majority of that body also desires, and the Speaker replied, stating as his reason for refusing to recognize on the floor of the body over which he presided these gentlemen to make that motion, that he did not approve of the measure which it was proposed to move, and therefore would not recognize any one for the purpose, and said that if those gentlemen would carry their proposed revision of the tariff into a Democratic caucus, and would submit to what should turn out to be the view of that caucus on the subject, whether it was the view of the House of Representatives as not, he then, in his discretion, would permit that motion to be made.

I say that up to any time within the last twenty years such an attempted usurpation of power would have created a storm in this country which would either have driven the usurper out of sight or would have occasioned a revolution in the Government itself.

Under the Constitution which our fathers framed a majority of the representatives of the States and a majority of representatives of the people have a right to make or to change the laws under which the people are to live, subject of course to the veto power of the Executive; and here is a claim advanced in the face of the American people, a claim alike overthrowing the constitutional powers of the Senate and the constitutional powers of the House, degrading both of the great public legislative bodies which exist under the Constitution, and degrading every single member of that great assembly, the House of Representatives, which ought to be the most dignified legislative body on the face of the earth, that the question whether a majority, whether two-thirds, whether four-fifths, whether nine-tenths of that body shall be permitted to pass laws is to be decided in accordance with the opinion of the particular gentleman who happens to sit in the Speaker's chair.

Who does not know that under the existing condition of things legislation is conducted in this country under an arrangement by which if every man in every one of the legislative bodies in this country but two or three happens to desire a thing to be done, it can not be done unless those two or three happen also to give it their approbation. There has not come before the American people a question for determination since the end of the war which involved so grave results and upon which their interests so much are dependent as the question whether this attempted usurpation of power shall be permitted to go on. It is new; it is unheard of until lately; it is recent.

Why, Mr. President, Henry Clay was supposed to have a pretty strong will. Mr. Clay would no more have dared to assert such an authority when he was Speaker of the House of Representatives than he would have ventured to cross the Niagara River twenty rods above the falls in a canoe.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I want to know whether it is in order for a member of the Senate to arraign the House of Representatives or any member of the House of Representatives from his seat in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I have kept within the rule very carefully.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I submit the question to the President of the Senate whether the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts in arraignment of the House of Representatives, or any members of the House of Representatives, on the floor of the Senate, or of the Speaker of the House, is parliamentary; whether it be in harmony with that courtesy which ought to obtain between the two Houses?

Mr. HOAR. I claim that I have the right to speak of a public assertion of authority which I find stated in the press as there stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of order having been raised by the Senator from Delaware, it must be decided without debate. The Chair understands that the language of the Senator from Massachusetts has been strictly within the rules prescribed by this body.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, Mr. Blaine, under whom many of us served in another place, is supposed generally to have a pretty strong will and a pretty strong desire to have accomplished in the administration of this country the things which he thinks ought to be done. I served in the House of Representatives with that accomplished gentleman for eight years, and for six of them he was its Speaker, and the humblest Democrat, when we had a majority of two-thirds or three-fourths and nearly four-fifths, as every man on this floor who knows the facts will bear me witness, was permitted to make his motion to suspend the rules. Every Monday morning and the last ten days of the session being assigned for that purpose, they used to put us on record with all sorts of contrivances and in all sorts of ways, calling the yeas and nays on a question which they thought the Republicans would not like to commit themselves on.

It is true that occasionally when the business pressed within the last twenty-four or forty-eight hours Mr. Speaker Blaine would exercise his selection of persons who rose together at the same time to be recognized, in accordance with what he believed to be the will and desire and convenience of the majority of the House, and that was all. But who ever heard in Mr. Blaine's day of a member desiring to be recognized, rising first to be recognized, to move the adoption of a measure which would pass unanimously if it were proposed, or unanimously with the exception of a vote or two, and being informed that the presiding officer had determined that it was not expedient to have any more measures of that kind proposed during the present session and the present Congress?

Mr. President, this is a question which goes clear down to the fundamental rocks upon which our constitutional system and structure are erected. I would rather have the Emperor of Russia or King Bomba to rule over me, and to have it acknowledged and avowed, than to have under the pretense of constitutional forms the right denied to my representative to utter the will of the American people as constitutionally expressed by the voice of a majority in each branch. The way this thing goes on is, first, the assertion is made in the service of a party, next it is made in the service of some particular clique or faction or section of that party; but it is a very delightful and fascinating power and very soon it comes to be used in the service of the personal whim or personal ambition or personal authority of the two or three gentlemen in whom the power is admitted to be vested.

It has seemed best to a majority of the Senate to submit to having the laws required by the public, after being approved unanimously by this branch, never submitted to the other at all, to be eviscerated and emasculated by the process which has been here described. We have not thought it desirable, in the state of public feeling, the condition of business, the varying sentiment of the American people, to insist upon an extra session of Congress; but I wish to give notice for one that in my judgment this is the last time when this usurpation will be submitted to.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I was called out for a while during the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I entered the Chamber in time to hear what seemed to me a most remarkable tirade against the Speaker of the House of Representatives. That gentleman needs no defense at my hands. I had supposed that in the Senate of the United States under the rules and under the proprieties of the occasion comments upon the action of the Speaker would not be indulged in here.

I have only to say that there is no man in Massachusetts or outside of that State who will attack either the integrity, or the honesty, or the ability of the Speaker of the present House of Representatives with impunity in his presence, and it would be more manly for some gentleman on the floor of that House to rise and say whatever it may be deemed proper to say in regard to his action, than to come into a House where he can not be heard, and about which he has no right to speak, and attack him here while there are one hundred and fifty partisans of the Senator from Massachusetts on the floor of the other House, all of whom have a right to make whatever attack they please.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, if he will allow me, whether he denies a single assertion of fact that I made, whether he does not agree with me in opinion about them, and whether he does not think it an invasion of the constitutional powers of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BECK. I have no right to know on this floor whether the statements made are true or not. If they are true and are invasions of rights, they are invasions of rights of the House of Representatives, and there are Representatives there able to take care of themselves, and the Speaker of the House is able to take care of himself against any and all who may see fit to attack him. And I say here, though Mr. Blaine's name may be brought up and the other great Speakers of the House of Representatives may be brought forward and held up in contrast with the present Speaker, that there never has been in that chair a man of more undoubted integrity, a man of greater fairness or of more ability than the present Speaker of the House. And it is not fair—I will not use any stronger word—to attack him behind his back when no man dares to attack him before his face.

Let the Senator from Massachusetts go over to that House and ask the ablest Republican on that floor to make these charges and I will guarantee that that Speaker will come down from the chair and refute all slanders they dare to put upon him. I have no idea that he has ever violated any rule of that body, any rule of courtesy, any rule of honor, or that he has done any act which was either revolutionary or wrong since he has been presiding over that great body; and no man will dare to charge him with it. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will go now and tell the bitterest or most malignant partisan on that floor to rise in his place and make the charges there that he has made here, and they will be answered to the satisfaction of the country.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have made no criticism affecting the personal honor or the personal character of anybody. I have spoken, when the question before the Senate was what the Senate could accomplish of its constitutional duty to the American people in legislation, of the obstacle to the accomplishment of that constitutional duty. I spoke of it on the floor of the Senate when, by the statement of the honorable Senator from Kentucky himself, it was brought before the Senate for discussion. I spoke simply of a usurpation of constitutional power which blocks legislation for which he and I are responsible, blocks the legislation which requires the assent of the Senate for its consummation, blocks the legislative measures which this body unanimously, with the approbation of both sides of the Chamber, had sent over to the other branch for consideration; and I alluded, as was my right and as was my duty, to a correspondence published for the information of the American people in which a high public officer declared that he would not submit and did not submit to that body a policy of tariff revision which it is notorious a majority of the body over which he presided would favor, because he himself did not approve of it, and said that he would submit such as should be presented to a Democratic caucus and approved by a majority of that body.

That correspondence was given to the public that the public might discuss it. If I had been a member of the House of Representatives I should have discussed it there. I discuss it in the body of which I am a member. I discuss it as an American citizen. I discuss it as an American Senator; and I say—and I do not believe there are five men on that side of the Chamber who differ with me—that it is a total reversal and revolution of the constitutional methods of procedure in legislation in this country.

Will the Senator from Kentucky now tell me whether, on his responsibility as a Senator, he will say that he approves of a claim on the part of the presiding officer of any parliamentary body that he will not submit measures to that body, whatever may be the opinion or the will of its majority, which he himself does not approve?

Where is the Blair educational bill? Where is that great and beneficent measure for carrying the light of education into the darkened minds of so many American citizens, so many American sovereigns, so many persons upon whose intelligent votes the Government of this country, the future of this Republic, with its costly freight of liberty and hope, is to depend? There is not a Senator in this body who does not know that a large majority, probably two-thirds, of all those persons anywhere whose assent is necessary to the passage of that benignant measure, would vote for it eagerly if the constitutional right of men to move its passage were recognized.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, parliamentarian as he is, if he is prepared to assert that as a member of this House he has a right upon this floor to criticise a member of the other House?

Mr. HOAR. I am prepared to assert on my responsibility as a member on this floor that I have the right to do everything I have done and to say everything I have said.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator answer my question? Has he the right upon this floor to criticise a member of the other House for his official action?

Mr. HOAR. I have answered the Senator's question in its substance. There is an old, effete rule that you shall not allude by name to a member of the other parliamentary body or the proceedings of the other House, but it is as well settled as that rule itself that you may allude, without calling the name, in substance. It is the commonest thing in the world in the English Parliament, from which that rule came——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask another question?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; I am answering that.

It is the commonest thing in the world in the English Parliament, from which that rule came, for members of the House of Commons to criticise the Lords, or the reverse, simply using the euphemism of "another place;" and it has been the habit of Congress from its foundation.

I have a perfect right to state that certain things are done, or certain things are said, "in another place," when every member of the Senate will suppose I mean the House of Representatives, and to go on and discuss it as freely as I choose; and the parliamentary right to do it is as well settled as any rule of parliamentary law whatever, and I have kept carefully within it.

Mr. HARRIS. Now, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. No, I prefer to make my speech myself. I shall sit down in a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose to ask a question.

Mr. HOAR. I am saying something else.

I repeat, I say nothing which involves any personal disrespect whatever to the accomplished gentleman and public man to whom the Senator from Kentucky just now referred. My respect for him is as great as is the Senator's in all the particulars that make up the character of the gentleman or the able and accomplished statesman.

I am not dealing with that; I am dealing with an assertion of constitutional power, and an assertion of constitutional power which, if it pass unrebuked and be successful, will turn the whole legislative mechanism of this country into a farce, which has already deprived this one branch of its constitutional authority, which has already lowered the influence and the character and the importance of the great office of Representative of the American people, which has already reduced a great assembly, to which John Quincy Adams went from the Presidency, as by an ascent, to the mere function of registering the decrees of three, or four, or five, or six men important in the councils of their party, and which now, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has so well shown, is in danger of reducing and lowering the constitutional power and dignity and importance of the Senate itself.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that within twenty hours of the final adjournment of this Congress by constitutional limitation, with a large number of important bills yet to be acted upon, I do not wish to go into any wrangle or talking match about this thing; but a question was asked me whether I agreed to what Mr. Carlisle had done.

Mr. HOAR. I shall be obliged to call the Senator from Kentucky to order for naming the Speaker.

Mr. BECK. "Mr. Carlisle" may be a man in the galleries; I did not say "Speaker of the House of Representatives." [Laughter.]

Knowing that the Senator from Massachusetts did not like to be interrupted when making a speech, I did not answer him at the time he made the statement, and I therefore now ask my colleague to yield until I do. I only wish to repeat what I said before, that I do not believe that distinguished gentleman has done any wrong, and I do not believe that any man will dare to say in his presence what has been said on this floor behind his back without having an answer that he would not like to hear, and that would be a thorough vindication of the gentleman referred to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I am disposed to regret that my colleague found it necessary in his own judgment to make any reply to the unwarranted and inexcusable tirade the Senator from Massachusetts has seen fit to indulge in.

It may be true that the rules of the Senate have become moss-grown and old and effete to the Senator from Massachusetts, as he describes them, but it does occur to me that the universal rules of propriety and self-respect and common decency should yet prevail among us.

I do not admit that the Speaker of the House of Representatives needs any defense from an attack like that, emanating from such a quarter. The idea of the Senator from Massachusetts assuming to stand on this floor and preach homilies on non-partisan legislation is more absurd than the devil prating about the scheme of universal redemption. [Laughter.]

Wherever the name of that Speaker of the House of Representatives is known throughout this country, or the world, it is recognized as a synonym for all that is decent, for all that is fair, and for an immense deal that is able. His Republican colleagues in that House, outside of the mere formal methods of attesting their appreciation of these great properties and qualities, as is known to every man in this land, by enduring mementoes and souvenirs have given proof of their appreciation of the falsity of the charge that is here lodged against him. He needs no defense at the hands of my colleague nor at my hands. Where he is known an assault like that will not hurt him, and I flatter myself that even in the State of Massachusetts, where the Senator is known and seems to be appreciated, it will not work a great deal of harm.

The Senator comes here and makes this assault not on a member of the House of Representatives alone, but on the presiding officer and the constituted exponent and mouthpiece of the co-ordinate branch of the legislative department of this Government; and when pressed by inquiry by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] as to whether under the rules he had the right to do this, the Senator from Massachusetts makes answer, if answer it can be denominated or termed, that, with his permission, I will say is neither creditable to his candor nor to his manliness.

Mr. HOAR. Why, Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With a great deal of pleasure, because I am in the habit of seeing the Senator from Massachusetts interrupt everybody and refuse to allow anybody to interrupt him. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will suspend. The Chair takes this occasion to remind the spectators that manifestations of applause or disapprobation are expressly forbidden by the rules of the Senate, and this order will be enforced.

Mr. HOAR. What assault does the Senator from Kentucky refer to? What particular thing have I said in regard to the gentleman to whom the Senator refers in which he differs with?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator and tell him in many. When he denominates the Speaker of the American Congress a usurper, I deny that and say that is not true, and that nothing in the record will sustain such an assertion. When he says that the Speaker of the American Congress refuses to submit, or stated that he would not submit, a proposed revision of the tariff or taxing system of this country because it emanated from one faction of his party, while he was ready and willing to submit a proposition that should come from another faction of his party, I deny that, and say that it is not true.

Now, I trust the Senator is answered. If an issue upon a statement made by him is what he is courting, he has the answer.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator read the letter to which I referred?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not; but I have heard it, and I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to one, at least, of the many mistakes that he has made in this attack. He was not discussing the letter that he read, but he was discussing, in violation of all rules—if I had as little regard to the rules of the Senate as he has manifested, I would say in utter derogation of all the suggestions of decency—the action of a member of another House and the Speaker and presiding officer of that House.

There is no necessity for an elaborate defense here. I simply desired, Mr. President, when I rose to express the hope that the day would come when the State that furnished to the Senate Chamber of this country such men as Daniel Webster and Rufus Choate would at last find opportunity to honor itself and do an essential service to the American people by sending a Senator here who was at least the peer of the present Speaker of that House in all that goes to constitute fair-dealing, high character, ability, and patriotism.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I would simply suggest that we proceed now with what is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agreee to the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 2d instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto; and

An act (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French.

The message also announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels, in certain cases, and for other purposes; and

An act (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

Mr. TELLER. When I was interrupted we had just reconsidered the vote by which this bill was passed. I now desire to have reconsidered the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection. The question now is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. TELLER. I now ask to have the Senate amendments disagreed to, so as to bring the House bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that the vote by which the amendments were agreed to may be reconsidered. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. CONGER. Let the amendments be read.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senate will give me their attention a moment I can show that the amendments need not be read.

Mr. CONGER. I supposed it was another bill. I do not ask it on this bill. I supposed it was a bridge bill.

Mr. TELLER. The House of Representatives sent to us a bill, which the Committee on Public Lands reported a substitute to take the place of, for the purpose of organizing a land district in what is called No Man's Land, south of Kansas. I do not think that anybody has any desire to have it read. I wish to get the bill before the Senate so that we may accept the House bill in lieu of the one passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendments made to this bill in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments were non-concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following, to wit:

"An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

"First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war, and commonly known as "war claims," or to hear and determine other claims which have heretofore been rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same.

"Second. All set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States against any claimant against the Government in said court: Provided, That no suit against the Government of the United States shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

"SEC. 2. That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have such concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds $1,000 and does not exceed $10,000. All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without a jury.

"SEC. 3. That whenever any person shall present his petition to the Court of Claims alleging that he is or has been indebted to the United States as an officer or agent thereof or by virtue of any contract therewith, or that he is the guarantor, or surety, or personal representative of any officer, or agent, or contractor so indebted, or that he, or the person for whom he is such surety, guarantor, or personal representative, has held any office or agency under the United States, or entered into any contract therewith, under which it may be or has been claimed that an indebtedness to the United States has arisen and exists, and that he or the person he represents has applied to the proper Department of the Government requesting that the account of such office, agency, or indebtedness may be adjusted and settled, and that three years have elapsed from the date of such application and said account still remains unsettled and unadjusted, and that no suit upon the same has been brought by the United States, said court shall, due notice first being given to the head of said Department and to the Attorney-General of the United States, proceed to hear the parties and to ascertain the amount, if any, due the United States on said account. The Attorney-General shall represent the United States at the hearing of said cause. The court may postpone the same from time to time whenever justice shall require. The judgment of said court or of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which an appeal shall lie, as in other cases as to the amount due, shall be binding and conclusive upon the parties. The payment of such amount so found due by the court shall discharge such obligation. An action shall accrue to the United States against such principal, or surety, or representative to recover the amount so found due, which may be brought at any time within three years after the final judgment of said court. Unless suit shall be brought within said time, such claim and the claim on the original indebtedness shall be forever barred.

"SEC. 4. That the jurisdiction of the respective courts of the United States proceeding under this act, including the right of exception and appeal, shall be governed by the law now in force, in so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and the course of procedure shall be in accordance with the established rules of said respective courts, and of such additions and modifications thereof as said courts may adopt.

"SEC. 5. That the plaintiff in any suit brought under the provisions of the second section of this act shall file a petition, duly verified, with the clerk of the respective court having jurisdiction of the case, and in the district where the plaintiff resides. Such petition shall set forth the full name and residence of the plaintiff, the nature of his claim, and a succinct statement of the facts upon which the claim is based, the money or other thing claimed, or the damages sought to be recovered, and praying the court for a judgment or decree upon the facts and law.

"SEC. 6. That the plaintiff shall cause a copy of his petition filed under the preceding section to be served upon the district attorney of the United States in the district wherein suit is brought, and shall mail a copy of the same, by registered letter, to the Attorney-General of the United States, and shall thereupon cause to be filed with the clerk of the court wherein suit is instituted an affidavit of such service and the mailing of such letter. It shall be the duty of the district attorney upon whom service of petition is made as aforesaid to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of petition upon him, unless the time should be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counter-claim, set-off, claim for damages, or other demand or defense whatsoever of the Government in the premises: Provided, That should the district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the plaintiff shall not have judgment or decree for his claim, or any part thereof, unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the court.

"SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the court to cause a written opinion to be filed in this cause, setting forth the specific findings by the court of the facts therein and the conclusions of the court upon all questions of law involved in the case, and to render judgment thereon. If the suit be in equity or admiralty, the court shall proceed with the same according to the rules of such courts.

"SEC. 8. That in the trial of any suit brought under any of the provisions of this act, no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government. Section 1079 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed. The provisions of section 1080 of the Revised Statutes shall apply to cases under this act.

"SEC. 9. That the plaintiff or the United States, in any suit brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are now reserved in the statutes of the United States in that behalf made, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The modes of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, and as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governin appeals and writs of error in like causes.

"SEC. 10. That when the findings of fact and the law applicable thereto have been filed in any case as provided in section 6 of this act, and the judgment or decree is adverse to the Government, it shall be the duty of the district attorney to transmit to the Attorney-General of the United States certified copies of all the papers filed in the cause, with a transcript of the testimony taken, the written findings of the court, and his written opinion as to the same; whereupon the Attorney-General shall determine and direct whether an appeal or writ of error shall be taken or not; and when so directed the district attorney shall cause an appeal or writ of error to be perfected in accordance with the terms of the statutes and rules of practice governing the same: Provided, That no appeal or writ of error shall be allowed after six months from the judgment or decree in such suit. From the date of such final judgment or decree interest shall be computed thereon, at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, until the time when an appropriation is made for the payment of the judgment or decree.

"SEC. 11. That the Attorney-General shall report to Congress, and at the beging ning of each session of Congress, the suits under this act in which a final judgment or decree has been rendered, giving the date of each, with a statement of the costs taxed in each case.

"SEC. 12. That when any claim or matter may be pending in any of the Executive Departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such Department, with the consent of the claimant, may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said Court of Claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of laws shall have been found, the court shall report its findings to the Department by which it was transmitted.

"SEC. 13. That in every case which shall come before the Court of Claims or is now pending therein under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon under existing laws or under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and report its proceedings therein to either House of Congress or to the Department by which the same was referred to said court.

"SEC. 14. That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the Court of Claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled 'An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed, or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.

"SEC. 15. If the Government of the United States shall put in issue the right of the plaintiff to recover the court may, in its discretion, allow costs to the prevailing party from the time of joining such issue. Such costs, however, shall include only what is actually incurred for witnesses and for summoning the same and fees paid to the clerk of the court.

"SEC. 16. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. R. TUCKER,
GEORGE E. SENEY,
A. X. PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the question of agreeing to that report I want to say something that has nothing to do with it, but at the same time is as much in order under the rules as a great deal that has been said.

I wish to suggest, in order to expedite business and prevent us from getting into a maelstrom, a proposition which I think will be conceded to be fair on all sides. It is this, that four bills under the charge of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] relating to public buildings, one of which is a veto message and the others are Senate bills for public buildings at Paterson, N. J., Richmond, Ind., and Jacksonville, Fla., be considered. The Senator from Massachusetts says he will try to get in the Lynn bill, and he can make that motion. I propose that the Senator from Virginia be allowed to have a vote on these four bills. He desires to make some remarks on one of them. Then, so far as my vote is concerned, we will go on with the House bills on the Calendar under the Harris rule, and in that way we shall avoid contention and dispute for the floor.

I make that proposition, and I say that these four bills are not bills of interest particularly on this side of the House, but a majority of them are really of interest to the other side. By that arrangement I think we can avoid a struggle.

Mr. HARRIS. I very much hope that the Senate will agree to the request of the Senator from Ohio, and that we may proceed in that order and avoid a wild scramble for the floor and Senators moving for the consideration of particular bills.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before that understanding is reached I desire to make a motion requesting the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from States courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, passed by the Senate last night with several amendments, among which was one increasing the salaries of the district judges of the United States, and I wish to state my purpose in making this motion. It is to have the bill returned to the Senate so as to enable me to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment relative to the salaries of judges was adopted, in order that if the Senate should conclude to send the bill again to the House it may go there without the incumbrance of that amendment. Unless some such procedure as this is had I feel that we shall not be able to get final action on the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose the Senator from Iowa will get unanimous consent to make that motion now, and ask the House to return the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is my purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill he has named may be requested to be returned from the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOLPH. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon objects. The question recurs on the conference report submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed in the way I have proposed.

Mr. CONGER. I can not consent to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the order of business may be such as has been indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I applied for a day to get the bridge bills through which it is necessary to pass, so as to give them an opportunity to become laws, but one thing or another has put other bills before them here for the last three days, and I shall not give my consent to a request that any other business be taken up until the ten or twelve bridge bills can be heard. They are of more importance than many of these other things, because the want of them is actually delaying the transportation business of the country, and they are scattered all over the United States, and every Senator is interested in some of these bills, or at least in having them considered. They are House bills which the Committee on Commerce have reported favorably, some with amendments and some without.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will just be patient and adopt this rule every bridge bill can be reached, and if it is not adopted none will be reached, because, just as certain as fate, there will be a contest and an unseemly struggle; but if this order is pursued, taking up the House bills, and, where a bill gives rise to much contention or debate, objecting to it and letting it go over, every bridge bill will be passed; otherwise they will not be. I give notice that, so far as I am concerned, I feel it my duty to stand by this proposition, and I will move whenever the opportunity offers to take up the bills named in this programme, and then the House bills generally.

Mr. CONGER. The recommendation of patience I return to the Senator from Ohio to improve upon and cultivate. It belongs there. For two days we have been approaching these bridge bills under the Harris rule and for two days we have not reached the first one of them on the Calendar, and under that process we shall not reach them at all, if the Senate were to remain in session three days longer.

I ask unanimous consent, after the passage of the pending bill, that the bridge bills reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce shall be taken up in their order and disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. House bridge bills?

Mr. CONGER. House bridge bills.

Mr. PALMER. Is there a motion before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the Senator from Oregon is willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONGER. Is there not a request for unanimous agreement to take up the bridge bills?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to decide. The Senator from Ohio had made a previous request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. To which there was objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan now submits another request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall object to any other order except the one heretofore adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Oregon informs me that he will consent to withdraw his objection to the motion I proposed to make, upon condition that it be submitted to a vote. He is not willing to yield unanimous consent. I see no other way to solve the difficulty in connection with this business unless that be done.

Mr. PALMER. I rise to a point of order. I think Senators are not talking to the motion. This is altogether outside the motion now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would reply that there is neither rule nor precedent that requires Senators to speak to the question under consideration.

Mr. PALMER. I thought the proprieties of the case and the expedition of public business might.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The report was concurred in.

DISTRICT ACCOUNTS.

Mr. PALMER. I submit a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DAYTON, OHIO—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under the agreement of the Senate this morning the next subject under consideration is House bills favorably reported on the Calendar under the Harris rule.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask now that the Senate take up the Senate bill 856, a bill returned by the President with his disapproval.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the message of the President of the United States, returning without approval the bill (S. 856) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio. The message of the President will be read.

Mr. MAHONE. It has been read before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the objections of the Executive?

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, in considering the action of the Executive in this matter, which sets aside the deliberate judgment of the legislative department of the Government, it may be well to recur to the considerations which have shaped the policy of the Government in respect to public buildings and governed the action of Congress in this and the seven other similar cases which have fallen under executive disapproval.

The steadily developed policy of the Government, Mr. President, has been, through all changes of parties and differing administrations, to promote the general welfare as its means would allow, and as the increase of population and the progress of civilization demanded.

The encouragement and material aid which the Government has given to the construction of railways, have brought the ocean-bound coasts of the country into close relation with the interior, and bestowed actual value upon the productive resources of a vast theretofore land-locked section of the Union, and made neighbors of sixty millions of people.

Its aid to rivers and harbors and its provisions for the safety of navigation, are but in response to that constitutional purpose of an enlightened care for the "general welfare" which that clause of the organic law was designed to promote.

Its improved and steadily expanding postal system is but responsive to the duty, which is the aim of the governmental creation—such service as shall adequately accommodate all the wants and necessities of organized society and thus best advance the general welfare of the people.

Its duty to provide suitable accommodations for the convenient discharge of the public business, whether of the judiciary, the customs, or the postal service, due regard for "sound business principles" would seem alike to exact; and step by step as the resources of the Government would permit, that duty had been performed and the policy of so providing for the "general welfare," and for the more orderly, convenient, and economical conduct of the public business, had become fairly ingrafted upon the administration of the Government.

Mr. President, the exercise of the respected constitutional prerogative of the Executive, whereby is set the seal of disapproval upon any measure which the legislative department of the Government shall see fit to adopt, lacks in the present case, it is believed, those considerations for the public convenience which it should be the object of the Government to accommodate; and severely lacks that regard for "sound business principles" and that "economy in public affairs which (as we are reminded) has been promised to the people."

While the right to the exercise of this high and delicate power is surrounded with no qualification, it is not believed, Mr. President, to have been conferred for the purpose of revising and defeating the deliberate judgment of the legislative department of the Government by the contrary opinion of a single person, but out of abundant caution as a means of arresting hasty or imperfect and vicious legislation. No such justification can be found and no such pretext is given for Executive disapproval in these cases. It is merely the opinion of a single person against that of the many who compose and represent a co-ordinate power of the Government, involving, Mr. President, no more, if you please, than a mere application of "sound business principles" in the expenditure of public money, or that "economy in public affairs" which might well be left, I submit, for accountability where the responsibility originated.

The Forty-ninth Congress, Mr. President, up to this day has passed 21 bills for the completion—in some cases, and for the enlargement in other cases—of certain public buildings heretofore begun or heretofore constructed, and it has passed 29 bills authorizing the erection ab initio of the same number of such buildings for the accommodation of the public service, located in 11 States and Territories of the Union.

Of the bills comprising this latter class 16 have received Executive sanction and 8 have encountered Executive disapproval. These are:

The bill (H. R. 5546) authorizes the construction of a building to cost $80,000 at Asheville, N. C., for the accommodation of the United States courts and the postal service at that enterprising little town.

The bill (H. R. 5580) authorizes the construction of a building to cost $100,000 for the accommodation of the customs and postal service at the flourishing city of Duluth, Minn. The advantageous situation of this city for conducting the trade of a large area of country with which its connections have lately been improved and are to be multiplied by matured enterprises is demonstrated by a striking development of its commerce and an increase of population to 17,000. The promise is, Mr. President, that we are to have here in the near future at Duluth a city of conspicuous proportions, which might well on "sound business principles" receive that consideration at the hands of the National Government which the bill designated would confer.

The bill (H. R. 1391) authorizes the construction of a building to cost $75,000 at the growing city of Springfield, Mo., for the accommodation of the postal and other service, and for the district court of the United States, which it was believed at the time of the passage of this bill would be fixed at Springfield; meanwhile the bill then pending for that purpose has passed the Congress.

The bill (S. 763) authorizes the construction of a building to cost $100,000, for the accommodation of the United States courts and the postal service at Sioux City, Iowa, one of the most important and enterprising cities of that State, and where the annual rental paid for a post-office is $2,200, and the net revenue of the postal business is over $18,000—the first equal to 2½ and the two to 22 per cent. upon the proposed outlay.

Sioux City, whose population has risen from less than 8,000 in 1880 to over 23,000 in 1886, is the seat of an increasing wholesale and retail trade and of growing manufacturing interests of no mean proportions.

Besides the appropriate accommodations for the postal service which the increase of business and the rapid growth of population demand—and the greater cost to which the Government must surely be subjected on that account, by reason of the higher rentals which follow such results, and against which on "sound business principles" it would seem wise and responsive to that "economy in public affairs which has been promised to the people" to provide—we must not forget, Mr. President, that here at Sioux City, the proposed building is to serve other and more important and urgent public purposes. It is to afford court room for the business of the circuit and district courts of the United States, provide proper office accommodations for their officials, and make safe place for the preservation of the important records of these courts.

By the courtesy of State officials the sessions of these United States courts are now held in the State court-house upon such terms as to time as the business of the State courts allow to be conceded, and we are told by the honorable judge of the United States court for the Sioux City district, "it is impossible (under such circumstances) always to complete the business of a given term without trenching upon the time belonging to another court." Mr. President, the growing business of State and Federal courts here at Sioux City manifestly can not longer be conducted in the one court-room without serious hindrance and delay in the administration of justice, increased court expenses, and costs to litigants.

On "sound business principles" and in pursuance of that "economy in public affairs which has been promised to the people" we have in this case an opportunity and the occasion for a wise and judicious expenditure of public money.

The bill (S. 1162) authorizes the construction of a building to cost $100,000 at Lynn, Mass., for the accommodation of the important postal and customs business of that city.

Lynn has a population of over 46,000 people, not including suburban towns, and a property value of full $30,000,000, and its manufacturing interests, which employs thirteen millions capital and 12,000 workmen, contributes a product of forty millions to the wealth of the country. It is a port of considerable commerce, foreign and domestic. Its contributions to the postal revenue (net) in the past ten years exceed by 90 per cent. the cost of the building which the bill designated would provide in response to such overwhelming just demands of that people, now severed in their necessary business relations with the Government in an overgrown fire-trap.

The bill (H. R. 6976) authorizes the construction of a building to cost $60,000 at Portsmouth, Ohio, for the accommodation of the customs, the postal and internal-revenue business of the Government done there.

Portsmouth is a port of delivery within the customs district of New Orleans and has the promise of an increase of trade which is estimated to amount now to full $10,000,000. Its population has risen from 11,000 in 1880 to 15,000 in 1885. It is the seat of varied manufacturing interests and the headquarters of an internal-revenue district which collects over one million a year.

The business of the Government at Portsmouth and the people of this enterprising, thrifty town are both inadequately and poorly served in rented quarters, where no security is to be found for the mails, and the property of the Government, including an average of $640,000 in stamps which are kept there to meet the public demands.

The bill (S. 206) authorizes the construction of a post-office building to cost $150,000 at Zanesville, Ohio, the largest city of the southern section of that State, located in the center of her grain, coal, and iron region and at the head of navigation on the Muskingum River, the terminus of five important lines of railroad, the seat of large manufacturing interests and of flourishing institutions of learning, all going to make up such considerations of public interests as would seem to invoke the friendly concern of the parental Government.

The bill (S. 856) authorizes the construction of a post-office building, to cost $150,000, at Dayton, Ohio.

Such are the public-building bills, Mr. President, which have failed to receive Executive approval, and Congress is to be congratulated on having its discretion guided by "business principles" in respect to 16 of these bills, and it must endure condemnation on account of the 8 enumerated as failing to conform to the "Executive view of business principles" and that "economy in public affairs" which the Executive had promised the people.

Dayton, Mr. President, is the fifth city in the great State of Ohio, which ranks as the third State in the Union, and whose contributions to the Federal Treasury are annually over twelve and a half millions of dollars. Dayton is one of her most thrifty, prosperous, and progressive cities. It had a population in 1880 of 39,000, and now Dayton has a population of 50,000, and a property value of $20,000,000 in 1880.

It is the terminus of eight leading lines of railway, the seat of extensive manufactures of railway cars, of paper, of stone and hollow ware, of cotton, oil, woolens, and flour, whose products contributed, by the census of 1880, seventeen millions of value annually to the wealth of the country. It is the home of 11 public and 2 Catholic schools; of 47 churches, a public library, and 3 banks. Her own public buildings for the administration of the laws cost nearly three times as much as it is proposed the Government shall expend for a building to accommodate its own business there and for the discharge of its proper duty towards that community.

Mr. President, I submit that refusal to furnish that community with such public accommodations as this vetoed bill would provide does not comport with "sound business principles," nor in any practical sense with that "economy in public affairs which has been promised to the people," but is more in the line of that parsimony which is not true economy; certainly when you consider, Mr. President, that at Dayton the Government is paying for inferior, inadequate, and unsafe accommodations, an annual rental of $3,850, equal to full 2½ per cent. upon the proposed expenditure, for a building to which that State and the people of that city are justly entitled by every consideration which may fairly invoke concern for the "general welfare."

The net revenue of the post-office at Dayton is over $37,500, and the internal-revenue taxes gathered from the people of the district of which Dayton is the center exceed a million and a quarter annually.

It would seem, Mr. President, to be more in accordance with "sound business principles" and with "economy in public affairs" to provide adequate, inviting, and safe accommodations for a community whose contributions to the National Treasury are as imposing as those of that city and State rather than to repel them and refuse that encouragement to architectural taste and the spirit of progress and improvement which the enterprise of that people invites.

It would seem to be more in accord, Mr. President, with "sound business principles" and with true "economy in public affairs" to relieve the Treasury of a part of that increasing surplus which threatens to reach $90,000,000 by the close of the present fiscal year and save the rental of $3,850 at Dayton, rather than refuse to facilitate the public business and comply with the laudable wish of so large a community as we have in Dayton, because, forsooth, they can be served in a rented building at such cost. It is an unwise economy which denies to the public service that safety to its funds, files, and property; that security to its agents and the correspondence of the people; that convenience, economy of administration, and comfort which would follow the construction of the proposed building at Dayton.

Mr. President, I do not question the considerations of public policy which secured Executive approval of the bills for public buildings, where neither the judicial nor customs service are administered, for I know of no case where the duty of other departments of the Government and the just demands of the community directly related to the service rendered do not on "business principles" call for the expenditure of public money in such cases proposed. But, Mr. President, I confess failure to comprehend the "business principles," and to a lack of appreciation for that promise to the people of "economy in public affairs, which while dissenting from the judgment of Congress in respect to the eight bills I have specifically described, approves that judgment in the certain cases to which I am obliged to refer.

I do not understand, Mr. President, the considerations, which on "sound business principles" denies a "public building" at one place upon the pretext that no court of the United States is to be accommodated, and in another approve the expenditure of the public money for such purpose where such courts are not held. Nor do I understand, Mr. President, the changeable interpretation of such "sound business principles" which approves the expenditure of public money for the construction of a public building to accommodate merely the postal service at an inferior town or city and denies the like recognition of the claims of another, which by every consideration of population and values, thrift and importance, are superior.

I do not understand, Mr. President, the true intent and meaning of that "economy in public affairs (which we are told) has been promised to the people," which approves the expenditure of public money where the rental of quarters cost now but 1½ per cent. upon the sum to be expended, and denies it where the cost is 2½ per cent.

The bill of $80,000 for Asheville, N. C., where the United States courts are held and the population is 5,000, and the rents paid for court and post-office accommodations amounts to $250 per annum, is vetoed, and that for Fort Smith of $100,000, where the objects are the same, the population something over three thousand, and the rents paid amount to $360, is approved.

The bill of $100,000 for Huntsville, Ala., where the population may be in excess of 4,000 and the building is to provide accommodations for courts and post-office, has properly received Executive sanction, and the bill of the same amount and for the like purpose at Sioux City, with a population of full 23,000, is vetoed.

The bill of $100,000 for the accommodation of the customs and postal business of the flourishing city of Duluth, with a population of 17,000; the bill of $75,000 for the accommodation of the postal service and the courts now to be held there, at the thriving city of Springfield, with a population of some 20,000; the bill of $100,000 for the building to accommodate the customs and postal business of the city of Lynn, with a population of 46,000, and the immense interests which otherwise backs her claim to that consideration which that bill would confer; the bill of $60,000 for a post-office and customs building at Portsmouth, Ohio, with a population of 15,000; the bill of $150,000 each for post-office buildings at Zanesville and Dayton, with their populations of 20,000 and 50,000, and the great interests which these two cities of that State represent, unhappily have fallen under Executive disapproval.

Yes, Mr. President, such are the bills whose objects in some respect, not conceived, fail to measure up to that self-regulated standard of "sound business principles" which is made the pretext for Executive disapproval, while the bill for a post-office building, to cost $75,000, at Houston, Tex., with a population of 30,000, and other considerations well and sufficiently justifying the recognition so extended, and the bill of fifty thousand for the same purpose at Owensborough, with a population of less than 7,000 and a net revenue of $5,868, are approved.

I do not believe, Mr. President, any Executive heretofore has felt it to be necessary to interfere with the judgment of Congress in respect to such appropriations as these bills propose to make, and yet there has been no time in the life of the Government till now when its Treasury has been burdened with a surplus so large and increasing as to vex apparently the anxiety of the administration, and that of both political parties, as to what process it may be reduced and the overflow arrested.

Mr. President, the construction of public buildings in cases like the one under immediate consideration, where the service of the Government is fixed and its business relations with the community are certain to go on and grow, would seem to furnish a proper field for the judicious expenditure of the public money on "business principles," and certainly an opportunity for advantageous investment of an idle surplus in the interests of wise "economy in public affairs" and the general welfare as well.

Mr. President, no business concern, whether individual or corporate, contents itself to do business in a rented plant any longer than it may be able to provide one of its own ownership, expressly adapted to its peculiar wants, the character of its own business, and permanent in all its features, where permanency and security are attainable.

On purely business principles such, Mr. President, is the established policy of every well-governed concern and corporation that comes to stay, and such is the conspicuous policy of all enlightened governments of ancient and modern times.

It is believed, Mr. President, that scarcely in any other direction can the expenditure of public money be applied with more satisfactory results, if we consider the permanent interests of the Government with respect to duty, economy of administration and revenue, or that of the people in their intimate relation with it, and the service it renders to them.

The outlay is for permanent value, and the object created serves to impress the presence and the concern of the national authority. It sends back among the people a share of the money drawn into the public Treasury, to give employment and currency touching the interests of every State.

The presence of such structures inspires public taste, stimulates enterprise, and gives the country a better class of public and private buildings; it incites emulation and concern for larger comforts in homes and in public places within the circle of population whose business with the Government is there in such structures to be done. They attest, as do the highways of a country, the character, the taste, the enterprise, and the civilization of a people.

I trust, Mr. President, that it may be the judgment of the Senate to pass this bill into law, the Executive disapproval to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are required by the Constitution to be taken on the question.

Mr. VEST. Let the President's veto message be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill 856, entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio."

It is not claimed that the Government has any public department or business which it should quarter at Dayton except its post-office and internal-revenue office. The former is represented as employing ten clerks, sixteen regular and two substitute letter-carriers, and two special-delivery employés, who, I suppose, are boys, only occasionally in actual service. I do not understand that the present post-office quarters are either insufficient or inconvenient. By a statement prepared by the present postmaster it appears that they are rented by the Government for a period of ten years from the 15th day of October, 1883, at an annual rent of $2,950, which includes the cost of heating the same.

The office of the internal-revenue collector is claimed to be inadequate, but I am led to believe that this officer is fairly accommodated at an annual rental of $900. It is not impossible that a suggestion to change the area of this revenue district may be adopted, which would relieve any complaint of inadequacy of office room.

With only these two offices to provide for, I am not satisfied that the expenditure of $150,000 for their accommodation, as proposed by this bill, is in accordance with sound business principles or consistent with that economy in public affairs which has been promised to the people.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 9, 1886.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, this bill for a public building in the garden city of Dayton, Ohio, was introduced by me originally in the Senate, and I desire for a moment to call the attention of the Senate to it.

The general statement made by the chairman of the committee is confirmed by a report prepared by a committee of most intelligent and respectable citizens of that city in regard to the necessity for this building, and I will read it. They set forth briefly the facts, and I know these gentleman to be reliable and among the most respectable citizens of that city. At a public meeting called, representing the commercial, manufacturing, laboring, and property interests of the community, they submit a report, which is signed by George W. Houk, chairman, R. R. Dickey, John K. McIntire, A. D. Wilt, N. Thacker, W. Worman, in which they say:

We are now a city of fully 50,000 inhabitants, with a correspondingly large and growing postal service. The annual revenue of our post-office is about $70,000; the aggregate business about a half million per year. Our manufacturing industries aggregate an actively employed capital of many millions. We have eleven railroads and five national banks, and ever since the inauguration of the internal-revenue system its principal office has been in this city. Our collection district now embraces nine counties, and yields an annual revenue to the Federal Government of near two millions. We have upon the city duplicate personal property amounting to $8,283,000, and real estate aggregating seventeen millions and a quarter. Our county buildings have cost over a half million of dollars.

The city is rapidly increasing in population, business, and resources, and property in the business portion is fast growing in value. Out best business property is worth $1,000 per front foot, but within a suitable distance from our business center there are now eligible sites that can be secured at less than half that cost.

We deem the appropriation proposed sufficient to secure the location and erect such a building as our necessities require. If its location and erection shall be deferred the probability is that within a few years the sites referred to will be built up by private enterprise. Until the present term our post-office accommodations have been disgracefully deficient, and now the Government is compelled to pay an annual rent of $2,700 for a post-office, the lease of which is subject to a termination upon a month's notice.

The internal-revenue offices are located in a two-story brick building, for which a rent of $900 is paid, and in which the accommodations are altogether inadequate. The risk of fire in the post-office and internal-revenue buildings and the valuable public property, money, and records therein contained, is a material consideration.

Rent is also paid for the office of a United States commissioner.

In view of the remoteness of the points from here at which the United States courts are held, it is not improbable that at no distant day terms of these courts will be held in this city for the transaction of the important business of this rapidly growing valley.

In view of the fact, so hastily stated, that the Government is now paying nearly $4,000 per annum rent, without any adequate protection against loss by fire and for totally insufficient accommodations, especially in regard to the internal revenues, and in view of the further fact that the business of this city and of the revenue district of which it is the center, has hitherto paid many millions of dollars into the Federal Treasury, and never received a dollar yet by way of disbursement by direct appropriation for public purposes, we feel justified in urging respectfully the approval of the bill.

I shall not detain the Senate by any extended remarks, but I wish to call attention to the fact that in the various veto messages of the President of public building bills he does not regard population and commercial business and manufacturing interests as of any consequence in determining whether such a bill shall become a law. As I understand it, he puts his veto upon the ground that if there be a United States court held at the place, though there be but one district court of the State and it is held in but one city of the State, a public building shall be erected there, but in no other city where terms of the court are not required by law to be held. In other words, in one State, I think in Kentucky, a town with about 6,000 inhabitants that has not one-eighth of the population or the business importance or the commercial and manufacturing interest sof the city of Dayton, may have a public building erected providing for a court-house; but if there is no term of a Federal court to be held in a city, though like Dayton it has 50,000 inhabitants, it is not to be accommodated with a building, and it is a case of "Federal decoration" in his judgment.

Is the Senate prepared to indorse this idea of the Executive, that there shall be no public buildings erected in cities for any purpose but for the accommodation of the Federal courts? If we are prepared to declare that that is the judgment of the Senate, then we may be assured that at no place in the Union hereafter will there be a public building erected, whatever the commercial necessities demand for accommodating the postal service, unless there is to be a Federal court held there. The consequence will be that 95 or more per cent. of the important towns throughout the country will not be accommodated.

I suppose Senators may differ from the President as to the expediency of erecting these public buildings. I believe for myself that wherever built they have a very happy influence over the condition of society. I believe when the disorderly element, to say nothing of the better element, see on every public occasion and during holidays the flag of the Government raised on these post-office buildings it is an admonition and a notice to them of the presence and the power of the Federal Government, and it has a salutary influence, in my judgment, in that way.

Among other things I believe it is a very proper and true policy of this Government to establish in all the principal cities of the Union a building of its own. In other words, I would prefer that the Government should be the proprietor, the owner of the premises rather than the tenant or lessee.

It is for the Senate to determine whether in the judgment of the Senate we are prepared to say there shall be only a public building for the accommodation of a Federal court, which may sit but one week in a year and may have no great amount of business to discharge, and that that shall be the sole basis of the building. I am prepared for one to vote that any city in this Union which has a population of five thousand shall have a post-office building there, owned and controlled by the Government, and I believe that will be the wiser policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], and I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I see he is not present, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 18; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

A bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

Joint resolution (S. R. 117) to authorize the use of hot water off the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.; and Joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report with sundry amendments the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiences in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed and placed on the Calendar.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

Mr. PLATT rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the Senate now proceed under the Harris rule to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Connecticut to rise with a conference report.

Mr. PLATT. I will wait until the question is put on the request of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. With the understanding that when we reach the bridge bills they shall then all be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. We want to take up the Sioux City bill.

Mr. CONGER. We are to pass the House bridge bills before going on with the others.

Mr. PLATT. I rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut rises to a conference report.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 2159 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1887.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the said bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the word "twelve" the word "twenty," and that the House agree to the same.

PHILETUS SAWYER,
JAMES F. WILSON,
O. H. PLATT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JNO. A. SWOPE,
W. H. NEECE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up the bill (S. 763) which is the Sioux City bill, and stands in the same relation as the Dayton bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask if my motion is not in order, to proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bills favorably reported upon the Calendar, under what is known as the Harris rule. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object if this matter, which belongs directly to the question that has just been disposed of, shall now be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. I must object to that until the bills which are on the Calendar of the same class with the Dayton bill are voted on. I think we can dispose of them in a few minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not press my request further at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up the message from the President of the United States returning the bill (S. 763) for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa, to the Senate with his objections thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the message is before the Senate. The message of the President has been once read. Shall it be read again? ["No!" "No!"] If not, the question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when the name of Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, was called). The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 38, nays 19; as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LA FAYETTE—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. HARRISON. I call up now the vetoed bill providing for a public building at La Fayette, Ind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message of the President of the United States returning the bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind., with his objections thereto. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not desire to detain the Senate. La Fayette is a city of nearly 30,000 inhabitants. It is one of the most prosperous and enterprising business places in the State. I hope the Senate will pass the bill over the veto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding? The roll will be called.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill has not yet been taken up, I think, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been taken up.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not understand that the question was put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair will put the question on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no Senator desires it the bill will not be read again. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when the name of Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, was called). The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1255) to authorize the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask to be relieved from further service on the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks to be relieved from further service upon the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships. If there be no objection, that order will be made. Unless there be objection, the Chair will be authorized to fill the vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: Upon the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], the Chair appoints the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

MINNEAPOLIS INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit, reported it with amendments.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNN, MASS.—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask now that the Senate take up a bill of the same character as the one just passed over the veto of the President, being the bill (S. 1162) for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass., to which reference was made in the remarks I submitted to the Senate. No stronger case has been presented to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Let the message be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the President will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the message of the President of the United States returning the bill with his objections, as follows:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill 1162, entitled "An act for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass.

The title of this bill sufficiently indicates its purpose.

Congressional action in its favor appears to be based, as usual in such cases, upon representations concerning the population of the town in which it is proposed to erect the building and the increase in such population, the number of railroad trains arriving and departing daily, and various other items calculated to demonstrate the importance of the city selected for Federal decoration.

The statements are supplemented by a report from the postmaster, setting forth that his postal receipts are increasing, giving the number of square feet now occupied by his office, the amount of rent paid, and the number of his employés.

This bill, unlike others of its class which seek to provide a place for a number of Federal offices, simply authorizes the construction of a building for the accommodation of the post-office alone.

The report of the postmaster differs also in this case from those which are usually furnished, inasmuch as it is therein distinctly stated that the space now furnished for his office is sufficient for its present operations. He adds, however, that from present indications there will be a large increase in the business of the office during the next ten years.

It is quite apparent that there is no necessity for the expenditure of $100,000, the amount limited in this bill, or any other sum, for the construction of the proposed building to meet the wants of the Government; and for this reason I am constrained to disapprove the proposed legislation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 25, 1887.

Mr. HOAR. This is a town of between forty-eight and forty-nine thousand inhabitants; one of the most rapidly growing towns in the country. It returned two years ago $20,000 income to the Government, and last year $25,000, increasing 25 per cent. in a single year. It is the largest shoe town in the world and the strongest case that has been presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the Executive to the contrary notwithstanding? The roll will be called.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. SABIN. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. ALDRICH (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. WALTHALL. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin Mr. SPOONER].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—36.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two-thirds having voted in the affimative, the bill is passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointment of civil officers.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now again ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. Pending that I wish to make a conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let this be done first and then the conference report can be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks for the consideration of House bills on the Calendar under the Harris rule, subject to objection.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa. I object, for the purpose of making a suggestion. I desire before that is done to make a motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let my suggestion be adopted and then the Senator can make his motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not desire to object to this order, but simply to say that some time during the evening, and as early as possible, I wish to present a number of reports from the Committee on Printing and have them passed on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand this to be entirely subject to objection at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again ask, Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio that unanimous consent be given for the consideration of House bills favorably reported upon the Calendar, subject to objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the Harris rule.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. SHERMAN. Let this question be taken, and then I will hear the Senator.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida object?

Mr. CALL. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed House bill 2441, and that the House be requested to return the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is the removal of causes bill relative to the jurisdiction of United States courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the object?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I stated the object earlier in the session to be this, to recall the bill with a view of reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was put upon the bill with reference to the salaries of the district judges.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator does not intend to disturb the report of the committee, then?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; only that part of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee did not report that part of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is true.

Mr. DOLPH. Does not the Senator think we shall be more likely to secure the passage of the bill if we leave it as it is, as I understand now in the other House by a two-thirds vote the rules can be suspended and the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in and a conference ordered? If the bill is recalled and the amendments reported by the committee are still retained the bill goes to the House in precisely the same condition it is now, and a single objection, as I understand, would prevent its consideration. Is it dignified for the Senate whenever a motion of that kind is interposed in the House to recall a bill for the sake of undoing what was done deliberately.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw that for my friend from Iowa to finish the motion he has made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope we shall vote on my motion. My judgment is that this action will promote the chances of the ultimate passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—35.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Beck, | Eustis, | Manderson, | Riddleberger, |
| Berry, | Fair, | Maxey, | Vance, |

| Cameron, | Hoar, | Mitchell of Pa., | |

So the motion to recall the bill was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator yield to me to present a report of a committee of conference?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in regard to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it an agreement or a disagreement?

Mr. PLUMB. The two Houses disagree as before in regard to the appropriation added to the bill by the Senate for the purpose of securing mail facilities between the Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States and certain ports of South America. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment to the House bill and ask for a further conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the papers here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the papers are not in possession of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion can not be made until the papers are here. Which House asked the conference?

Mr. PLUMB. The House of Representatives asked for the last conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are the papers?

Mr. PLUMB. Perhaps they are with us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is now informed that the papers are in the custody of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I was under the impression that they were here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order asked by the Senator from Kansas will be agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have a more prominent expression on the part of the Senate on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the conferees then must be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that, if we are to discuss it, I think we ought to take a recess, as we shall be here all night. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

---

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make some reports from the Committee on Printing, and I desire the present consideration of the matters reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object. There is not a quorum yet. We must have a quorum before we go on with business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The want of a quorum being announced, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll and thirty-nine Senators responded to their names, as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Dawes, | Hoar, | Plumb, |
| Allison, | Dolph, | Ingalls, | Sherman, |
| Beck, | Edmunds, | Jones of Arkansas, | Spooner, |
| Berry, | Fair, | Kenna, | Teller, |
| Blair, | Farwell, | Manderson, | Voorhees. |
| Bowen, | Frye, | Miller, | Whitthorne, |
| Cheney, | George, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Williams, |
| Cockrell, | Gorman, | Morgan, | Wilson of Iowa, |
| Coke, | Hampton, | Morrill, | Wilson of Md. |
| Colquitt, | Hawley, | Palmer, | |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum being present further proceedings under the call will be suspended.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask leave to make some reports from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All of them will be subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the reports.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report favorably, from the Committee on Printing, the joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably House joint resolution 243, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 243) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. HOAR. What is meant by providing that the Public Printer shall do the work at the rate of $1.50?

Mr. MANDERSON. The cost of printing these maps shall not exceed $1.35 a map.

Mr. HOAR. Is it a limitation on the style?

Mr. MANDERSON. And that the maps shall not be sold at less than $1.50 each.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds.

DISTRIBUTION OF OFFICIAL REGISTER.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report favorably from the Committee on Printing House joint resolution 229, and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States:

Inasmuch as the Official Register of the United States is now supplied to depositories of public documents as one of the set of Congressional documents in leather binding, the resolution repeals so much of the act of December 15, 1877, as provides for supplying depositories with this document; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to send the Register to such library not a depository as shall be named to him for the purpose by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. MANDERSON. I also report favorably from the Committee on Printing House joint resolution 222, and ask its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator how much this report of the Health Officer will cost?

Mr. MANDERSON. A resolution identical in language with this passed the Senate a few days ago. The House, instead of passing the Senate resolution, has passed a resolution identical in terms. When it was presented by the Committee on Printing to the Senate there was an estimate of the cost. The cost of the volumes, as I recall it, is about 40 cents each.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much will that make in the total?

Mr. MANDERSON. About $1,000.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and passed.

COMPILATION OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing also instruct me to report a concurrent resolution of the Senate returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, and I am instructed by the committee to recommend that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution and the amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees provided for in public resolution 24, first session, Forty-ninth Congress.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to add:

Provided, Said compilation of reports shall include the reports of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The amendment was concurred in.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing also instruct me to report favorably the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1886, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that abstract?

Mr. MANDERSON. The abstract prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, now Mr. Switzler, the same that was prepared for many years by Mr. Nimmo, of the Treasury Department. This is the same number that has been printed for many years for the use of the two Houses, and this as a Senate resolution passed the Senate on the 21st of February, but the House has passed a House resolution and sent it here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On what ground? That the Senate could not originate such a resolution?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think not. It is a mere matter of inadvertence on the part of the other House.

The resolution was concurred in.

REPORT ON PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing also instruct me to report another concurrent resolution and ask its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1886, be printed, and that 9,000 extra copies be printed, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

COMMANDER SCHLEY'S REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition, to report it without amendment and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRODUCTION OF STEEL, ETC.

Mr. MANDERSON. At the request of the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, and by direction of the Committee on Printing, I report the following resolution and ask its adoption:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 157, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that document?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is the report with reference to ordnance and war ships. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] can explain exactly what it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that we asked a few days ago to make a reprint of this. There was a misprint in the resolution by which the Forty-seventh Congress was inserted instead of the Forty-ninth. This is to correct that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the nature of the document?

Mr. GORMAN. Papers laid before committees of the two Houses of Congress in relation to the manufacture of guns.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio calls for the regular order, which is the consideration of House bills. The Chair does not understand whether the conference report, which was presented by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], is now to be taken up for consideration or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was not disposed of before the recess.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order if called for.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kansas to allow me——

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice to my friend from Indiana that I will stick by the order made by the unanimous vote of both sides.

Mr. VOORHEES. There is a House resolution that I desire to call up for passage. It is in the spirit of the order, and I do not know whether it will be reached or not unless I call it up.

Mr. PLUMB. It will take but a few moments to dispose of the conference report on the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course I shall not antagonize a conference report on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report, which was read:

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30' 1888," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. MAHONE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
J. M. RIGGS.
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Kansas to explain to the Senate just how the differences now stand and the effect of the conference on this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. There is but one difference. There has been but one since the beginning; and that is the amendment the Senate made for mail service between the Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States and certain countries in South America. That is the only thing in issue between the two Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand the Senator to mean that the House managers will not agree to do that thing?

Mr. PLUMB. The House managers have declined to agree to it, I think twice on two separate votes. I now move that the Senate further insist on its amendment and ask for a further conference, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK. We have had two conferences in regard to that matter and the House twice by a yea-and-nay vote has refused to insert that provision. It has been said time and again in this body, and I suppose it is the true rule, that when one House proposes a matter and the other House peremptorily refuses to accept it, the House proposing must yield. Twice we have proposed this, twice we have insisted on it; and the House has peremptorily refused to agree to it by a yea-and-nay vote of the House. I do not see any use of pressing this further.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Kansas if the amendment about which the disagreement continues to exist is a subsidy amendment for the mail service referred to?

Mr. BECK. That is the whole of it.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not a subsidy amendment at all. It is a provision for the payment of a reasonable price, within the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for mail service by steamships of American manufacture between the Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States and the Atlantic ports of certain countries in South America.

Mr. HARRIS. I will put my question in a little different shape. Is it that sort of allowance that is sometimes called a subsidy given to ships for carrying the mail?

Mr. PLUMB. Certain persons who are not entirely careful about their speech sometimes have called it a subsidy, but it is not so in any proper sense of the term. It is the application of the same rule to the mail service of the United States on the high seas that is applied in regard to the mail service on the land.

Mr. BECK. No matter what it is called, that is it; and although the House of Representatives and the Senate have had two conferences upon it, the fact appears that it is in no wise necessary for the carrying on of the service. The Postmaster-General and all those connected with the service so show us in their reports, and in every other way in which they have discussed it. It has been before us too long for us now to differ about words.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to ask a parliamentary question. The Senator from Kansas has moved that the Senate further insist. Would it be in order now to move that the Senate recede from its amendment about which there is a disagreement?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in order undoubtedly.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that motion I wish to call the attention of the Senate to how this matter stands and what it is, so that there shall be no misunderstanding by the intelligent people of the United States as to what one House of Congress is desirous to do, and the other House is desirous not to do, by whatever name we call it. This is the provision that the House of Representatives, through their managers, decline to make a part of the law of the land for carrying on this branch of the business of the people whose Government it is supposed we are carrying on:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American Republics, five hundred thousand dollars; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip one dollar per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River.

The proposition which the Senate has again and again submitted to the House of Representatives, and desires to have accomplished, was simply to increase the commercial facilities of intercourse between the United States and the great open markets to which our products and the operations of the industries of the people of the United States may go. That is all. It is not a subsidy, in the offensive sense of that term, that we have been talking about at some time heretofore. It is not a job for any particular steamship line, or anybody else. It is simply to provide for the people of the United States the same facilities for carrying on commerce with foreign and friendly countries who are our neighbors, that we provide for carrying our mails and carrying on commerce between the States, to find outlets for our products, and find inlets for their products that we desire to have. That is all there is to it; and how our good friends at the other end of the Capitol—and I have a right to speak of them in this connection on a conference report—can say that they will not authorize (not compel, but authorize) the trusted agent of this reform and progressive Administration, to give some little aid and facility to intercourse between the people of the United States and these Central and South American Republics, I am quite unable to understand.

I agree entirely with my friend from Kentucky that when we come to the end of such matters, if a co-ordinate branch says that on an affirmative proposition like this it is unwilling to do it and takes that responsibility, we must of course recede, but I think that we might respectfully ask them once more to see if they will not reconsider.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to another trial if it is supposed any good will come from it. I only stated what I did, believing that there was no use, but if the managers desire to make another effort I will stand by them in that as I have done heretofore. Perhaps that is the shorter way out of it.

Mr. HARRIS. The House having twice refused to agree to this amendment and being somewhat in sympathy with the views of the House upon the question, I move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I will make a brief statement in regard to this matter before the vote is taken.

Our minister at the Argentine Republic, Bayless W. Hanna, late of the State of Indiana, has reported to the State Department that the Argentine Republic proposed to pay a compensation of $100,000 per annum to the company which first establishes and maintains regular mail steamship communication between the city of New York and the intervening United States Atlantic ports and the main port, whatever it may be, of the Argentine Republic, and that in the event that an American steamship line is not ready and willing to accept of this compensation, this compensation will be paid to a steamship line composed entirely of vessels belonging to and controlled by foreigners. This is a matter, as I think, of some consequence to us as to whether the first communication which shall be established between the United States and the Argentine Republic and the other republics of that portion of South America shall be by lines of American steamships owned and controlled by American owners, or whether it shall be by means of steamships owned and controlled by foreigners and flying a foreign flag.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Kansas should go one step further in that statement. There is a steamship line from New York to Brazil now, and that line undertook to run one of its steamers down to the Argentine Republic, which was exceedingly anxious to have a steamer, but refused to play, as they said, second fiddle to Brazil in any way. They were a republic, and had the pride of a republic, and they wanted a line of their own, and were willing to pay for it. They were ready to pay $100,000 a year to an American steamship line. Brazil also was indignant, and said they did not propose to have their lines running to the Argentine Republic. So the attempt ended.

Now this steamship company is ready to put two, three, or four steamers at once—the plans and specifications are prepared for two of them—on a line between New York and the Argentine Republic direct, without any connection whatever with Brazil, and thus secure the $100,000, the pay from the Argentine Republic to the United States, if the United States will pay anything for carrying their mails there.

One word further. The Postmaster-General admits that that steamship line has been carrying the United States mails and delivering them at less than the actual cost to the steamship company and the line from Venezuela—

Mr. EDMUNDS. And under protest all the time.

Mr. FRYE. Under protest all the time. The line from Venezuela is getting comparatively nothing for carrying the United States mail—$1,500 a year. I say it is an indecency, an outrage, and ought to be rectified by the Congress of the United States sometime or other.

Here is the Argentine Republic, modeled upon our own in every regard, growing as rapidly as our own to-day in proportion to its size, increasing in every regard, in business prosperity, in immigration, in civilization, in everything that goes to make up a great country; and here we are without one single steamer to its ports, or one from there to ours. There were 348 steamers last year in and out of the Argentine ports, and not one of them with an American flag on it; every one of them English, German, or French. An importation into that country of $100,000,000 a year, and increasing at the rate of nearly 15 per cent. annually, the United States stagnant to-day with overproduction, men out of work, and here an opening for that balance, a chance to send our surplus to a people anxious to have it, an open door for relief, and yet Congress stands directly athwart of progress! Let it talk no more of its love for workingmen and the interests of the poor laborers of the United States. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce to spectators in the galleries that the rules of the Senate expressly forbid any manifestations of disapprobation or of applause. That rule will be strictly enforced. The Chair hopes there will be no repetition.

Mr. BECK. I do not want at this hour of the night and at this period of the session to be threshing old straw. These questions have been argued over and over, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] with his grand voice brings down the applause of the galleries by talking about American labor. He ought not to forget that 90 per cent. of all the mails and all the commerce of this country covering the Atlantic Ocean to-day is carried in foreign-built ships.

Mr. FRYE. I do not forget it.

Mr. BECK. And there is not a ship that leaves the port of New York for any foreign country on the continent of Europe that bears the American flag; and it is all because he and men like him have built a Chinese wall around themselves, pretending to protect American labor, when they are simply robbing the American and making him pay double what anybody is compelled to pay for the same things and surrendering the markets of the world where there are 1,500,000,000 people to trade with. That is surrendered to foreign countries in order to enable a few men to rob our 60,000,000 people at home. That is the way the fact stands, and the record shows that I am right in that. When all the farmers of America have to carry their cotton, their wheat, their cattle, their every product, or their surplus abroad to the markets of the world and sell in those markets in competition with "the pauper labor" of foreign countries without protection anywhere, and they are obliged to pay double for all they want in order to protect American labor, the proposition now presented will not bear argument when it comes to be discussed.

The Postmaster-General to-day is carrying in the cheapest way he can our mails everywhere, and he says he can do it and get better service if not hampered by a subsidy. This $500,000 the House of Representatives think is a repetition of the Roach and the Pacific mail subsidies given to a few men to crowd all other competition out and to put money in the pockets of a few for labor they do not perform.

That is the view the House of Representatives take of it; and let me say to gentlemen on the other side, that if you cut down your tariff taxation, open your ports and go to the world with your trade, then there will be some excuse for the pretense that you are aiding American labor, and not till then. As I say, I do not propose to discuss the question now, but am willing to see it tried over again. It is like the fisheries bill you passed the other day and sent to the other House. The House agreed with you in that. I admit the retaliation is proposed for the fishermen, but the fish trade is only about one-tenth of our trade with Canada. The meaning of it is, if it is reduced down to the bottom facts, that if you will allow a few Gloucester firms to make every man who eats fish in the United States pay $2 a barrel more than the fish is worth, and arrange their own prices, then all your troubles will be settled. All that we have done in this great fishery bill about which so much has been said is to put all the mackerel fisheries in the United States into a syndicate at Gloucester, as bad, as close a corporation as the Standard Oil Company in the petroleum trade, who allow nobody to come into the business except upon such terms as the Gloucester fishermen shall indicate, and make every man who eats mackerel pay $2 a barrel more than the thing is worth; and you call that retaliation against Canada and in the interest of the American people!

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Kentucky shows that he never has read the report of the committee on the retaliatory bill; nor has he ever read the bill itself, because the statement which he makes is not justified by the facts at all.

The retaliatory bill, which the House of Representatives had the good sense to agree with, was a bill which provided that the President of the United States, on proclamation, might prevent any product whatsoever of Canada from being brought into this country.

Where does the Senator get his authority for saying that it was fish alone and in the interest of a Gloucester monopoly? A Gloucester monopoly! Six thousand fishermen sailing every year from the port of Gloucester, and every year one hundred and fifty to two hundred finding graves in the ocean! Six thousand men earning not over $300 a year in the most hazardous business that is known on this earth, and yet the Senator from Kentucky calls it a monopoly! There are as many more on the coast of the State of Maine; and if the Senator should find a war on his hands between this Republic and Great Britain he would have use for every fisherman under the American flag from the ports of Gloucester and along the coast of Maine.

Why, sir, the Senator himself knows that Great Britain acquired these waters which we are contending about to-day by the bravery of these fishermen of the coast of Maine and Massachusetts. Over 11,000 of them were in the war which resulted in the capture of these waters from the French—11,000 New England men achieved that victory.

And no more does the Senator seem to understand the question touching the tariff, which he is so fond of talking about. He talked of threshing over old straw. I have been with the Senator from Kentucky sixteen years in Congress, and I have heard him thresh that old straw of the tariff more than seventy-five times. I can make his tariff speech perfectly, word for word, from beginning to end. He has not inserted in his speech to-day the fact that I am in favor of a tariff whether we need any revenues or not. This he seems to have strangely forgotten.

Mr. BECK. Whenever you do make it you put it in.

Mr. FRYE. If I do make it, it will be because like the Senator I learned it early in life, and, like a parrot, have repeated it from that time up to the present.

The Senator says the tariff is the cause of the decline of our ocean-carrying trade. The Senator ought to know that it is not; he ought to know that before we had this tariff, when we had free trade, or a revenue tariff, our ocean-carrying trade commenced its decline, and in six years under that tariff declined as much in percentage as it ever has under any other six years in the history of our country.

Why, sir, the only effect this tariff has touching our ocean foreign-carrying trade is that our American tariff has increased American wages more than 50 per cent., so that to-day they are twice the wages in England; they are nearly three times the wages in Germany; and they are nearly three times the wages in France. The tariff effected this, I admit; nothing else; and the sailors' wages have advanced with the farmers' wages, and the mechanics' wages; and the only reason we can not run a ship to-day and compete with Great Britain and Germany and France and Italy is that an American tariff has made a sailor's wages $30 under the United States flag, where it is only $20 under the flag of Great Britain, where it is only $18 under the flag of Germany, where it is only $8 under the flag of Italy. Does the Senator from Kentucky want American wages to go down and thus enable us to compete? God save the American workman from the tender mercies of the free-trader from Kentucky! [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. Let us have a vote. I am ready.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate still further insist on its amendment and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moves that the Senate recede from its amendment. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee has precedence. Did the Chair understand the Senator to call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. HARRIS. I have not called for them up to now. I may do so hereafter.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when Mr. WALTHALL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is unavoidably absent to-night and is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. My colleague, if he were present, would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. BECK. I am paired with him. He is absent in conference on the naval appropriation bill. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] is absent, as is the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I announce their pair with each other.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is detained at home by indisposition this evening. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I do not see him in the room. I therefore withdraw my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—10.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry, | Coke, | Harris, | Whitthorne, |
| Camden, | George, | Jones of Arkansas, | Wilson of Md. |
| Cockrell, | Hampton, | | |

NAYS—32.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Dolph, | Hoar, | Payne, |
| Allison, | Edmunds, | Ingalls, | Platt, |
| Blair, | Evarts, | McMillan, | Plumb, |
| Bowen, | Farwell, | Mahone, | Sherman, |
| Call, | Frye, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Stanford, |
| Cheney, | Gorman, | Morgan, | Teller, |
| Cullom, | Harrison, | Morrill, | Williams, |
| Dawes, | Hawley, | Palmer, | Wilson of Iowa. |

ABSENT—34.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Beck, | Fair, | Maxey, | Sawyer, |
| Blackburn, | Gibson, | Miller, | Sewell, |
| Brown, | Gray, | Mitchell of Pa., | Spooner, |
| Butler, | Hale, | Pugh, | Vance. |
| Cameron, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, | Van Wyck, |
| Chace, | Jones of Nevada, | Riddleberger, | Vest, |
| Colquitt, | Kenna, | Sabin, | Voorhees, |
| Conger, | McPherson, | Saulsbury, | Walthall. |
| Eustis, | Manderson, | | |

So the Senate refused to recede from its amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I now renew my motion that the Senate further insist on its amendment, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. Towles, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 118) to print the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward Shakespeare concerning the nature, &c., of epidemic cholera.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill., with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Iowa state the occasion for this special bill?

Mr. ALLISON. The occasion is the passage of the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Not the passage of the Union soldiers' dependent pension bill?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; it is to provide appropriations made necessary by the passage of the Mexican pension bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, why that committee should not have added to this bill the proper provisions for paying pensions and appropriating the money for them, so much as should be necessary, to the other soldiers of the Republic who are in distress and need? What special advantage has Mexico over all the rest of the world in that respect?

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations of course can only recommend appropriations in pursuance of laws passed prior to the appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations have no knowledge of any law which suggests appropriations for other purposes than those already appropriated for in the regular appropriation bill for pensions. In other words, the dependent pension bill, so-called, I understand has not become a law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not?

Mr. BECK. It has become a law and appropriates $76,275,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed the Senator from Vermont was directing his inquiry with reference to the pension bill that was vetoed by the President.

Mr. BECK. Oh, I beg pardon; I thought he was alluding to the regular pension appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I was merely informing the Senator from Vermont that in view of the fact that the President had vetoed the bill referred to, it was not fairly within the provisions of the Committee on Appropriations to report amendments to this bill, based on that.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3184) granting the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah reservations in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1255) to authorize the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

VETOED PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN and others. Regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. There are upon the Calendar over twenty cases of private bills granting pensions, which have been vetoed by the President and reported back from the Committee recommending their passage over the vetoes. At some time I wish to ask the Senate to take up one, or perhaps two, of those cases, and I will treat the action of the Senate in those two cases as significant of the probable action of the Senate upon all, because it is manifestly impossible that each one should be taken up and discussed and voted upon seriatim. I think this is perhaps as convenient as any time, and as this is a privileged matter, I now ask the Senate to proceed to consider Order of Business 1747, being the bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Harriet Welch, vetoed, and that the veto be the subject of consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill——

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that this is debatable. Is the question debatable?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not violate the rule, but I call for the regular order, and I give notice that although I have in every case that could possibly be named voted to give relief to soldiers, yet I know that this is a mere farce, and that the passage of the bill at this time, even by the Senate, will be of no benefit to the soldier while there are bills in regular order which may become laws. I therefore call for the regular order, and I give notice that however meritorious the case may be that is called up, I shall insist upon a vote of the Senate, especially when it was agreed to proceed in a certain order of business on the Calendar, which will enable us to pass bills of great importance, and which will secure relief in many cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will reply to the Senator from Ohio that the regular order is the Calendar of General Orders.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I wish to have the Senate consider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the Senator from New Hampshire has the right to make the motion he has submitted. The order which the Senator from Ohio calls for is that, the Chair supposes, which rests upon the consent given before the recess, that the Senate would proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar favorably reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to objection. The Chair has no means of enforcing that order; it rests upon unanimous consent, and the Chair must recognize the rule that permits the Senator from New Hampshire, if he so desires, to disregard the unanimous consent, and to make the motion he has submitted.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BLAIR. This is a privileged question——

Mr. HARRIS. Is the question debatable?

Mr. BLAIR. It has been debated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is not debatable.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what is generally supposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from New Hampshire was proceeding, the Chair supposed, by unanimous consent. Does the Senator from Tennessee object?

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator from New Hampshire disregards the unanimous consent as to the order of business, he cannot have unanimous consent to make a speech.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to say that——

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. In this matter to which I call attention——

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. I am violating no unanimous consent in making the motion at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will please suspend. The motion that the Senator from New Hampshire has made is not debatable. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message from the President of the United States returning the bill (S. 1383) entitled "An act granting a pension to Harriet Welch," with his objections thereto?

The motion was not agreed to.

MILITARY SITE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. CULLOM. There is a joint resolution which has just come over from the other House with an amendment which it will take no time at all to concur in. I ask the Senate to allow me to take it up for concurrence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again calls for the action of the Senate upon the order that was made before the recess.

Mr. CULLOM. There will be no objection, I think, to the disposition of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given before the recess that the Senate would proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar favorably reported; to which there was no objection.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.

Mr. CULLOM. There is just a slight amendment made by the other House that I desire the Senate to concur in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a vote upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution?

The motion was not agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKS IN RESERVE CITIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will announce the first House bill on the Calendar favorably reported.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am fully in accord with the suggestions of the Senator from Ohio, that we proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar, but I suggest to him and to the Senate that it would be advisable to take up those bills which have come from the other House and to which amendments are proposed here. There have been a few such bills, and by passing upon them first they can go back to the House of Representatives and be enrolled.

Mr. SHERMAN. We shall reach all those cases in due course.

Mr. TELLER. Let the first House bill on the Calendar be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will state the bill last under consideration.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the amendment reported by the Senator from Ohio. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. MANDERSON. I withdraw my proposed amendment in order to hasten a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment is withdrawn. Will the Senate agree to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. That section 3 of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payment," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after the words "New York" the words "and the city of San Francisco, Cal."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment. It has been considered and is a proper one. It makes San Francisco like New York a place of redemption for United States notes, as recommended by the Executive authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL and Mr. CANNON the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the legislative appropriation bill, which has just come over, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL.

WILLIAM C. SPENCER.

The bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to relieve William C. Spencer, late a lieutenant in the Second Infantry, and more recently a captain in the Seventeenth Infantry, United States Army, from any liability to the United States for moneys received by him for disbursement as a lieutenant in the Second Infantry and as a captain in the Seventeenth Infantry, and authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to close all accounts of William C. Spencer as such lieutenant and captain, in accordance with the intent of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF SAMUEL H. MOER.

The bill (H. R. 3365) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Samuel H. Moer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement and adjustment of the accounts of Samuel H. Moer, deceased, to allow credit for the disbursement of the public funds disbursed by him under the authority of William Gilpin, late governor of Colorado Territory, of the amount with which he now stands charged upon the books of the Treasury, upon satisfactory evidence being furnished of the actual disbursement of the fund for the benefit of the public service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETURN OF THE TWIGGS SWORDS.

The bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. The report is a very brief one indeed. I can explain the bill in a short time.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. HAWLEY February 17, 1887:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords to the person or persons legally owning the same at the time said swords were seized, said ownership to be determined by the Court of Claims, deem said bill just, and report the same with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HAWLEY. These are some presentation swords given to General Twiggs before the war. They are among the captured property of the Government. Nobody cares to put them in a museum or to sell them, or anything of that sort. It is the wish of the Treasury Department and others who have looked at the subject to return them, but controversy has arisen as to who are the owners. The bill proposes to submit the question of fact to the Court of Claims, and we report in favor of it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In response to the request of the Senate, the House of Representatives have returned to this body the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875. That request was made with a view to reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed, in order to reach an amendment, that we might take a vote on reconsidering it and then get the bill back to the other House without that amendment. I ask that the Senate now proceed to consider the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill indicated by him.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. FAIR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Cullom amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment that he has named be reconsidered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that amendment? Let us know what the amendment is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add as additional sections to the bill:

SEC. 7. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States, including the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall hereafter be $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 8. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall hereafter be appointed by such court or judge to, or employed by such court or judge in, any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose the test may as well be made on the motion to reconsider as on the adoption of the amendment afterwards. Therefore I call for the yeas and nays on this motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My recollection is that the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois was by a division of the question, one vote having been taken on the salary question and the other on the subsequent clause.

Mr. CULLOM. There was no yea-and-nay vote on the last section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the question was separated, just as the Senator from Iowa says.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The question now will be on reconsidering the vote by which the salary clause of the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On which the Senator from Oregon asks for the yeas and nays. Is the demand sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

M. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] asked me to pair with him to-night if he were absent. I do not see him in his seat and therefore I do not vote.

Mr. GEORGE (when Mr. WALTHALL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is unavoidably absent, and is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is absent, and also the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I announce that they are paired with each other.

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 23; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the first section of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to, in order that we may pass the bill without it, hoping thereby to get a conference between the two Houses on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

MATHEW H. FULTON.

The bill (H. R. 1753) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $337.02 to Mathew H. Fulton, postmaster at Bucyrus, Ohio, being the amount of money stolen from the safe and from registered letters in the post-office at Bucyrus, Ohio, on the night of May 9, 1883, and which sum he made good to the claimants from his own means.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. SAWYER February 16, 1887:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1753) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton, have examined the same, and report:

The report of the House committee briefly but satisfactorily explains the object of this bill. It is adopted, and is as follows;

"The proofs in this claim show that on the night of May 9, 1882, the post-office at Bucyrus, Ohio, was broken open by burglars and the safe broken open and rifled of its contents, including postage-stamps to the amount of $1,496.42; stamp funds, $77.24; and money in registered letters, $261.78. The officers of the Department report that there was no negligence on the part of the postmaster, Mathew H. Fulton. The Department afterwards credited him with the amount of stamps stolen, but not with the amount of the stamp funds stolen, or the amount of the stolen money-order funds which he paid to the owners thereof.

"Your committee think Mr. Fulton should be reimbursed, and recommend that the bill do pass."

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY SITE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to add to the joint resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That the title proposed to be conveyed shall be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States as sufficient to vest the fee-simple of the said above-described land in the United States, free of incumbrance, before the Secretary of War shall formally accept the same.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9360) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointment of civil officers;

A bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys, in lieu of investing the same in bonds;

A bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler; and

A bill (H. R. 264) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

JACOB CRAMER.

The bill (H. R. 3642) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects to the consideration of the bill, and it goes over upon the Calendar under Rule IX. The next House bill on the Calendar favorably reported will be announced.

Mr. COKE. When the bill for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer was objected to, I was engaged at the time and did not know that it had been reached. I hope the Senator from Vermont will allow us to return to it. I have the House report here, which shows that the claimants are honest, and are entitled to the land scrip called for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be so—I hope it is,—but I have seen the Senate two or three times pass bills of this character at the last end of the session.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senate hear the report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I do not believe I will at this moment, because I should have to take up time. I was going on to say we have discovered to our grief, on looking at the lists of private claims, that we have either done the same thing two or three times, or have before rejected claims when we had time to consider them. Therefore I think this revolutionary claim can wait until the next session of Congress.

Mr. COKE. Then will the Senator allow the bill to retain its place on the Calendar without prejudice, simply passing it over?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; I do not wish to do the case any prejudice, but the danger in these ancient claims is so great that I do not want to consent to pass a bill by unanimous consent to-night without having time to see it, and I do not wish to make any prejudice to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill objected to by the Senator from Vermont retains its place on the Calendar, and stands without prejudice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But not to be taken up again by unanimous consent, without giving it time.

LAND GRANT RAILROADS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 1, and insert as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court each of the railroad land grants made by Congess to aid in the construction of railroads and heretofore unadjusted."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 2, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 2. That if it shall appear, upon the completion of such adjustments respectively, or sooner, that lands have been, from any cause, heretofore erroneously certified or patented, by the United States, to or for the use or benefit of any company claiming by, through, or under grant from the United States, to aid in the construction of a railroad, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to thereupon demand from such company a relinquishment or reconveyance to the United States of all such lands, whether within granted or indemnity limits; and if such company shall neglect or fail to so reconvey such lands to the United States within ninety days after the aforesaid demand shall have been made, it shall thereupon be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel all patents, certification, or other evidence of title heretofore issued for such lands, and to restore the title thereof to the United States.

"SEC. 3. That if, in the adjustment of said grants, it shall appear that the homestead or pre-emption entry of any bona fide settler has been erroneously canceled on account of any railroad grant or the withdrawal of public lands from market, such settler, upon application, shall be reinstated in all his rights and allowed to perfect his entry by complying with the public-land laws: Provided, That he has not located another claim, or made an entry in lieu of the one so erroneously canceled: And provided also, That he did not voluntarily abandon said original entry: And provided further, That if any of said settlers do not renew their application to be reinstated within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, then all such unclaimed lands shall be disposed of under the public-land laws, with priority of right given to bona fide purchasers of said unclaimed lands, if any, and if there be no such purchasers, then to bona fide settlers residing thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 3, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That as to all lands, except those mentioned in the foregoing section, which have been so erroneously certified or patented as aforesaid and which have been sold by the grantee company to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, the person or persons so purchasing, in good faith, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to the land so purchased, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase at the proper land office, within such time and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the grants respectively shall have been adjusted; and patents of the United States shall issue therefor, and shall relate back to the date of the original certification or patenting; and the Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, shall demand payment from the company which has so disposed of such lands of an amount equal to the Government price of similar lands; and in case of neglect or refusal of such company to make payment as hereafter specified, within ninety days after the demand shall have been made, the Attorney-General shall cause suit or suits to be brought against such company for the said amount: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent any purchaser of lands erroneously withdrawn, certified, or patented as aforesaid from recovering the purchase-money therefor from the grantee company, less the amount paid to the United States by such company as by this act required: And provided, That a mortgage or pledge of said lands by the company shall not be considered as a sale for the purpose of this act, nor shall this act be construed as a declaration of forfeiture of any portion of any land grant for conditions broken, or as authorizing an entry for the same, or as a waiver of any rights that the United States may have on account of any breach of said conditions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 4 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 5. That where any said company shall have sold to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, as a part of its grant, lands not conveyed to or for the use of such company, said lands being the numbered sections prescribed in the grant, and being coterminous with the constructed parts of said road, and where the lands so sold are for any reason excepted from the operation of the grant to said company, it shall be lawful for the bona fide purchaser thereof from said company to make payment to the United States for said lands at the ordinary Government price for like lands, and thereupon patents shall issue therefor to the said bona fide purchaser, his heirs or assigns: Provided, That all lands shall be excepted from the provisions of this section which at the date of such sales were in the bona fide occupation of adverse claimants under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and whose claims and occupation have not since been voluntarily abandoned, as to which excepted lands the said pre-emption and homestead claimants shall be permitted to perfect their proofs and entries and receive patents therefor: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to lands settled upon subsequent to the 1st day of December, 1882, by persons claiming to enter the same under the settlement laws of the United States, as to which lands the parties claiming the same as aforesaid shall be entitled to prove up and enter as in other like cases."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 5 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 6. That where any lands have been sold and conveyed, as the property of any railroad company, for State and county taxes thereon, and the grant to such company has been thereafter forfeited, the purchaser thereof shall have the prior right, which shall continue for one year from the approval of this act, and no longer, to purchase such lands from the United States at the Government price, and patents for such lands shall thereupon issue: Provided, That said lands were not, previous to or at the time of the taking effect of such grant, in the possession of or subject to the right of any actual settler."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out section 6 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 7. That no more lands shall be certified or conveyed to any State or to any corporation or individual, for the benefit of either of the companies herein mentioned, where it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that such transfers may create an excess over the quantity of lands to which such State, corporation, or individual would be rightfully entitled."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. M. TELLER,
E. C. WALTHALL,

H. S. VAN EATON,
JOHN A. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MINNEAPOLIS INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably the bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, and if there is no objection I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition, at Minneapolis, Minn., the first exhibition of which is to be held in the year 1886, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED HEDBERG.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) "for the relief of Alfred Hedberg," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

That the House assents, amending the original bill after the words "United States" in line 7 in printed bill by striking out the words "with his former rank and date of commission," and agree to the same.

J. D. CAMERON,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
J. N. CAMDEN,

C. M. ANDERSON,
JOS. WHEELER,
JAS. S. NEGLEY,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill as it has been agreed to by the conference committee be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as agreed to by the conferees.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Alfred Hedberg (late a captain in the Fifteenth Infantry) a captain of infantry in the Army of the United States, and that he, the said Alfred Hedberg, shall be assigned to the first vacancy of his grade occurring in the infantry arm of the service: Provided, That said Alfred Hedberg shall receive no pay for the time he was out of service, but only from the date of his appointment under this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator making this report why, after such deliberation and action upon the part of the Senate Military Committee and the Senate in agreeing to the appointment of Captain Hedberg as a second lieutenant, they have changed the bill and now authorize him to be appointed a captain instead of a second lieutenant?

Mr. HAWLEY. The House bill originally restored him to his ancient commission and rank as a captain, putting him back as nearly as they could where he was when in our judgment he was unjustly dismissed. The Senate, thinking it would be easier to do so, and that it would vindicate his honor to do that, proposed to let him go in at the foot of the whole Army. Upon meeting in conference, we found the House committee, Confederate and Union officers, solid and determined against coming down to that, but the conferees split the difference. The majority of the Senate and of the House conferees made him a captain at the foot of the whole list, by which he loses a great many files. A captain at the foot of the list, if he could be nominated and commissioned, is put at the last of the whole Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to record myself, not by a call of the yeas and nays, but in the RECORD, as regarding this as a great injustice to the officers of the Army and as a very bad precedent, and not justified either by the facts or the law in the case.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a difference of opinion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT SHEFFIELD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next House bill on the Calendar favorably reported will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 8978) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala., and for other purposes."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the remaining House bridge bills on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that those bills come in order consecutively on the Calendar?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Not consecutively; there are some interruptions; but the one now reached may be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bridge bills on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. I object. I insist that all House bills shall be taken in the regular order. They will all be considered in half an hour if we go on regularly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Minnesota, and the pending bill will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8978) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala., and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS IN IOWA.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to make a brief report on a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting various communications from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in regard to certain lands in Iowa, which was referred to the committee. The committee reports in favor of printing the usual number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that it be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. "A letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, in reply to a resolution of February 2, 1887, a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in regard to the lands granted to the State of Iowa by the act of May 12, 1864."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolution which provides for the printing be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is simply a motion for the printing of the usual number, 1,950.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to hear the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is simply a motion to print the usual number.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the usual number?

Mr. MANDERSON. Nineteen hundred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there is no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 11260) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the Report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary sketches and illustrations, showing the progress made during the year ending June 30, 1886.

URGENCY DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which has just come from the other House, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have it read the first time first.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11260) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from Vermont objects to the second reading. The Calendar of House bills will be proceeded with.

SAMUEL M. GAINES.

The bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No; we want to proceed to finish the House bridge bills.

Mr. PLATT. I do not so understand.

Mr. BECK. In the regular order they will all be reached in half an hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. The regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the letters patent No. 85299, dated December 29, 1868, which were granted by the Patent Office of the United States to Samuel M. Gaines, of Glasgow, Ky., for the period of seventeen years from the date of the original grant, "method of teaching the rudiments of chemistry," be, and are hereby, referred to the Commissioner of Patents, to hear and determine the facts as to whether they shall be continued in force for the period of seven years from the 29th day of December, 1885; and the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and empowered to grant an extension of the patent herein described for the period herein named.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT February 18, 1887:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives made the following report upon this bill:

"The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines, have had the same under consideration, and now report the same to the House with an amendment, and recommend its passage.

"This bill provides for an extension of the letters patent which were granted to Samuel M. Gaines, No. 85299, and dated December 29, 1868, for 'method of teaching the rudiments of chemistry,' for the period of seven years from the 29th day of December, 1885. The committee have determined to recommend the passage of this bill, because, in their judgment, it has merit; because the patentee has received no just remuneration for his invention; and, lastly, because further time and labor, with the expense incident thereto, will be required to make the said method of general utility to the public. Besides, it is not an article of manufacture to be put on the market, and upon which the user might be taxed in the form of royalty, but its object is to remedy and correct the system introduced by Berzelius, of illustrating chemical compositions and reactions to the eye by means of symbols and equations, which is too abstract for beginners, by means of a chemical alphabet, found by actual experiments to be far more efficient than any other method heretofore used for such purpose.

"Amend House bill 821 by adding to said bill the following words at the end of line 13: 'And the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and empowered to grant an extension of the patent herein described for the period herein named.'"

From the evidence before the Senate committee it appears that the inventor has derived very little remuneration from his patent, and explains his failure to do so from the fact that during most of the time of the existence of the patent he has been president of a female college in Kentucky, with duties which prevented his writing a text-book on chemistry to be used in teaching that science according to the principles of his invention, and that without such text-book it was impossible to introduce his invention to any considerable extent; that his retirement from the presidency of the college has given him the leisure to complete such a text-book, which is now ready for publication, and that he believes that with an extension of his patent he may obtain some remuneration during its extended term.

As to the question whether the method of teaching chemistry covered by the invention has sufficient merit so that it will be generally received in the educational institutions of the country, the committee has no means of reaching a conclusion except in so far as its judgment is based upon the testimonials of teachers and scholars commending the method, numbers of which have been submitted to the committee. If the invention has the merit which its author claims for it, it will be a valuable aid in teaching chemistry.

It is doubtful whether it falls within the class of inventions which are of such great public utility as to make the extension of the patents securing them advisable. But in view of the fact that its extension cannot result in any particular burden or tax upon the public, and the fact that it will probably stimulate the inventor to make additional efforts to introduce his system of teaching chemistry, and possibly obtain for him some remuneration in his old age, the committee have decided to report in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Connecticut to explain whether this bill has any saving clause in respect to people who meantime have been using and are using this patent?

Mr. PLATT. The information of the committee is that no one is using it except by the permission of the inventor.

Mr. HARRIS. We can hear nothing of the private interview that is going on over there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no private interview going on.

Mr. HARRIS. It is private so far as our hearing it is concerned, for we cannot hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is public, but unheard of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The combined volume of conversation in the galleries is louder than people would ordinarily suppose.

Mr. PLATT. The evidence before the committee was that this invention has not been introduced to any extent. A few persons have adopted its use, paying the inventor a small sum for it. I will say with regard to this case that if there ever was a harmless extension of a patent it is this one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not understand the Senator to state whether the bill contains the usual saving clause.

Mr. PLATT. There is no clause of that kind in the bill. If it were a different case, where people were manufacturing or using the invention, I should feel like having the amendment put in; but as an amendment to the bill would manifestly kill it, and as I said, which the Senator did not probably hear, if there ever was a harmless extension of a patent this is one, I hope the Senator will not propose any amendment to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not a very good reason for not having the bill right; and as this is a night when we pass bills that are not quite right, because we are in a hurry, I will not make the point.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TAXES.

The bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to make the rate of interest to be collected on all general taxes in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1886, and on all special assessments due the District of Columbia, 6 per cent., per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law. But this shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 30th of November, 1887.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. What is to be done with the people who have paid the present high per cent. in redeeming their property?

Mr. HARRIS. The explanation is that under existing law when taxes fall due and are not paid there is 2 per cent. per month interest, 24 per cent. per annum, up to the day of sale, and after sale interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid. There is something over a million dollars of taxes in arrears, and the penalty and interest in very many of the cases aggregate a larger sum than the property is worth. Similar bills have been passed for very many years, and they have generally resulted in a very large collection; but without such remission of penalty and with a high rate of interest the probabilities are that collections will not be made; and the property in many instances is not worth the amount of taxes, penalties, and interest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that philosophy were sound we ought to repeal the provision altogether and not limit it to the time fixed in the bill. This is a special relief to certain people who have not paid their taxes, and is no relief to those who have paid them with this heavy penalty of 2 per cent. a month, or whatever it is.

The consequence will be—and that is the way it goes, and the Senator says we have done it once or twice before—that the people who are ready to fight and who are able to fight, a great many of them, some very rich people in this District, as I have been told, decline to pay their pay their taxes, and let them run, and by and by come and make a trade with Congress to get off on a commutation, and so on. I do not think it is a very good way to legislate. We ought to have a tax law that is permanent, that is fair, and that is enforced.

What is the excuse in this District for a million dollars being behind on taxes upon real estate, as these are, the whole of them almost; and what is the excuse for there being almost another million—certainly four or five hundred thousand dollars—of special or other taxes against the street-railway corporations and so on, that nobody can get? There is something wrong about the administration of the law here, or else the law is so imperfect that nobody can enforce it?

But the effect of this bill is going to be that while it gives relief to some very poor people, whom I should be glad to help, and to other rich people who do not need any help or any sympathy at all, it puts out of the category of any consideration the people who have raked and scraped to get money enough to pay their 2 per cent. a month, and who are to be left out in the cold. That does not look to me as quite right.

Mr. HARRIS. So far as I am advised, or as the Committee on the District of Columbia is advised, that class of very rich people I expect is an exceedingly small one, if there be a single individual of that character embraced in the provisions of the bill; but there is a class of people who are in arrears upon their taxes. The penalties and interest that have accrued amount to quite as much, and in some instances even to more, than the property is worth.

If this relief is given, from the experience of years gone by a large amount of taxes will be collected. If it is not given, nothing will be collected. It is for the Senate to determine whether it will give this relief, this inducement to pay the taxes, or whether it will let the matter remain as it is, with more than a million dollars in arrear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will put the question on passing the bill, for I wish to vote against it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT ELEVATORS.

The bill (H. R. 10900) to regulate the construction and operation of elevators within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make and publish such orders as may be necessary to regulate the construction, repair, and operation of all elevators within the District of Columbia, and prescribe such means of security as may be found necessary to protect life and limb.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM INDIANA.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask leave at this time to present, in order that it may be laid on the table, a memorial from 18 senators in the State senate of Indiana and from the house of representatives of the State of Indiana protesting against the alleged election of Hon. David Turpie to be a Senator from that State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Put it in the files along with the so-called credentials.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the memorial be placed on the files of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

WASHINGTON COUNTY STREETS AND AVENUES.

A bill (H. R. 11074) directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish streets and avenues in the county of Washington, District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

The bill (H. R. 8586) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia by adding:

But in case such party has left the District of Columbia, or cannot be found, said summons may be served by delivering the same to some person of proper age upon the premises described in said summons, or, in the absence of such person, by affixing a copy of said summons to a conspicuous part of the premises where it may be conveniently read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained, and would like to see the section to which it is said to be an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Vermont asks the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. That seems to be an amendment of the forcible entry and detainer act of the District. It is rather dangerous to make a provision of that kind, but still it would seem to be just in some way to make it if the party cannot be found.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The service might be made on a person not residing on the premises.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One would suppose so.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill, as the Senator from Vermont has said, is intended as an amendment to the landlord and tenant act in cases of forcible entry and detention. The purpose of it is to provide some method by which service can be had in case the person against whom the proceedings are instituted is a non-resident or is absent. It is a provision that is customary, and the committee after examination believed that the condition of the law here was such as to demand this proposed enactment. The question was submitted to the law officer of the District and after deliberation the committee were convinced that the amendment was one that ought to be made. I trust there may be no objection to it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If I understood the language of the amendment, the service might be made upon a person who was not in the occupancy of the premises at all, some person taken there by the party making the service.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to say "residing on the premises or being in their occupancy," or somebody might walk on the premises for the purpose of receiving the service. I move to amend by adding "some person residing on the premises."

Mr. INGALLS. If the bill is to be amended it might as well be objected to at once, because, of course, we all know, in the condition of business at this time, an amendment will be fatal to it if the Senator thinks it is objectionable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is not safe as it is, so I will object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects and the bill will be passed over.

JAMES W. KINGON.

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following report, which was read:

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows: Add after the word "thereof," in line 18, printed bill as follows:

"As fully and completely as if such proceedings, findings, and sentence had never been had and made."

BENJ. HARRISON,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JOSEPH WHEELER,
G. W. DARGAN,
JAMES LAIRD,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the papers here?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; the papers are here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers are at the desk.

The report was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Albert Hedberg;

A bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes this opportunity to lay before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1886, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by said Superintendent.

A. S. BLOOM.

The bill (H. R. 899) for the relief of A. S. Bloom was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for payment to A. S. Bloom, late a major of the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, of the pay and allowances of a major of cavalry from September 2, 1864, until November 1, 1864, deducting therefrom any moneys paid him for any other position held during that period.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report, Mr. President.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. MANDERSON February 21, 1887:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 899) "for the relief of A. S. Bloom," having duly considered the same, report in favor of its passage.

The bill is in the form in which it passed the House at the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, June 14, 1878, and provides that Bloom shall be paid as a major of the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry from September 2, 1864, to November 1, 1864, deducting any amount paid him for services for any other position held during that period.

The report (No. 470) on this bill in the Forty-fifth Congress, adopted by the House, and hereto annexed, would appear to contain all the facts, and is as follows:

1. That A. S. Bloom was commissioned a major in the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry on the 20th day of January, 1864, by the governor of the State of Kentucky, and made application to be mustered at that date under his commission.

2. That Major Bloom was then refused muster and informed that the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry was below the minimum, and by reason thereof there was no vacancy in the office of major, said regiment then having a colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and two majors, which was its full complement of field-officers, according to its strength.

3. That Major Bloom, by reason of such failure to be mustered, and with the assent of his colonel, proceeded upon recruiting service, to procure for the regiment a sufficient number of men to fill it to the standard which would entitle him to be mustered.

4. That Major Bloom reported back to his regiment for assignment to duty on the 4th day of July, 1864, but the proofs fail to show that he was then assigned to duty by any authority, competent or otherwise.

5. Major Bloom claims to have entered upon his duties as major of the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry July 4, 1864, but where he was on duty, or what duties he performed, or by whose orders, neither the petition nor the proof show with any degree of certainty sufficient to establish a claim for service done and accepted by the Government.

6. Major Bloom first appears to have been assigned for duty as major, by authority having at least color to charge the Government, on the 2d day of September, 1864, by Special Orders No. 207, Headquarters District of Tennessee, Major-General Rousseau, commanding.

7. From September 2, 1864, to the 1st day of November, 1864, when Major Bloom was mustered into service under his commission, he seems, from the evidence and official orders, to have been rendering service and to have been recognized in his rank as major.

8. That at some date which does not appear the colonel of the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry was detached from his regiment and placed in command of a brigade; the lieutenant-colonelcy was vacant by reason of the death of the officer who held that position, resulting from a wound received in a personal rencounter with the first major, and which resulted in the arrest of such major and deprivation of him pro tempore from the discharge of the functions of his office, and that the second major was absent from his command by reason of disability.

These several casualties if they may be so termed, all seem to have intervened at some time between September 2, 1864, and the date of Major Bloom's muster, November 1, 1864, so that there was during that time, or a portion of it at least, a vacancy in fact, though not in law, in the office of major, which Major Bloom filled, and discharged the duties; being a part of the time, at least, in the actual command of the regiment.

9. That the regiment of which Major Bloom had command, and in which he held his commission, was, in fact, reduced below the minimum when he was mustered, November 1, 1864, and he was no more entitled to his pay from November 1, 1864, than he was from September 2, 1864, if the letter of the law is to be followed; but, notwithstanding the legal bar, the Government availed itself of his services, and have paid him from November 1, 1864; and, in the opinion of your committee, Major Bloom is justly entitled to his pay from the time the proofs show he was under orders of Major-General Rousseau, as much so before his muster as afterward.

By the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, it was intended, by a general bill, to give relief to this class of claims, and it appears that Bloom has presented his case to the War Department under the act, and that his case has been decided adversely, because—

"During the period claimed the Seventh Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers was reduced below the minimum strength allowed by law, and consequently not entitled to a third major."

As the commission of Major Bloom bears date subsequent to June 20, 1863, and as his command was below the minimum number when he was mustered, he can get no relief under the act approved February 3, 1887.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that will make a precedent for a pretty large number of cases. It had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not hear the Senator from Vermont. Did I understand him to object to the further consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He did.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope he will withdraw that objection. This is a case that has a great deal of merit and there are many precedents for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We passed a general law in 1863 on this subject, and this case would be one of probably a thousand or more. It may be a good case and it may not. It is not extremely clear, therefore, at this last night of the session, and I do not think it wise to make a precedent of this kind, with great respect to my friend.

Mr. MANDERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to insist on his objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do.

Mr. BECK. Knowing this man, and knowing this case, and knowing how meritorious a soldier he was, I am constrained to move, if I have the right to move, to proceed to the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky, has that right. He moves to proceed to the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I have nothing to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the 3d of February, 1887, as this reports states, which is not long ago, we passed a general bill which was supposed to cover every possible case where, upon principles of justice and good administration, relief of this character should be given, and we follow that in the same month and less than three weeks afterwards with this special bill for this particular gentleman whose career in the Army during the time that he is now to be paid for did not entitle him by law as it then stood or as it stands now to be paid the already belonging to the rank of major.

There are a thousand and more other people, some of whom I know in the State from which I come, and in all the other States, who, on account of their regiments being reduced below the number which entitled them to two or more majors, as this regiment had two all the time besides this gentleman, were not entitled to be mustered in and were not entitled to the pay of that rank, but were entitled to whatever rank they held below that of captain or whatever. Because, first, this gentleman could not be mustered in for the reason that there were two majors in the regiment already, and secondly, for the reason that the number of men in the regiment was far below the minimum, we are now asked, in spite of this general law and beyond it that we have passed, which is favorable to everybody, of course, as every general law is, to make an exception, which immediately becomes a precedent for all other similar cases, and there are thousands of them, to pay this gentleman for the time when having a commission from the governor of Kentucky, as I will assume, to be a major, his regiment was so small and its offices were so full that he could not be mustered in as a major.

If that is right it ought to be right for everybody. Congress has said by a law passed only a month ago that it is not right, and that the line ought to be drawn in a place that will exclude him. I have no doubt that he is a very worthy man, and so were the others; and having said that—I do not wish to take up time—my duty is done, and the Senate can do what it pleases.

Mr. HALE. If a vote can be had on this bill at once I will not interpose; otherwise I must insist on calling up the deficiency bill.

Mr. BECK. I do not wish to say a word, but the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] who made the report will say something.

Mr. MANDERSON. As the report shows, the fact is that this officer was on duty with his regiment during the time he was major and was part of that time in command of that regiment. He was on duty in the regiment from September 2, 1864, to the 1st day of November, and during the two months' time it is proposed to pay him the pay of a major, he was with his regiment, engaged in action with it part of the time, and part of the time in command. It seems to me it makes an exceptional case and demands this recognition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, first considering the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as they are reached in their order in the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And subject to all points of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection the course suggested by the Senator from Maine will be pursued, subject to all points of order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," after line 8, to insert:

To enable the President to extend to the inhabitants of the island of Tanegashima, Japan, some suitable recognition of their kind and humane treatment of the survivors of the crew of the American bark Cashmere, lost off that coast in 1885, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 20 to insert:

Foreign intercourse:

Salaries of ministers: To enable the accounting officers to settle the account of V. O. King, chargé d'affaires ad interim to Bogota, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $309.66.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator in charge explain that a moment?

Mr. HALE. I have sent for the Book of Estimates, which contains the exact statement in reference to it. It may be passed over, if the Senator desires, until I get the book here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after line 26, to insert:

To pay G. C. Foulk, charge d'affaires ad interim at Seoul, Corea, the amount of protest fees and expenses incurred by him on drafts returned to him on account of the exhaustion of the appropriation for "Salaries of ministers," 1885 against which they were drawn, $35.92.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 33, to insert:

Salaries consular officers not citizens: To enable the accounting officers to settle the accounts of consular officers not citizens, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $1,808.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 37, to insert:

To enable the accounting officers to settle the accounts of consular officers not citizens, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $4,973.86.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that explained a little. I want to know how these deficiencies arise. These consular officers get fees. How is it that there is anything due to them from the United States?

Mr. HALE. In the course of the year, in a large establishment like the State Department, these accounts coming in at different times are settled on the basis of old returns of fees, which sometimes are changed from time to time. Sometimes allowances are made in the nature of clerk hire and other things for one year that are left out in another year; and at the end of a fiscal year it is found that there may be a deficiency which is to be settled upon the books of the Treasury, though there is no money payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 41, to insert:

Contingent expenses foreign missions: To enable the proper accounting officers, without the payment of any money from the Treasury, to settle the accounts of United States ministers and others on account of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses of foreign missions" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, by means of utilizing the entire appropriation under that head generally, and without regard to the division of the amount between specified and unspecified objects, authority is hereby granted for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 51, to insert:

Contingent expenses United States consulates: To reimburse the following consular officers the protest fees and expenses incurred by them on drafts returned on account of the exhaustion of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses United States consulates," fiscal years 1884 and 1885, against which they were drawn:

Fulton Paul, late United States consul at Odessa, Russia, 1884, $22.50.
J. C. A. Wingate, United States consul at Foo-Chow, China, $1,885.07.
D. M. Dunn, late United States consul at Valparaiso, Chili, 1885, $217.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 67, to insert:

Salaries consular service: To enable the accounting officers, without the payment of any money from the Treasury, to allow and credit E. J. Smithers, late consul of the United States at Chin-Kiang, the sum of $133, due on account of his salary from July 9, 1884, to October 20, 1884, while acting as United States consul at Tien-Tsin, under the direction of the Department of State, in addition to the sum of $1,011.48 allowed by the deficiency act of August 4, 1886, said sum of $133 having been disallowed in the settlement of his accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 81, to insert:

To pay secretaries of legation for services rendered as chargé d'affaires ad interim during the two years ending June 30, 1880, $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. That is a pretty large item. I make the point of order on it as well.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator makes a point of order, of course it will go out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order. There is no law for it, and it is exactly against the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is good. The Chair rules out the amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 85, to insert:

To refund to John T. Robeson, late United States consul at Beirut, on presentation of proper vouchers therefor to the Department of State, six hundred dollars, being for moneys expended by him for clerk-hire at said consulate during the fiscal year 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 91, under the head of "Treasury Department" to insert:

To pay Mrs. Imogene Robinson Morrell for painting the portrait of John C. Spencer, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 94, to insert;

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a reasonable additional compensation to the employés of the Treasury Department who were actually employed during the months of July, August, September, and October, 1882, in addition to the usual business hours, on account of the work of exchanging bonds of the United States bearing 3½ per cent. interest for bonds bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, authorized by section 11 of "An act to enable national-banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1882, to be paid by the said Secretary to those actually engaged as aforesaid, in such sums as shall seem to him to be just and equitable, as follows:

For employés in the division of loans and currency of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, $1,384.48;
For employés in the division of records, files, and mail in said office, $564.56;
For employés in the office of the Register of the Treasury, $1,498.10;
For employés in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, $699.80; in all, $4,146.95;

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 142.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call attention to the word "acts," in line 142, which evidently should be "act."

Mr. HALE. Let that correction be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be made, if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 151, to insert:

To pay amount found due the Union Pacific Railway Company (report No. 249413) for transportation of supplies for assay-office at Boisé City in 1884 and 1885, being for the fiscal year 1885, $2.32.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to this amendment and sundry other amendments of the same character—there are quite a large number of them here—to pay the amounts found due the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads and their branches for transportation. To save time we may as well decide the question at once.

The House bill made no appropriation for the Central Pacific Railroad claims for transportation. These claims were presented; they were attached upon one deficiency bill heretofore, and were stricken out in conference. I do not know the exact amount involved, I have not calculated it, but there are several hundred thousand dollars involved in these claims. I desire to have read and spread upon the RECORD a very full statement of these claims made in another branch, from which I will read a part:

The bill makes no appropriation for the Central Pacific Railroad claims for transportation, and in this connection the committee would state that the United States owes the Central Pacific Railroad Company various sums of money for transportation under the War and Post-Office Departments, aggregating, in round numbers, $2,000,000 or more.

That is the amount practically involved in these amendments, $2,000,000 or more.

The agents and attorneys of that company, with great persistence and activity, have sought to convince the committee that appropriations should be made for the payment of this indebtedness in money, notwithstanding the admitted fact that the railroad company is justly indebted to the United States in the sum of more than $60,000,000.

The committee were of opinion that equity and justice required that the company should be entirely satisfied to have the amount of these claims placed to its credit as a partial payment of, or set-off to, that much of its vast indebtedness to the United States.

The committee were answered by the agents and attorneys, before alluded to, that the debt of the company to the Government was not yet due, and would not be for eight or ten years yet to come; that a test case had been made and tried in the Court of Claims, and on appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States, and that those tribunals had each decided that the company was entitled to the payment of these claims, regardless of its indebtedness of $60,000,000, as before mentioned; and that the indebtedness, of which payment was asked, accrued to the company by reason of its performing the services out of which the claims originate, over branch lines not subsidized or aided by grant, either of bonds or lands, but leased, controlled, and operated by the company.

It should be observed, however, in this connection that the accounts are presented in the name of the Central Pacific Railroad Company; that the indebtedness and the audit are to that company; that the test suit was in the name of and by that company; that the judgment was rendered in its favor, and the services were rendered by it; but in rendering such services the company used its leased lines therefor.

If there was ever a man or a corporation under obligations to keep faith with the Government and people of the United States, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and those who have control of the vast wealth and power conferred upon them by the legislation of 1862 and 1864, were, and are, bound by every consideration of justice, honor, and gratitude to keep absolute, perfect, and unlimited good faith with such Government and people. Under the legislation alluded to it cannot be too frequently stated or too earnestly considered that the Central Pacific Railroad Company received from the Government immense privileges, bounties, and subsidies. Among other things:

First, a national legal status.

Second, a grant for right of way of 404½ feet in width.

Third, earth, stone, timber, and other materials of construction from adjacent public land.

Fourth, alternate sections of the public lands on each side of the road for a depth of 10 miles; and in order that the company might have the choice land, it was allowed to extend 20 miles on either side from which to select the quantity indicated.

Fifth. On 17.18 miles of the road the Government lent it $16,000 per mile; on 150 miles the Government lent it $48,000 per mile; on 580.32 miles the Government lent it $32,000 per mile, all in 6 per cent. thirty-year bonds.

Sixth. The bonds of the company issued in 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, and made a lien prior to the bonds of the Government lent to the company, and aggregating $27,853,000, with thirty years to run, at 6 per cent., gold, interest.

Seventh. Capital stock issued by authority of law, but required to be paid up in cash and in full, $59,275,500.

We have a right to assume that the land produced revenues equivalent to $32,000 per mile, an amount amply sufficient to complete the road; that the bonds of the Government lent to the corporation, and averaging over $35,000 per mile, were more than sufficient to complete and equip the road; that the second-mortgage bonds allowed to be made a first lien as against the bonds of the Government so lent were sufficient to complete the road; and that the stock required by law to be paid up in full was more than double the amount required to build the road.

Thus this corporation secured through the confidence and bounty of the Government a sum of money sufficient to build and complete five roads of the same length. Where is all this money? Will it be seriously denied that this money—the money of the people and their Government—formed the basis of the great fortunes made by the recipients of all this bounty, and also defrayed the cost of building all the branch roads which were claimed to have been leased, only, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company? And when to these vast sums we add practically the net earnings of the road for twenty years, in which the Government has an interest by law, we recognize the sources from which came the money to build all the roads ever operated or leased by the Central Pacific Railroad Company. In this estate the Government had and has a sovereign interest, subject only to the rights of honest creditors to whom the Government has given prior rights.

But it is said that the company has a judgment in a test case, and therefore we are bound to make appropriations to pay like claims to that sued on. Let us see. The suit was begun in the Court of Claims by the filing of a petition or declaration of law at the November term of said court in 1885. It was the guarded production of several of the skilled lawyers of that powerful company. It of course stated a naked case at law. It did not admit any of the known facts constituting a complete equitable defense.

The attorney representing the United States filed only a general demurrer. This the court very properly overruled, and judgment thereon was allowed to be entered in the Court of Claims. The Supreme Court, on appeal, could do nothing but sustain the judgment of the court below.

I hope the Senate will pay attention to this statement of the facts in regard to these judgments.

What that great tribunal would have decided had the facts and equities of the Government been presented by answer, we, of course, do not know; but it is believed that when a corporation or individual is largely indebted, whether the debt be due or not due, and commits a fraud or frauds upon the creditor, or diverts property unlawfully from the uses prescribed by law for the benefit or safety of such creditor, or in failing circumstances commits an act of bankruptcy, he or it can not either at law or in equity recover payment of a debt due by the creditor to the debtor of such creditor simply because it may not be at the time due or payable.

Almost everywhere an attachment at law against such a debtor is authorized, and equitable proceedings to prevent the recovery by him of a debt due from a creditor situated as the United States now is, are never denied. We think, therefore, that such proceedings as were had in the suit alluded to do not justify us in concluding that the courts, on a full and fair presentation of all known matters of defense, would adjudge payment to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of $2,000,000 owing to it by the United States, when the company is indebted, and has been for twenty years, to the United States in the sum of nearly $30,000,000 for principal and a sum greater now than $30,000,000 for interest paid for the use and benefit of such company. It should be noted that the above-mentioned suit was filed November, 1885, and was carried through both courts and the judgment presented to Congress within six months.

It is to be further noted that the appropriation for the payment of these claims now opens the door to the future payment of all such claims, reaching far into millions of dollars. Less than a year ago the Central Pacific Railroad Company was before us as the alleged lessee of all the branch lines herein alluded to, since which it has been shown to us that grave and serious changes have taken place.

It would seem that the road of the corporation, enriched by the legislation of 1862 and 1864, and in which the Government has such a large interest, together with all its leased or operated lines, is now, or was recently, in the possession or control of a corporation created by a special act of the legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and called the "Pacific Company," as lessee on a lease or leases for 99 years. As the Government employs a number of gentlemen as representatives of the United States in the directory of the company, we may, at their convenience, get a history of the wanderings of a fugitive debtor to the United States, which, when last heard from, had taken temporary refuge, at least, under a new but pacific name, within a State somewhat distant from its theater of operations. The "Pacific Company," of Kentucky, must be, as lessee, receiving the earnings of its leased lines. Has not the Government such an interest in this property as would justify a strong interference by the proper department of the Government?

Legislative provisions affecting the expenditure of money under certain branches of the public service are recommended in the bill, as follows:

In connection with the sum of $500,000, recommended for the payment to importers of interest and costs on judgments and discontinued suits in customs cases on excess of deposits for unascertained duties or duties or other moneys paid under protest, the following is proposed to be added:

"Provided, That section 3011 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is herby, amended by inserting after the word 'paid' in the seventh line the following: 'together with costs of suit and interest at the rate of 3 per centum per annum.'"

The Senate has recently passed a bill for the investigation of the accounts and condition of these land-grant railroads, and we now have the spectacle of the Senate adding to this deficiency bill a provision authorizing and compelling the United States to pay in cash to these companies nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. STANFORD, Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. STANFORD. I understand that the report read by the Senator claims that the Central Pacific Railroad Company has a just claim to these items.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have read it all.

Mr. STANFORD. I want to know if the Senator pleads the baby act for this Government when it has a contract to pay what it owes?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; I do not propose to plead the baby act; but here are corporations to which the United States has issued its bonds for the amount of $64,000,000, and it has paid interest upon that amount until to-day, the actual sum paid by the Government amounting to over $140,000,000.

Mr. STANFORD. Was not that according to the contract?

Mr. COCKRELL. As the court has decided; that is, it has been held that when the Government of the United States pays interest on these bonds the Government can not make the railroad company pay that interest back until the principal of the bonds becomes due. Therefore, the Government is paying year by year the interest on $64,000,000 of bonds, and can not according to the decision of the Supreme Court, legally at least, make the companies refund one particle of that interest until the bonds become due, which will be in 1895 and 1896.

All that we propose now by not admitting these amendments is simply to leave these credits in the hands of the Government, and when the adjustment is made between these land-grant railroad companies and the United States, the railroad companies will get credit for every dollar of these sums; but I say it is not just, it is not right, it is not equitable to make the taxpayers of the United States pay the money out of their pockets and turn it over to these railroad companies while they owe the people of this country millions upon millions upon which the people are receiving no interest whatever, and cannot receive any interest. It is nothing but a matter of justice, equity, honesty, and fair dealing that these credits shall remain in the Treasury of the United States, and they will go to the benefit of the companies, and there is no pleading of any baby act or any other kind of act. It is only a matter of justice. I hope the committee's amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I supposed if there was anything well understood by the committee after the passage of the resolution for investigating all the affairs of the Pacific railroad companies a few days ago, it was that there would not be found in an appropriation bill, within seven or eight hours of the close of the session, an appropriation of this character. It is very well understood at the Treasury Department, if not elsewhere, that one of the reasons why the sums of money mentioned in this appropriation bill have not been paid is because of the fact of the unwillingness of the Treasury Department to recognize a lease made by the Central Pacific Railroad to the Southern Pacific Railroad. Certain sums of money are alleged to be due. I do not know that the Department has refused to pay all proper claims of the Central Pacific Railroad, but I do know that it has refused to recognize the Southern Pacific as the lessor of these properties.

Now it is proposed to put in an appropriation bill, within seven or eight hours of the end of the session, an appropriation recognizing and confirming almost as far as language can do—it certainly will be a confirmation if the Senate proceeds to demand or require of the Treasury Department to pay over these sums of money to the Southern Pacific Railroad, the assignee of these claims, it will be equal to a confirmation of the lease, and that, too, pending an investigation into all the affairs of the companies. It is the most extraordinary proceeding I ever heard of, with all due deference to the honorable committee, considering as we must the action of the Senate within the past few days touching the Pacific railroads.

Mr. HALE. There is nothing new about this item nor about the other items of a like kind that are interspersed through the bill. They were put upon the deficiency bill last year, and neither the Senator from Missouri nor the Senator from New Jersey protested against them or was found voting against them. They passed the Senate nem. con., and they have been in accordance with that precedent, with the action of the Senate heretofore, incorporated into this bill. Moreover, the Committee on Appropriations in putting these items into this appropriation bill, have followed what so far as I know is the unbroken rule and precedent where the highest court has passed upon a matter and entered up judgment. All of these bills for services rendered by the the non-aided portion of the Union and Central Pacific Railroad systems cover items the facts about which are not in dispute. That the railroad companies did the service, furnished the materials of transportation, nobody denies. That the bills have been duly presented, that they have passed through every stage of examination and scrutiny in the Treasury Department and have been certified upon audit as true and just bills, nobody questions. That in addition to that the question whether or not they are now due, was in due form and by proper progressive action from one court to another submitted first to one court and then to another nobody denies; and that upon such presentation the highest court of the land, the Supreme Court of the United States, decided and declared in terms that they were due, and that the railroad companies were entitled to, that no man has ever raised a doubt about. With all this unbroken line of precedents, of adjudication, or results determined upon by high tribunals, the Committee on Appropriations have inserted these clauses, found upon different pages of the bill, from the beginning to the end, ranging from small sums to large sums, because the committee believes that these roads are entitled to have their accounts passed. The money will not be paid. The Senator says it will take from the Treasury so much money to be paid out to the companies. It is not so; it is only that the companies, in the course of their transactions of current affairs that arise between them and the Government of the United States, ask to have these accounts allowed; ask that they be no longer held up; ask that they be received by the Government in its transactions and in its current events, and that the roads get the benefit of them.

Now, the theory on the other side is in contravention of the Thurman act so-called, and the decision of the courts upon that. It may be that, at some time in the near or far future, it may be found upon some investigation that there are concerns of these companies that need to be looked into. That may be so; that is a thing which the investigation that has been set on foot will disclose; but whatever may be arrived at in the result of that investigation does not in any way touch the validity of these claims—the fact that the services have been rendered and that the moneys are now due.

It is upon these grounds that the committee, acting as it had done before, sustained as it has been before by a unanimous Senate with no voice of protest raised against them, have put these accounts on the present bill. It is for the Senate to say whether or not this body shall pass these bills. They have got to go before another branch; indeed, they have to pass through two branches. Last year they were thrown out by the action of the House of Representatives. What may be their fate now I do not know. But that the Senate is committed to these two bills by its previous action, by every course of proceeding that has been taken, I can have no doubt.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to offer an amendment on page 25, line 583.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator wait until the amendments of the committee are disposed of? We have not reached page 25 yet. The order is that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are first to be considered.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then, if the Senator prefers, I will wait until the amendments on that page are reached. I suppose the amendment can be passed over.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can offer any amendment to the clause we are now considering, but not to any other portion of the bill. We are now on page 7.

Mr. McPHERSON. I may have been misinformed, but I thought the amendment under consideration was one of those on page 25, to which my attention was called.

Mr. HALE. The Senate is now considering the little item on page 7. That, undoubtedly, the Senator from New Jersey can move to amend.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Maine informs me that the clause under consideration is on page 7.

Mr. HALE. Beginning in line 152.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know why all these matters of new legislation are on this bill at a time when an investigation is to be made. I think they ought to be cut out.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator find warrant for characterizing this as new legislation? Will the Senator be so good as to inform the Senate how it is?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not understand that it has been determined that the Government owes the Union Pacific Railway the amount of money specified. I find it here in the appropriation bill, but if the Senator will inform me that the Treasury Department have reported that this is a debt to these companies, and that there is no dispute whatever about it, I shall be surprised.

Mr. HALE. That is precisely the fact. It is contained in a document that is referred to in the bill, and it is certified as an amount due, that has been audited, and is now sent for appropriation to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury. That is precisely the case. I cannot state it as well as the Senator himself has in stating his objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should think, as there were so many matters in dispute between the accounting officers of the Treasury and the Pacific railroad companies, that pending the investigation which it is supposed will shortly be made, and a very thorough one, all these matters in dispute should be deferred until the investigation is made. Therefore I object to this amendment, as I do to the others; but as to that coming later, on page 25, I certainly shall not object.

Mr. HALE. That is an entirely different matter. That raises the whole subject of the controversy. That is the ground on which the House of Representatives object; but I do not like the Senator to characterize this as new legislation when the committee has waited until every possible step was taken by the Department of the Government and the courts before it proposed to put this item in the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator inform me whether the Treasury Department has recommended an appropriation of money to pay this alleged claim?

Mr. HALE. It was sent for that very purpose. If the Senator will look at the document referred to he will easily satisfy himself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 167, to insert:

Hell Gate electric light: For lease of the ground used as a site for the light-house and fog-signal established at Hallet's Point, near Hell Gate, New York, from April 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 174, to insert:

Plans for public buildings: For plans for public buildings, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was, after line 385, to insert:

To reimburse Frederick Douglass for record-books and general indices purchased and paid for by him while recorder of deeds, for use of his office, $172.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 419, to insert:

For the employment of a copyist until June 30, 1887, to make copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina, in compliance with the joint resolution of Congress of December 20, 1886, $300.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to provide suitable medals which are to be presented to the competitors in the national drill which is to take place next May; and that the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of War to procure such medals as in his judgment may be appropriate for the purposes indicated, said medals, when made, to be turned over to the committee of national drill having their disposition in charge.

This amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 434, to insert:

To pay D. M. & C. P. Dull the amount ascertained by the Secretary of War to be due them for work done on the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, and by reason of changes in their contract, &c., $34,379.30.

To pay Charles McCafferty the amount ascertained by the Secretary of War to be due him for work on the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, and by reason of changes in his contract, &c., $30,370.15: Provided, That any contract indebtedness of said McCafferty incurred by subcontract, or for labor or material furnished for the prosecution of the work on which this sum is based, shall be first ascertained and paid by the Secretary of War and the balance paid to said McCafferty. Said amounts shall be received in full satisfaction of all claim under said contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 478, to insert:

For rent, hire of civilian employes, furniture, light, stationery, ice, repairs, rent of telephones, text-books, lumber, and other expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation in cities or places outside of Washington, District of Columbia, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8978) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala., and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887;

A joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 118) to print the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward Shakespeare, concerning the nature, &c., of epidemic cholera.

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask leave to report a resolution from the Committee on Contingent Expenses with a substitute. The committee recommend the passage of the substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, if there be no objection.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. HOAR directing the Committee on Education and Labor to examine into the condition of schools in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert:

That the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to inquire into the condition of the public schools of the District of Columbia, especially as compared with that of the schools in other cities of the United States, and report upon the same to the next session of Congress. Said committee shall be authorized to sit during the recess, send for persons and papers, and employ a stenographer, the expense of said inquiry to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska objects, and the resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, it was—

Ordered, That J. J. Vandergrift be permitted, subject to the rules of the Senate, to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of the steam tug "Red Fox."

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 521, to insert:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

For payment to the South Boston Iron Works for guns now being constructed under authority of the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, and under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884, and the extension of said contracts is authorized accordingly, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. Reserving the point of order, I should like to have that item explained. I think I shall make the point of order upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island submits a point of order against the amendment. Will the Senator state the point of order?

Mr. ALDRICH. It extends a contract and is new legislation.

Mr. HALE. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALDRICH. That it is new legislation.

Mr. HALE. It is not only not new legislation, but it is a contract entered into in accordance with the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I know; but it extends the term of the contract; it changes the terms of the contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The phrase "authorized accordingly" would do that.

Mr. ALDRICH. The phrase "authorized accordingly" I suppose is new legislation, or else it is not necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. HALE. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HALE. As to the last part?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The paragraph is all one thing.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask if there is any estimate for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the paragraph as read.

Mr. HALE. I will modify it by striking out the last part.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not while the point of order is raised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as proposed to be modified.

Mr. HALE. I will strike out that portion relating to the extension of the contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that you have a right to modify it now. The paragraph as changed is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Maine must move it as a new amendment. I do not know anything about the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Maine by his modification to move it as a new amendment as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair rules, and correctly, that the paragraph as it stands is not in order. It is out. The Senator from Maine can move to reinsert as much of it as he thinks is in order, and then take the question on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. After line 521 insert:

Ordnance Department:

For payment to the South Boston Iron Works for guns now being constructed under authority of the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, and under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the same point of order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the amendment as modified would be open to the point of order, the appropriation being made in accordance with existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me if the existing law authorizes the expenditure of certain sums of money no deficiency is necessary, as whenever the law was enacted the appropriation made in accordance with it must have been sufficient under the law as it existed at that time. An additional appropriation in a deficiency bill necessarily changes the terms of the contract and extends the amount to be paid under it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That appears to the Chair to be an argument rather than a point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an argument to show that this is new legislation.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to know of the Senator from Maine what guns are being constructed. I see by the amendment as now offered that certain guns are "being constructed under authority of the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications," and then "under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884;" but it is not stated what they are being constructed for. I should like to know what the acts are which are referred to in this amendment. I should like to know what guns are being constructed by the South Boston Iron Works.

For my part, I think it would be just as sensible for the United States to undertake to arm its naval vessels and Army with bows and arrows and spears as to propose to construct cast-iron guns for the armament of fortifications and naval vessels.

Of course if there has been a contract made by authority of law and the Government is under obligation to pay this money, it may be right to appropriate it; but if it is simply for the purpose of giving employment to the South Boston Iron Works, as was suggested when a similar appropriation was put in the fortification bill of last session, I am not in favor of it. There is nothing in the reports of any of the boards which have been constituted under authority of law, there is nothing in any recent reports of any officer of the Army or Navy, there is nothing in the experience of foreign nations, or in the practice of foreign nations, that would justify the manufacture of cast-iron guns.

I should like to know how this amendment comes here, what sort of guns the South Boston Iron Works are now manufacturing, for what purpose they are being manufactured, under the authority of what law, and what the contracts are. It seems to me it is due to the Senate that it should know before we are called upon to vote this $50,000 for cast-iron guns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as modified.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Maine will give us an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. It seems to me the Senator in charge of the bill should let the Senate understand what the contracts are, whether they are forfeited or not, and what the necessity is for extending them, before we are asked to vote upon this clause of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I have been out of the Chamber during this discussion. Just as I came in I heard the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] make some inquiry about these guns. I have here a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a letter from the Chief of Ordnance in respect of those guns, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1887.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR:

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letter of Hon. H. L. DAWES, United States Senate, of 8th ultimo, referring for examination and report letter from William P. Hunt, president of the South Boston Iron Works, suggesting amendment to section 4, fortification bill, relating to construction of 100 12-inch muzzle-loading rifled cast-iron mortars, &c., and to report——

Mr. ALDRICH. It is evident the letter that is being read has nothing to do with the amendment, unless it is very different in the close from what it is in the beginning.

Mr. DAWES. I may have sent to the desk the wrong paper. I can state from memory in regard to these guns. They were contracted for by two contracts made with the South Boston Iron Works. The Government was to furnish certain tools and implements by which to aid in the construction of the guns. In the construction of one of them the tools and implements furnished by the Government were broken, which caused so much delay in the construction of the gun that they were not able to complete it within the time. The Government itself was unable to fulfill its part of the contract within the time of the contract, and therefore the money lapsed into the Treasury which was appropriated to pay for that gun.

They went on, however, and completed the gun, according to the contract, except as to the time. The failure to complete it within the time, the Government said, was its fault, and not the fault of the South Boston Iron Works.

Therefore, having the completed gun in all respects in conformity with the contract, except as to time, and the Government being in fault, the fact that it was not completed within the time the Government said was no reason why it should not pay for this gun, as it would if it had been completed according to time. The extension of the contract was necessary in order to carry out the completion of the gun according to contract. The money lapsed into the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are the papers which show that recommendation?

Mr. DAWES. I am unable at this moment to put my hand upon the papers, because I have not charge of this matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have had them?

Mr. DAWES. I have had those papers; and the facts are set forth in a letter which is somewhere in the room of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator what the tools were that the Government of the United States was to furnish?

Mr. DAWES. If I only knew, I would tell the Senator from Rhode Island. I only know that some part of the apparatus for the construction of the gun was to be supplied and furnished by the Government, and in the process of making the gun these failed, and the South Boston Iron Works were unable to go on with the construction of the gun according to the contract until new apparatus of that kind was supplied by the Government; and the lapse of time consequent upon that failure of its apparatus was the reason, so the Government says, why the contract was not fulfilled in time.

The Government comes forward and asks that the contract be extended and the money reappropriated, Mr. Hunt having gone on with the work precisely as he would have gone on had there not been any such failure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was a member of the Committee on Ordnance and War-Ships, and visited the South Boston Iron Works two or three years ago in an official capacity, and that committee found, I think I may say without any dispute on the part of anybody, that a large portion of the machinery in that shop, in fact almost all the machinery of any value, belonged to the Government of the United States and was there being used by this company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did it get there?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Vermont asks me how it got there. I do not know how it got there, but it was there. The lathes used by this concern and all the valuable machinery belonged, so we were informed, to the Government of the United States.

If it is true that one of the lathes, which belonged to the Government of the United States and which was being used by the South Boston Iron Company, should have broken down in the process of the construction of the gun, it seems to me rather hard to hold the United States responsible because the South Boston Iron Company did not keep the tools of the United States in repair, or failed to use them in such a way that they could complete the gun within the time contracted for under their contract.

If, as I have reason to believe, that is the kind of deficiency there is on the part of the United States, it strikes me as rather hard to make the United States pay $50,000 for that kind of a default.

Mr. DOLPH. The case made by the Senator from Massachusetts, it appears to me, is a very different case from the one stated in the amendment. If certain guns were constructed by the South Boston Iron Works under contract with the Government, and were not completed within the time limited in the contract, that company may have an equity which it would be well for Congress to recognize, if the facts were before us so that we understood what we were doing. But the amendment speaks of guns now being constructed under the Government, guns not yet constructed.

For my part, I do not wish to vote money at the present time for the construction of cast-iron guns. We have gone to a great deal of expense and trouble to ascertain what kind of guns are necessary for the proper defense of our coast. There was appointed a committee of the Senate of which the late Senator Logan was chairman. That committee took some testimony and received statements from various parties, and recommended the construction of experimental guns, some forged-steel guns, some wire-bound guns and some cast-iron guns. Then, under the authority of law, the Getty board was constituted, and it examined into the question of guns, but made no specific recommendation, I think, as to the proper material for guns. Then came the Gun Foundry Board, and after a thorough examination of the question it emphatically recommended steel as the material for guns; it recommended forged and tempered steel built guns, steel rifles. Then we constituted another special committee, of which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] was chairman, a Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, which examined the question thoroughly and made an elaborate and valuable report, and that committee emphatically recommended steel.

The House of Representatives appointed a committee, of which I think Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, was chairman, and that committee recommended steel as the material for modern power for guns. Then, under the authority of an act of Congress, we had the Board of Fortifications and Other Defenses, and that board emphatically recommended steel.

We have been attempting to get some legislation by which we could secure in this country the steel ingots necessary for the construction of these guns; and while we are doing that we have these propositions continually made for the expenditure of money for the purchase of cast-iron guns.

If the amendment were confined to payment for guns already constructed under authority of law, I should have no objection to it; but, so far as it appears by the amendment, it is to pay for guns yet to be constructed. If the South Boston Iron Works are in default, if they have not kept their contract, then we should do no more than pay them for the guns they have constructed, and stop the construction of these worthless guns, for we have over two thousand cast-iron guns in the Army to-day and about the same number for the Navy, and they are said by the authorities to be worthless for defense.

Mr. DAWES. This is not a question whether it is wise to enter upon the construction of cast-iron or steel guns. Here were two contracts made four or five years ago with the South Boston Iron Works, under a provision of law then existing, to construct these two guns. They have been constructed for the Government, built, completed; the Government has the guns; but they were not completed according to letter of the contract, and therefore they have not been paid for. The Government has the guns; the Government has the benefit of the transaction; and the South Boston Iron Works are out that amount of money.

The Secretary of War has recommended the payment of this money. A provision passed the Senate in the fortification appropriation bill just like it, and it passed the other branch in the fortification bill; and there is now pending in conference on the fortification bill a provision for payment for guns made years ago. The reason why they were not paid for was the reason which I tried to give—that they failed to be made within the letter of the time; and one of them was because of the failure of some sort of apparatus which the Government, by its contract, had agreed to furnish, and the Government recognized the fact that it was its fault; that it had caused the postponement of any attempt to complete the gun within the time, and assured this man that if he would go on and complete it after the time he should have his pay. That did not make any claim upon the Government, I know, but the Government has had the guns and taken them away from the factory.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. Was there more than one appropriation in the fortification bill as it passed the Senate for the South Boston Iron Works? There was an appropriation contained in that bill for payment for cast-iron mortars to be constructed.

Mr. DAWES. This amendment recites it accurately, for it was drawn by the Ordnance Department.

For payment to the South Boston Iron Works for guns now being constructed under authority of the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, and under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884, and the extension of said contracts is authorized accordingly, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. DOLPH. If the guns have been already constructed, and the amendment was drawn in the War Department, why do they say "now being constructed?"

Mr. DAWES. I think I may not have stated that accurately. They are not completed. I have sent for the document which makes the statement of fact. I do not know that I shall be able to get it in time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the amendment go over to be acted upon after the other amendments are disposed of. The Senator from Massachusetts may find his papers in the mean time.

Mr. FRYE. We are ready to vote on it now.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the amendment be passed over.

Mr. HALE. We had better settle it now, one way or the other. We are making very slow progress with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment?

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I wish to announce the pair between my colleague [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] are paired.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] are paired.

Mr. DOLPH (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill., and

A joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.

The message further announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, insisted upon by the Senate, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. J. M. TAYLOR, and Mr. BINGHAM the managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 565, to insert:

To pay the amounts certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for transportation services rendered the War Department over the several railroads which have been built without the aid of Government bonds, as per settlement certificates Nos. 8311, 8385, 6575, 6381, 2982, 7248, 6994, 2983, 7338, 7501, and 7236, being for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, $135,053.81.

To enable the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or the Southern Pacific Company, as assignee of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the amounts found due and which may be found due for transportation services rendered the War Department over the several railroads which have been built without the aid of Government bonds, being for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, $251,444.49.

To enable the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or the Southern Pacific Company, as assignee of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the amounts found due and which may be found due for transportation services rendered the War Department over the several railroads which have been built without the aid of Government bonds, $171,153.92.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In respect to the amendment from line 566 to line 600, I wish to make a motion concerning it. I do not wish to have the amendment of the committee agreed to until I can offer some amendments to it now, and as the paragraphs all relate to the same subject, I move, in line 583, to strike out the words "or the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, as assignee of the Central Pacific Railroad Company," so as to read:

To enable the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to the Central Pacific Railroad Company the amounts found due and which may be found due, &c.

I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of the bill a simple question. I find these are payments running back to the year 1885, said to be due, also payments for 1886 for an account of the War Department, &c. I should like to ask the Senator why it is that these amounts have not been paid?

Mr. HALE. For the reason that the accounts of 1885 were incorporated in the Senate amendments to the deficiency appropriation bill, and the House of Representatives non-concurred and insisted upon its attitude, and the Senate conferees had to give it up.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I believe there is a general statute requiring that the Treasury Department shall pay certain sums of money on account of transportation. I wish to know why it is that the Treasury Department have not settled for these claims to the year 1885?

Mr. HALE. I can tell the Senator exactly. The Treasury Department has settled up the claims, has certified the amounts and that they are due, and has called upon Congress for the money with which to pay them. The Treasury Department, acting in a cautious, conservative, and perhaps praiseworthy manner, finding that controversies had arisen in Congress upon these claims, and that one branch of Congress at least had set itself in the way of their payment, while these questions were up before Congress has not thought proper out of any other current funds to pay these bills.

Of that I do not complain. I should say that if I had had the honor to administer the Treasury Department during this time, and found that one branch of Congress had persistently opposed the payment of these claims, and refused to give money for them when asked, I do not think that I should direct that it be paid out of the current funds and appropriations until the question had been settled.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then these amounts have been put in the various appropriation bills year after year, if I understand the Senator aright?

Mr. HALE. I am reminded of the date of the decision by the Senator from Vermont. The decision was rendered on the 10th day of May, 1886, I think.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There are a good many questions involved in this matter which I think ought to be relegated to the commission which we suppose will be appointed to investigate these affairs.

In the first place, if I am correctly informed, the Treasury Department have refused to pay any bills to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, as assignee or lessee of the Central Pacific property, the claim being on the part of the law officers of the Government and the rulings of the Treasury Department that Congress had never recognized such a lease. Thereupon they have refused to pay any money.

Now, this proposition is brought forward pending the investigation into all these matters as to the legality or the propriety or the right of the managers of the Central Pacific to turn over that property to the Southern Pacific Railroad, and pending the decision of that question they have refused to pay any money whatever.

There is another question involved. You speak of the unaided lines of road. There are pieces of the lines that are unaided lines, over which the business of the Central Pacific Railroad has been diverted, and upon those pieces of road, some of them quite considerable in extent, constructive mileage I understand has been given by the Southern Pacific, as lessee to the parts of lines called unaided lines. They are really competitors of the main line, and have diverted a large percentage of business from the main line. I understand that local freights even are charged on the unaided portion of the line, by that means taking away a very large part of what would be due the Government if properly adjusted between the unaided and the aided portions of the line.

Now, I submit to the Senator from Maine and to the Senate that pending this entire investigation, it seems to me that there should be no recognition in the Statutes of the United States in any sense or form, either expressly or impliedly, of the lease from the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company, inasmuch as it is a question involving very largely the lien that the Government has upon that property.

I shall first try to amend the amendment of the committee, and I therefore move to strike out, beginning from the word "or," at the beginning of line 583, down to and including the word "company," in line 584, so as to make the clause read:

To enable the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to the Central Pacific Railroad Company the amounts found due, &c.

That is the only company that the law officers have ever recognized. The words I propose to strike out read:

Or the Southern Pacific Company, as assignee of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. So far from the Treasury Department declining to in any way recognize this assignment, it sends into Congress its estimates for the money to be paid to the assignee, thereby adopting the assignment and recognizing it. It makes no point, that I ever knew of, in regard to the matter.

Mr. MCPHERSON. And virtually recognizing the lease?

Mr. HALE. Virtually recognizing the lease.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I feel bound to say just a word.

I struggled as hard as I could the other day to get my friend from New Jersey to require this corporation to pay into the Treasury 15 per cent. more than it is now required to pay in of its earnings on the aided lines, which we have a perfect constitutional right to do, as has been decided. The Senator from New Jersey did not think that was right, and so it did not go in.

Now, then, we have a case where this State corporation has performed service, having lines of its own, and which the Supreme Court of the United States has decided on full argument are lines of its own, with which the United States has nothing whatever to do, just as had been decided in the Kansas Pacific case before, one that did fall within this system. The matter has been carried up, as I say, to the Supreme Court, and decided finally that the act called the Thurman act, and the Constitution as well, did not allow the United States to take any possession, by law or otherwise, of the property or the earnings of the parts of these lines that the Government had not aided.

They have performed this service according to law. Whatever their other faults may be, they have done this work; their accounts have been settled at the Departments. The Supreme Court has decided that they are entitled to the money, and there we stand; and the question is whether we think they have been guilty of wrongs in other respects, and in diverting traffic, as very likely they have. I have been trying to correct all that thing for a good many years, without very large success.

But here we have a case where we are absolutely repudiating what has been finally settled by the last tribunal of this country to be their right, merely on the ground that we think in some other respect they are not doing as they ought to do. We cannot stand in honor upon that, or in law either. Any question about the right of this corporation to lease its lines in California to the Southern Pacific is one that nobody has ever had the force to maintain or suggest in any court in the world whatever, for the reason that the powers of this corporation, aside from its contracts with the United States, are derived from the State of California and its laws, exactly like a railroad in New Jersey or Vermont. The California laws have authorized this lease in plain and explicit terms, as I happen to know, having argued a cause which depended upon that very question.

So in respect of the work that has been done by this company in carrying the mails and in carrying troops, and all the things that are done for the Government, this case stands in the attitude of having been finally settled, first by the Department as to how much money had been earned, and then withholding it until the Supreme Court should decide whether it came within the Thurman act or not, and the Supreme Court has decided that it does not come within the Thurman act, for if the Thurman act is construed so that it would come within it it would be unconstitutional.

Can we repudiate with honor a claim of that kind on the ground that we think this company has been guilty of some other kind of mischief? I can not see it; I wanted to make them pay in, as I think it right to do, more of their earnings, that we were entitled to call in to this sinking fund. However, I could not get my friend from New Jersey to see that that was right; but he seems to think it is quite right to repudiate an obligation which is as clear as anything can be.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if the Treasury of the United States, for service rendered to it by the Central Pacific Railway, is supposed to owe the Southern Pacific anything, and if not, why is the name of the Southern Pacific put in here at all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the simple reason that the Southern Pacific, according to the laws of California, took a valid and honest and correct lease, so far as the law goes, whatever its motives may have been. I know nothing good or bad about it, but by an arrangement that sovereign State authorized it to lease, just like a dozen roads in New Jersey, I suppose, are leased by one road or another, and being the lessee, performing the service, is entitled to the money, I suppose.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Vermont takes occasion to refer to something that happened here a few ni ghts ago when we had Pacific railroad matters under consideration, and he accuses me of not being willing to join him in compelling the Pacific railroad companies to pay an increased amount of money into the Federal Treasury for the purpose of protecting the Government obligations. If the Senator from Vermont had appeared before the Senate with an amendment requiring a fixed sum of money to have been paid in by both the Central and the Union Pacific Railroad Companies in a given year, and that fixed sum of money would be equal to the amount the Government paid out for each of those companies as interest or on interest account, he would have found me very willing to have voted with him on such a question.

But when the Central Pacific Railway Company shows that during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886 their earnings were but $800,000, upon which they paid 5 per cent. to the Government as net earnings, making $43,000 in all from net earnings, and on both net earnings and transportation account, paying into the General Government a sum of money which is $1,400,000 less than the Government pays for them, and then when the amendment the Senator from Vermont offered to that bill only compels that line of road to pay $124,000 additional into the Federal Treasury, even then lacking something like $1,300,000 of paying the amount that the Government pays for it every year, I could hardly consent to an arrangement of that kind, particularly as the amount that the Union Pacific Railroad Company would have to pay would be something like $700,000 more than the entire interest account paid for all of its lines to the Government. I am perfectly willing and anxious to make them both pay annually as much money as the Government pays on their account for interest, and in addition to that something for principal.

As to the Central Pacific Railway Company, I believe if the Government would demand of that company all it could do and ought to do, and would do if compelled to do it, it could pay the Government the interest paid annually and not suffer at all. It would do more. It would give to the Union Pacific Railway Company a vast amount of business that it is entitled to, because when these two lines of road were organized and when their charters were given them it was intended that there should be a through line of transportation from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean.

The Central Pacific Railway to-day is nothing but a local road, charging upon unaided portions of its line local rates, while upon the aided portions of its line it is charging such rates as it pleases, which the Government has to pay, but taking a large portion, as it does, from the aided portion of the line and adding it to the constructive mileage given to the unaided portion.

That is the way in which the injustice is done here to the Government, and if you incorporate this provision in the bill the result will be that you have given not only your implied but your expressed sanction to the lease itself to the Southern Pacific Company, and you have also given your express sanction to the fact that the constructive mileage is right, and then they go on in the same way they have been going.

Will some Senator please rise and tell me why, if the Government owe the Central Pacific Railway, which it recognizes as its aided road, which has performed this service, not the Southern Pacific, you should recognize in any sense or form another corporation which has leased the Central Pacific property, which has practically wrecked it, which has turned the business from the Central Pacific Railroad on the Southern Pacific line? Now it is proposed in the last hours of the session to incorporate in an appropriation bill a proviso which recognizes in terms all that, and that too within three days after a resolution of investigation had been passed by both Houses of Congress, and unanimously passed, declaring that it was the purpose of the Government and the duty of the Government to investigate these companies.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, I am in rather a delicate position in regard to this debate. I do not want to go into it extensively, and yet I feel that perhaps I ought to say something. Misstatements are made everywhere.

The Senator from New Jersey talks of that about which evidently he knows nothing. I would not be discourteous to him, and yet I can hardly use other language than to say that the statements he has made are not founded in truth.

The Southern Pacific is the road which Congress provided should be constructed as a part of the Texas and Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific, both of which are roads whose charters were granted by Congress itself, and the roads of which Congress required should be completed.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company has its agents in San Francisco, everywhere in California where they are needed, to see that the business of the State of California and whatever may come to it from the ocean shall go over the Union Pacific to every extent that the agents can obtain the traffic. There is less competition by the Southern Pacific in the hands in which it is now than there would be if it were in the hands of strangers to the Central Pacific. I deny—and there is not a scintilla of evidence for the statement—that business has ever been diverted from the Central Pacific, and they can not do it as long as the Union Pacific are there with their vigilant agents to look after the interests of that road.

I think I have answered the Senator completely.

Mr. McPHERSON. I want the Senator from California to understand that in all these matters the only interest and object I have in view is a public interest. I do not mean to say anything that is discourteous to the Senator from California, but I find a record which has been up and which is in the possession of the Government, from which I quote. I find that the Central Pacific Railway Company has paid to its owners since the organization of that company $34,000,000 in dividends. I find further that it supported the Southern Pacific Railway Company during its construction and during its infancy, that it paid very large mileage as rental upon the uncompleted portions of the Southern Pacific before it became a through line and could stand alone and could pay its own way. In short, the interest on the bonds that were issued by the Southern Pacific officers for the purpose of constructing its line was paid very largely out of the earnings of the Central Pacific. I find that some $30,000,000 of rentals have been paid by the Central Pacific Company in addition to $34,000,000 in dividends; and yet, notwithstanding all that, I find that the Government has received but the beggarly little amount of $6,000,000 as its full share of that entire revenue. I do not know what sort of arithmetic it is that would enable sixty or seventy million dollars to be divided among the owners of this property, out of which the Government has got so very little. Perhaps it can be explained.

After the Southern Pacific Railroad Company had been able to stand alone and secured a route from San Francisco through to the Atlantic Ocean, making a through line to New York, no sooner was that done than that line turned around and in February, 1885, I suppose about the time that some of these bills fell due, made a transfer. I find one of them is due in the June following, and I find that this Southern Pacific or Kentucky company then leased the Central Pacific Railroad. I do not know whether it was within the competency of the stockholders or officers of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to transfer that property over to the Southern Pacific without some special act of Congress authorizing it to be done.

Perhaps it was competent. Perhaps, as the Senator from Vermont says, it being a California corporation, they had a perfect right to do it. But I find in the argument made for the Central Pacific Railroad Company upon the tax questions in the State of California the distinguished counsel employed by that company, whose argument I have before me, declared that the State of California had no control whatever over the Central Pacific property; that it was a corporation of the General Government; that the State of California had given up all her right and claim to sovereignty over that road, and that the General Government was chief in all matters relating to its management.

Now it appears that when a tax question is under consideration in the State of California it is very convenient to them then to make it a Government corporation. When the question of the lease to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company is to be determined it is a California corporation. Well, I do not know but that is all right; I do not know but that it will stand in law, but certainly not in justice.

Further than that, let me say to the honorable Senator that the earnings of the Central Pacific Railway have fallen off to the amount I have stated, eight hundred and forty-odd thousand dollars a year. I find in a report recently made, which I think was made by the president of the Southern Pacific Company, as a sort of an advertisement to induce people to invest in the stock, I suppose, of the Sunset line, as it is called, of the Southern Pacific, it is there claimed that 70 per cent. of the entire through business between New York and San Francisco now goes over that competing line which the poor Government road helped and sustained during all the days when it could not help itself.

Those are the facts which I take from the public records. If the facts are wrong, then as a matter of course I am wrong; but certainly the facts are very black. Pending the investigation, I think that these matters ought to be left where they were.

I will not say a single word further if it will delay action upon the bill. I am perfectly willing to vote. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to my amendment.

Mr. STANFORD. In general terms, I will say in answer to the Senator from New Jersey with regard to the leases which have been made from time to time by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, that the leases have yielded a profit to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The leases were made as nearly even between the companies as possible.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I can not hear the Senator. Will he be so kind as to repeat what he has said?

Mr. STANFORD. I say that the leases made by the Central Pacific Railroad Company have paid to that company a profit, not large, but still a profit. It was intended that neither party should have the advantage of the other in the leases. They work in harmony and to very great advantage to the Central Pacific and to the other companies.

As to the Southern Pacific Company, it is a corporation created under the laws of the State of California. It had the right, however, conferred upon it by Congress to meet the Texas Pacific Railroad and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad at the Colorado River. If business has been divested by those roads from the Union and Central Pacific, it is Congress that is responsible for directing those roads to be built and giving twice the amount of land to each of those two companies that it gave to the pioneer roads, the Central and the Union Pacific. If the Southern Pacific road does take a great deal of the traffic, as I believe it does now—at one time it took over 90 per cent. of the business along the coast of the Atlantic that way—the other roads compete for the interior business; it is only the outside business, and the line has the preference because, being in the control of one company, the freight is delivered with dispatch. But no business has been diverted from the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific lines directly any more than in the operation of that road with its natural advantages, the Union Pacific always being on hand to take care of its interests.

I believe what I have said covers the points noticed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, a single word and I have finished. I have a list furnished me by the accounting officers of the Interior Department showing the amount of rentals paid to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company during a certain period of years. I find in one given year—I only recollect one now, as it would take some little time to examine the papers, but I will hand them to the Senator—I speak of one particular year in which the mileage of the Southern Pacific then had reached such a point that they were entitled to about $2,600,000, I think, on rentals for that year. The net earnings of the entire Southern Pacific system for which that rental was paid amounted to about $700,000. I do not know that those rentals have been a source of profit to the Central Pacific Company, but certainly the computation furnished me does not show it. I may have been deceived.

Mr. STANFORD. I have had no opportunity to examine that point, but as a matter of fact the Southern Pacific Railroad Company when leased to the Central Pacific Company was leased at a fair price, as various other roads were, but the Southern Pacific never lived at the expense of the Central Pacific from beginning to end, and it built itself out of its own property, and the Central Pacific never furnished it a cent otherwise than in connection with what was paid for business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to ask the Senator for information, what was the name of the corporation which built from San Francisco south?

Mr. STANFORD. The Southern Pacific.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Southern Pacific of what?

Mr. STANFORD. Of California.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Southern Pacific Railroad of California?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then why is it that in this bill, in which it is spoken of as the assignee of the Central Pacific, it is called the Southern Pacific?

Mr. STANFORD. For the reason that there was a consolidation. The Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky purchased the stock of all these various railroads, fourteen of them, and it is made of up those various companies. It is a through line; and for convenience, as there was no local law by which we could consolidate them, they obtained a charter from Kentucky to make a through line, with one set of officers and expenses. It is better and it harms nobody. It is a through line under one management, instead of being under fourteen different managers.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask a further question. When the Central Pacific was first leased to some other company, what was the desigation of the company to which it was first leased?

Mr. STANFORD. The Southern Pacific.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company?

Mr. STANFORD. The Southern Pacific Company.

Mr. HOAR (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m., Friday, March 4). I rise to ask a question of the Senator who has charge of this bill. I see there are one hundred and four pages of the bill, of which we have passed only twenty-five, and there are almost always some general amendments to be offered by Senators besides the committee amendments. So if we have the usual luck it will be 6 or 8 o'clock in the morning before we can finish the bill. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine whether it would be agreeable to him to have a motion made to proceed to the consideration of executive business at this time, or whether he prefers that we should wait until we go through the bill before making that motion?

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of completing the consideration of this bill before any interruption occurs. I hope that after taking the vote on the amendment upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered, we may be enabled to go along more expeditiously and get through the bill in the course of an hour or two.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not do that.

Mr. HOAR. I withhold my motion. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I was requested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to announce that they are in conference committee, and that they are paired. The Senator from Iowa, if present, would vote "nay" on this amendment, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], who is absent. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—19.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Beck, | Eustis, | Kenna, | Van Wyck, |
| Berry, | George, | McPherson, | Voorhees, |
| Butler, | Gray, | Payne, | Whitthorne, |
| Call, | Harris, | Ransom, | Wilson of Md. |
| Coke, | Jones of Arkansas, | Vance, | |

NAYS—27.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Blair, | Farwell, | McMillan, | Riddleberger, |
| Bowen, | Hale, | Mahone, | Sewell, |
| Cameron, | Harrison, | Manderson, | Stanford, |
| Cheney, | Hawley, | Miller, | Teller, |
| Cullom, | Hoar, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Williams, |
| Edmunds, | Ingalls, | Morgan, | Wilson of Iowa. |
| Evarts, | Jones of Nevada, | Palmer, | |

ABSENT—30.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Conger, | Jones of Florida, | Saulsbury, |
| Allison, | Dawes, | Maxey, | Sawyer, |
| Blackburn, | Dolph, | Mitchell of Pa., | Sherman, |
| Brown, | Fair, | Morrill, | Spooner, |
| Camden, | Frye, | Platt, | Vest, |
| Chace, | Gibson, | Plumb, | Walthall. |
| Cockrell, | Gorman, | Pugh, | |
| Colquitt, | Hampton, | Sabin, | |

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I shall not press the amendment I intended to offer in line 594, because I suppose the Senate would take like action upon that proposition, and I shall reserve my right to call for a separate vote on the amendment of the committee when the bill is reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley; and

A bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines;

A bill (H. R. 899) for the relief of A. S. Bloom;

A bill (H. R. 1753) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton;

A bill (H. R. 3365) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Samuel H. Moer;

A bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords;

A bill (H. R. 10900) to regulate the construction and operation of elevators within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3184) granting the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah reservations, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 243) to print copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States.

ALICE KELLEY.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "twelve" insert "twenty;" and that the House agree to the same.

H. W. BLAIR,
J. D. CAMERON,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JNO. A. SWOPE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

WILLIAM FIGLEY.

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

BENJ. HARRISON,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
DANIEL ERMENTROUT,
B. M. CUTCHEON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 604, to insert:

Mississippi River Commission: For salaries and traveling expenses of the Mississippi River Commission, and for salaries and traveling expenses of assistant engineers, and for office expenses and contingencies, $15,000.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill to the fact that a provision is contained in the river and harbor bill, which has passed both Houses, providing for the salaries of the Mississippi River Commission, and I inquire whether it should be provided for in both bills.

Mr. HALE. The estimate here was $100,000. So far as the committee could learn as to what was in the river and harbor bill it believed $15,000 were needed here; but if the Senator from Minnesota is entirely confident that the commission, not only for the year to come but to the end of the present fiscal year between now and the 1st of July is taken care of, I am entirely willing this provision should be stricken out.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I can refer the Senator to the language of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. EUSTIS. No provision has been made for the present year.

Mr. HALE. So the Committee on Appropriations supposed.

Mr. HARRISON. I am satisfied the provision is right.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do not know what the deficiency provided for may be, but the language of the river and harbor bill is:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $1,500,000; which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, and for the salaries and traveling expenses of the members thereof.

Mr. HALE. If that is all, that would only apply to the next fiscal year. This provision applies between now and the 1st of July. It is a deficiency for the present year.

Mr. HARRISON. There was no appropriation at all for the current year.

Mr. EUSTIS. No provision was made last year to pay the salaries and expenses of the commission for the current year.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desired to call the attention of the committee to it. I thought it ought not to have been in the river and harbor bill; I am free to say that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the clause from line 620 to 625, inclusive, as follows:

To pay the claim of the estate of T. J. League, deceased, settlement numbered 5245, certified by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 22, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, $10,750.

Mr. COKE. I desire to hear a statement from the Senator from Maine of his reasons for striking out the portion of the bill just read, if he will give them.

Mr. HALE. It is contained in another part of the bill.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator refer me to the part of the bill?

Mr. HALE. I will when we reach it.

Mr. COKE. I have looked through the bill and can not find it. I think it has been omitted elsewhere.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is referring to line 620?

Mr. COKE. Yes.

Mr. HALE. The committee struck that out upon the belief that it is included in the other general appropriations that have been certified, by the direction of Congress, on a re-examination by the Treasury Department to Congress, and that this appropriation is included in that. If the Senator has examined and is entirely certain that it is not, I am willing to take his word, but that is the theory upon which the committee reported to strike it out.

Mr. COKE. I am sure it is not in this bill.

Mr. HALE. Let it stand over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). If there be no objection, the amendment will be passed over for future consideration, and the reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Navy Department," after line 626, to insert:

Contingent and miscellaneous expenses Hydrographic Office: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Hydrographic Office, being for the maintenance of the branch offices, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 641, to insert:

For amount paid by Pay-Director A. W. Russell, United States Navy, to Matthew Wilson, for painting portrait of ex-Secretary Chandler, on bills approved by Hon. William C. Whitney, Secretary of the Navy, being for the service of the fiscal year 1886, $331.50.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that explained as compared with the provision on page 5 to pay Mrs. Morrell $500 for painting a portrait of a late Secretary of the Treasury. The provision here is for three hundred and some odd dollars for this work. What is the difference? Why should there be a difference in the sums?

Mr. HALE. In one case there has been nothing hitherto paid. By agreement, in round numbers the work was to be done for $500. In this case it is made up of amounts that have been paid out of different figures which aggregate in a round sum the exact amount that has been paid. I suppose the portrait here provided for is just as good as the $500 one, but we get it a little cheaper, because the Secretary required that the bills for the frame and for everything else should be separate. That is the amount that was paid for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 647, to insert:

Contingent, Navy: For amount paid by Pay-Director Thomas H. Looker, United States Navy, to E. F. Andrews, for painting portraits of ex-Secretaries of the Navy Borie and Woodbury, on bills approved by Hon. W. E. Chandler, Secretary of the Navy, February 28, 1885, being for the service of the fiscal year 1885, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have found the place where the item referred to by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is included. It is in section 8, at the end of the bill, and therefore I ask that the amendment striking out the clause from line 620 to line 625 be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. It is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 655, to insert:

For amount paid by Pay-Director Thomas H. Looker, United States Navy, to Passed Assistant Paymaster Henry R. Smith, United States Navy, for subsistence of members of the House Committee on Appropriations while making an official visit on board the United States steamer Tallapoosa to the Norfolk navy-yard and Fortress Monroe, in March, 1884, being for the service of the fiscal year 1884, $141.25.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear explained how the House of Representatives has been unwilling to pay its own committee, and the Senate is called upon to do this thing.

Mr. HALE. I do not know anything about this trip. I was not present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why was it not in the bill when it came from the House of Representatives?

Mr. HALE. I cannot say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What have we to do with it?

Mr. HOAR. Can the Senator say what they subsisted upon?

Mr. HALE. No; that is a matter left entirely to the imagination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is almost an insult to the House to force upon them an amendment of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have just had my attention called to the fact that this item is in the text of the bill as it came from the House. The first item should come out. There is a mistake in making it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. HALE. The amendment inserting the clause from lines 656 to 665; it should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote adopting the amendment will be regarded as reconsidered and the amendment disagreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 678, to insert:

Contingent, Bureau of Ordnance: To supply deficiency in the appropriation for the contingent service, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 699, to insert:

To pay outstanding bills on account of the contingent service of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting for the fiscal year 1885, $51.86.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 711, to insert:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

To complete the construction and armament of the three steel cruisers Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, under the Bureau of Ordnance, $120,000;
Under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $84,783;
Under the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, $56,360.87; in all, $261,143.87.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 722 to line 735, inclusive, as follows:

To pay H. Steers amount due for services as a civilian member of the naval advisory board from February 1, 1885, to and including December 31, 1885, as follows:
Eleven months, at the rate of $2,500 per annum, $2,291.63; amount due for necessary traveling and other expenses to October 31, 1885, $208.50; compensation for the six months ending June 30, 1886, at $2,500 per annum, $1,250; in all, $3,750.13.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To pay H. Steers amount due for services as a civilian member of the naval advisory board from February 1, 1885, to and including December 31, 1885, as follows:
Eleven months, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, $4,583.33; amount due for necessary traveling and other expenses to October 31, 1885, $208.50; compensation for the six months ending June 31, 1886, at $5,000 per annum, $2,500; in all, $7,291.83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the clauses from line 750 to line 765, inclusive, as follows:

Steel cruisers, machinery, Bureau of Steam Engineering: To pay S. Archbold amount due for services as a civilian member of the naval advisory board from June 16, 1885, to and including December 31, 1885, as follows:
Six and one-half months, at the rate of $2,500 per annum, $1,354; amount due for necessary traveling and other expenses to November 30, 1885, $174.40; compensation for the six months ending June 30, 1886, at $2,500 per annum, $1,250; in all, $2,778.40.

And in lieu thereof to insert.

Steel cruisers, machinery, Bureau of Steam Engineering: To pay S. Archbold amount due for services as a civilian member of the naval advisory board from June 16, 1885, to and including December 31, 1885, as follows:
Six and one-half months, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, $2,708.33; amount due for necessary traveling and other expenses to November 30, 1885, $174.40; compensation for the six months ending June 30, 1886, at $5,000 per annum, $2,500; in all $5,382.73.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 842, to insert:

Relief of James E. Jouett, rear-admiral, United States Navy: To relieve Rear-Admiral James E. Jouett, United States Navy, from accountability for the sum of $400 paid to him March 6, 1885, by Pay-Inspector John H. Stevenson, United States Navy, upon a voucher for that amount approved February 28, 1885, by the Secretary of the Navy, authority is hereby granted to the proper accounting officers to credit the account of Rear-Admiral Jouett with the said amount expended by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 854, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide for the education of feeble-minded children belonging to the District of Columbia, $409.57.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 872, to insert:

Lighting the Capitol and grounds: For the payment of amount due for gas furnished during a portion of the month of May and the entire month of June, 1885, $1,945.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 876, to insert:

For the payment of the amount due for gas service for the months of May and June, 1886; for the payment of electric lighting for grounds and House restaurant for the months of May and June, 1886; for the salary of superintendent of meters for the months of May and June, 1886; and for the salary of one lamplighter for the month of June, 1886, $4,419.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 895, to insert:

Industrial Christian Home: To aid the Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah in carrying on, under its articles of incorporation, the work of providing employment and means of self-support for the dependent women who shall have renounced polygamy, and their children of tender age, $40,000; and the unexpended balance of the appropriation for aiding in the establishment of an Industrial Home in the Territory of Utah contained in the act of Congress approved August 4, 1886; entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," shall be deemed a part of this appropriation; and the board of control mentioned in said former appropriation shall audit the expenditures under this appropriation and report yearly to the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 921, to insert:

To pay the Union and Pacific Railway Company for telegraphic service rendered the Indian Department in 1884, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884 and prior years, $2.08.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 959, to insert:

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the balance of the accounts and pay to Joseph Paul for paving with asphalt the roadways in the Agricultural Grounds, by contract with the Agricultural Department, under appropriations for that department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, $711.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 988, to insert:

Inland mail transportation, railroad: For mail transportation over non-aided railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, $65,221.46.

Inland mail transportation, railroad: For mail transportation over non-aided railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, $61,525.09, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886.

Inland mail transportation, railroad: For transportation over non-aided railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company: Central Pacific Railroad Company, $3,023.56, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885.

Inland mail transportation, railway post-office-car service: For mail transportation over non-aided railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, $5,169.56.

Inland mail transportation, railway post-office-car service: For mail transportation over non-aided railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, $5,061.41, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1018, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$1,093.56" and insert "$1,104.50;" so as to make the clause read:

Mail depredations and post-office inspectors: For fees to United States marshals, attorneys, and the necessary incidental expenses connected therewith, $104.50, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1025, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$151.70" and insert "$171.55;" so as to read:

Mail depredations and post-office inspectors: For fees to United States marshals, attorneys, and the necessary incidental expenses connected therewith, $171.55, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1032, to insert:

To pay the claim of the Flint and Pere Marquette Railroad Company for additional transportation, certified in House Executive Document No. 70, first session Forty-ninth Congress, $14,394.68.

To pay the claim of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, certified in House Executive Document No. 70, first session Forty-ninth Congress, $5,083.12.

That the proper officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit in the account of O. M. Laraway, late postmaster at Minneapolis, Minn., the sum of $15,330, being the value of certain postage-stamps which were stolen from the safe in said post-office on the 8th day of July, 1886, without the fault or negligence of said postmaster.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. At the end of line 1049 an amendment was left out by inadvertence. I now present it. After line 1049 I move to insert:

That the proper officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit in the account of William E. Blunt, postmaster at Haverhill, Mass., the sum of $260.03, being the value of certain postal funds which were stolen from the safe inside the post-office on the night of the 31st day of October, 1883, without the fault or negligence of said postmaster.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to me, with great respect to both these amendments, the power given ought to be a mere authority, so that the Post-Office Department having investigated would be authorized to pay, and not directed to pay, because this settles it. I move to amend, in line 1043, by striking out the words "and directed;" so as to read:

That the proper officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby authorized to credit in the account of O. M. Laraway, late postmaster at Minneapolis, Minn., &c.

So as to leave the Department to pass on the justice of the claim, as we do in all the cases we pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Chair will put the question on striking out the words indicated by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move the same amendment in the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HOAR. There is no objection to that, but there is a finding in favor of the claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same modification will be made in the amendment of the Senator from Maine; and the question is on that amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to insert after line 1050, the following clause:

To reimburse Shirley C. Ward, special United States attorney for the Mission Indians in California, for expenses and disbursements incurred by him while under such employment, $104.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1057, to insert:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of James M. Ewing, disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice, for the first quarter of 1885, for payments made under approval of the Attorney-General from the appropriation for contingent expenses, miscellaneous expenditures, amounting in all to $1,327.50, as follows:

January 14, 1885, B. Uhle, portrait of Attorney-General MacVeagh, $534.50.

January 19, 1885, F. P. Vinton, portrait of Attorney-General Devens, $775.

January 21, 1885, L. R. Trembly, regilding frame, $18; the same not to involve the payment of any money from the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move, in line 1059, to strike out "and directed" now, so as to put it on the same footing as the others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be considered agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 1068 the name of the artist is misspelled. It should be "Uhlke."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1075, to insert:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Lieut. W. P. Duvall, Fifth Artillery, United States Army, disbursing officer of the board of United States executive departments, New Orleans Exposition, for payments made by order of the said board for filling and engrossing charts for the exhibit of the Department of Justice, amounting in all to $81.75, as follows:

December 1, 1884, to C. Mahon, $37.50.

December 1, 1884, to H. M. McNeal, $10.

December 3, 1884, to S. G. R. Raby, $17.

December 3, 1884, to James V. Kearny, $17.25; the same not to involve the payment of any money from the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 1077, I move to amend in the same way, to strike out "and directed." All these are little private claims.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for payment of judgments and awards recovered against the United States for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, and reported to Congress by the Attorney-General, after line 1272," to insert:

But no action or proceeding which shall be pending July 1, 1887, shall be in any way affected by this repeal.

So as to make the clause read:

And the said act approved March 3, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, but no action or proceeding which shall be pending July 1, 1887, shall be in any way affected by this repeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1314, to insert:

For fees and expenses of marshals, United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1329, to insert:

Fees of commissioners: For fees of commissioners and justices of the peace acting as commissioners, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1354, to insert:

For fees of witnesses, United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $321.50.

For fees of witnesses, United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1883, $5,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1384, to insert:

Miscellaneous expenses: For miscellaneous expenses United States courts, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims, after the word "dollars," in line 1616, to insert:

Leland Brothers & Co., $162.42; William and John O'Brien, $4,352.21; H. G. Morquand, $1,440.57; Morgan Keene & Co., $167.49; Warren Kidder & Co., $39.05; Grant & Son, $841.41; Grant & Co., $94.61; Junius W. Branham, $228; Samuel C. Dunlap, $1,145; J. W. McMath, $171; John C. Brittain, $668.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1631, to increase the total appropriation for the payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims from $136,873.90 to $146,186.66.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1652, to insert:

To pay the awards of the Court of Claims on the following claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, under the act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," namely:

On the schooner Industry, Benjamin Hawkes master, namely: Thomas Cushing, administrator of Marston Watson, $6,555; Charles F. Adams, administrator of Peter C. Brooks, $3,000; William Sohier, administrator of Nathaniel Fellowes, $1,000; H. W. Blagge, administrator, and Susan B. Samuels, administratrix of Crowell Hatch, $1,000.

On schooner Delight, Stephen Curtis master, namely: George Holbrook, administrator of Edward Holbrook, $6,302: Charles F. Adams, administrator of Peter C. Brooks, $4,000; Ebenezer Gay, administrator of executor of the assignee in bankruptcy of Thomas English, $500; Charles F. Hunt, administrator of Joseph Russell, $1,000; H. W. Blagge, administrator, and Susan B. Samuels, administratrix of Crowell Hatch, $1,000.

On schooner Little Peg, William Auld master, namely: Francis King Carey, administrator of Samuel Hollingsworth, $5,960.50.

On ship Theresa, James Brown master, namely: R. Stewart Strobel and Henry L. Bruns, administrators of Thomas Stewart, $6,350.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator from Maine would explain how these French spoliation claims come into this bill. Congress has not yet committed itself to the payment of them.

Mr. HALE. If Congress does not pass this amendment it will not commit itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But how do these items get in here?

Mr. HALE. They are reported from the Court of Claims as judgments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we have never authorized the Court of Claims, to pronounce judgment against the United States on these claims, but only to investigate and report to Congress what they find the facts to be.

Mr. HALE. That is precisely what they have done. They have reported to Congress, and the committee has put in these claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That involves the whole question, and Congress has never committed itself to it. This means some millions of money if you start with these first reports of the Court of Claims; but in the act that Congress passed it avoided committing itself to any responsibility in respect of these claims until it should have all the facts before it and fully considered them.

Mr. HALE. That is precisely what the court has done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see one of their judgments.

Mr. HALE. The court has considered the facts and reports that the facts are established, and the amounts found due in these several cases are the amounts that the committee has incorporated in these amendments. Undoubtedly until Congress passes these amendments and accepts the claims and pays them, which is the object of putting them into this bill, it is not in any way obligated to do it, and that is precisely what the committee asks the Senate to decide.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question of the liability of the United States to pay any of these claims has never yet been determined by Congress. All that has been done hitherto has been to deny any liability until we passed an act authorizing the investigation, and this is not a deficiency, but it is a very important matter. While it may be right that we should decide in the end that these claims ought to be paid, we ought not to foreclose by three or four here a principle which involves them all until we can have full discussion and deliberation.

Mr. HALE. The committee could only proceed as fast as the court proceeds. All the judgments that were certified to us the committee has put into the bill like any other certifications of the Court of Claims. I know of no reason why they should not be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims in respect to these claims is entirely different to that of any ordinary case of a claim against the Government of the United States, a legal right to be paid money like the railway matters we have been discussing. Congress has never yet admitted any legal right in these claimants or moral right to claim from the United States any payment at all. Therefore to begin this business on a deficiency bill, it seems to me, is quite improper. I must ask the Senate to decide. One House has passed a French spoliation bill and then the other.

Mr. HOAR. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont, as he might be misunderstood, to the fact that the two Houses of Congress have repeatedly recognized these claims. I do not mean separately.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I will go on to say that in the bill that we passed we carefully avoided committing the Congress of the United States to any responsibility about this matter whatever, as I remember it. Perhaps I am wrong, but nobody asserts that I am. Then why should we on the last night of the session begin in this way, which in the nature of it, so far as the United States are concerned, if we adopt any one of these amendments, if it is only for $10, our faith is committed to going on because we can not make fish of one and flesh of the others? All these claims ought to be reserved for full consideration. I must divide the Senate on agreeing to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment from line 1653 to line 1682.

Mr. HOAR. While what the Senator from Vermont says may be technically true, yet both Houses were absolutely content. There was no voice raised against the justice of these claims with one exception, and that was only the first year. When the matter was brought up there was no voice raised in either House. One Senator claimed that this was practically a state of war out of which no claim could have arisen against France or against our Government which assumed the burden of France's obligation, but on his attention being called to the fact at the time the bill finally passed that both governments had declared that these men were to be paid; when the complaint was made against France she said she was compelled by the conduct of England to observe this policy toward our vessels, but that the persons injured would all get their pay in the end. Our own Government when applied to, said the same thing to our citizens. The Court of Claims have made reports, in which they fully recognize this, and the decision of Judge Davis of that court is a full and complete recognition of the obligation, on the principles of international law and of domestic obligation, of the Government to its citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment inserting the clauses from line 1653 to line 1682 inclusive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This thing is not to go on so rapidly until we find out and see exactly what the act was that authorized the Court of Claims to examine these cases. I have found the act of January 20, 1885, volume 23, Statutes at Large, page 283:

That such citizens of the United States, or their legal representatives, as had valid claims to indemnity upon the French Government arising out of illegal captures, detentions, seizures, condemnations, and confiscations prior to the ratification of the convention between the United States and the French Republic, concluded on the 30th day of September, 1800, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 31st day of July following, may apply by petition to the Court of Claims, within two years from the passage of this act, as hereinafter provided.

Then there is a proviso and limitation excluding certain classes that I will not take the time to read.

SEC. 2. That the court is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations, not contravening the laws of the land or the provisions of this act, for executing the provisions hereof.

SEC. 3. That the court shall examine and determine the validity and amount of all the claims included within the description above mentioned, together with their present ownership, and, if by assignee, the date of the assignment, with the consideration paid therefor.

Then it is provided that they shall receive suitable testimony, &c. The court shall cause notice of all petitions to be given, &c. The Secretary of State shall procure evidence and documents from abroad.

SEC. 6. That on the first Monday of December in each year the court shall report to Congress, for final action, the facts found by it, and its conclusions in all cases which it has disposed of and not previously reported. Such finding and report of the court shall be taken to be merely advisory as to the law and facts found, and shall not conclude either the claimant or Congress.

That is what it was. It was a mere report, and therefore the passage of a single one of these claims in this deficiency bill (where they have no business at all, for they ought to be in a regular appropriation bill) is, it seems to me, a final judgment on the part of Congress between now and 12 o'clock to-day that all these claims are to be paid. Perhaps they ought to be, but it is a question of great importance that ought to be considered.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that one House of Congress or the other has frequently and often with great unanimity—though I do not quite agree with him about that—said that these matters ought to be paid; but Congress, in passing this act, took great care to say that it did not commit itself at all, but would put them in a condition to be considered. This is not the time to consider them, and without prejudice to what we may do hereafter I must ask the Senate to vote on this question.

Mr. HALE. The scope and effect of the act is entirely clear and explicit as a recognition of the justice of these claims. The Court of Claims is a tribunal constituted by the Government for the purpose of considering questions between citizens and the Government. There never was a time until the act of Congress referred to was passed when these claims had received recognition by Congress accompanied or followed by the signature of the President to any act. Here was a direct purpose on the part of Congress to take these claims, recognize them as being just, and submit them to a tribunal that should pass upon the several amounts due in the individual cases. The Court of Claims has considered all the facts. The Government from time to time has appropriated money for the investigatian of foreign records and archives furnishing evidence bearing upon these cases. The Court of Claims has had the benefit of all that evidence in the individual cases that are incorporated in this bill and has decided that the amounts named here are due. Now it is for Congress to complete the steps that it has taken in recognition of their validity by the payment of these claims. That is all that is required by this amendment that the committee has reported. I am entirely willing to leave it to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will first make the point of order that there is no estimate for this; that it is not to carry out the provisions of any existing law. If my point of order is good it will save the time consumed in taking the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order, but will leave the question to the Senate. He is not familiar with the question, and prefers that it should be passed upon by the regular Presiding Officer. He will ask the President pro tempore to take the chair.

The President pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment is moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair labors under the disadvantage of not having heard the statement of the point of order.

Mr. HALE. This matter has been submitted to the consideration of one of the standing committees of this House which has reported it as an amendment on this bill and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations, so that it has the sanction not only of the fundamental statute recognizing these claims but is made in order by the action of a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What committee referred it to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] can state that. It is my impression that he reported it as the action of a committee.

Mr. MAHONE. No, Mr. President, it was not reported as the action of any committee. It was introduced as an amendment, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is in accordance with a report of the Committee on Claims to this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair is advised, then, the amendment has not been reported by any standing committee of the body.

Mr. HALE. I had the impression that the Senator from Virginia reported it from a committee.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest to the Chair, this comes within the provision that it is moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate under the first clause of Rule XVI. Then the second clause of Rule XVI says the amendment shall be offered at least one day before it is considered referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It never has been held that the Committee on Appropriations had not the same right as any other standing or select committee of the Senate, and that if it recommend an appropriation it can not be in order if it has been referred to it regularly one day before it is reported. This is not an amendment offered outside; it is an amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and all the appropriation bills are full of such items referred to the committee one day before, such as the public buildings items, for the construction of public buildings, and a great many others every year. The Appropriations Committee has precisely the same right as any other committee, and if the amendment is reported by it it is in order if it has been referred to it a day before by any single member. I have acted on that theory, I should presume, twenty times, and I suppose nearly every other Senator has.

Mr. HALE. I think that the distinction on the point suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts is this: Where the Committee on Appropriations upon a matter duly referred to it, as in this case, after one day considers a subject and reports it to the Senate, that is equivalent, of course, to the action of any other standing committee. If this amendment was moved outside by the Senator from Virginia without the action of any committee, the point of order that no standing committee had considered it and reported it would be good; but it seems to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts as to the action of the Appropriations Committee is pertinent and good. Otherwise the Appropriations Committee is the one committee in the Senate that can not by its action make a subject in order by reporting it upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The reference of an amendment here by an individual Senator to a committee is entirely outside of the rule. It is amendments reported from a standing or select committee of the Senate that are to be referred one day before, as the Chair will see on reading the rule, to the Committee on Appropriations. This amendment was not reported from any standing or select committee, but was offered by my friend from Virginia as it was now stated, and was sent to the Committee on Appropriations. He would have exactly the same right to offer it in the Senate now as he would have to offer it and send it to the committee, and no more; and therefore, so far as the fact of its having been offered and referred is concerned, it is not within the rule at all. The other part of the question is whether any committee can report any particular appropriation bill on its own action without any previous notice to the Senate by an introduction of an amendment, and a reference to the same committee or some other make in order an amendment of this kind? That is what the real question is?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Vermont one question. Suppose that the Senator from Virginia instead of thus referring the amendment which he introduced to the Committee on Appropriations had referred it to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Claims, and either of those committees had reported in favor of it and given the sanction of the action of a standing committee of the body, that no doubt would have made it in order. Here is the Committee on Appropriations, the one committee which, if an amendment is referred to it, can not make it in order by putting it on the appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, with the leave of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, before this matter is decided, to ask him what has been the uniform practice of that committee in reference to this matter, and whether it is not true that if a member of the Senate one day beforehand referred to his committee a proposed amendment to an appropriation bill and that committee itself reported it in the bill, it has been the uniform custom of the Senate to treat it as not subject to point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that has been the rule, and the subject of the amendment itself is a proper one, according to law.

Mr. HOAR. Of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold, in view of the statements which have been made, that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. SHERMAN'S name was called). The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. I voted inadvertently, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." Assured that the Senator from Nebraska, if present, would vote "yea," I ask leave to vote.

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], but at any time that it is necessary to make a quorum I have the liberty to vote.

Mr. GRAY. If it is necessary to make a quorum I record my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—36.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor; and

A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London.

The message also announced that the House having proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the bill (S. 856) entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio," returned to the Senate by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives with the message of the President returning the bill; and that it had

Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. TUCKER, and Mr. PARKER the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

JOHN A. LONDON.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit a conference report which requires no action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

BENJ. HARRISON,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
FRANK L. WOLFORD,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Managers on the part of the House.

PHILIP TAYLOR.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit another conference report which requires no action.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Philip Taylor, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

BENJ. HARRISON,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
EGBERT L. VIELE,
JAS. S. NEGLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I submit the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 18, 19, 24, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 7, 8, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 26, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$625,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract, two steel gunboats, each of about 1,700 tons displacement, of the type of Gunboat No. 1, at a cost, exclusive of armament, of not more than $550,000 each, two steel cruisers to be provided with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable. The cost of both of said cruisers in the aggregate, complete, exclusive of armament, and excluding any premiums that may be paid for speed for the same, shall not be more than $3,000,000. The sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated toward the construction of said vessels. That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under the contract, save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture. The contracts for the construction of said cruisers shall contain provisions to the effect that the contractor guarantees that when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, the vessels shall exhibit a maximum speed of at least 19 knots per hour; and for every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guarantee the contractor shall receive a premium over and above his contract-price of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guaranteed speed there shall be deducted from the contract-price the sum of $50,000.

"In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act it shall be required that one of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, one of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connecting therewith, and two of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve.

"If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for such contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels cannot be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall authorize the construction of said vessels, or either of them, elsewhere in the United States.

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for the construction of cruiser No. 1, known as the Newark; and the limit of cost of said vessel is hereby extended to $1,300,000, exclusive of armament."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That, for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the sums of money hereinafter named are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the President, in the exercise of his discretion, upon plans and specifications to be furnished by the Navy Department.

"For floating batteries or rams, or other naval structures, to be used for coast and harbor defense, $1,000,000. The final cost of said floating batteries, rams, or other naval structures, exclusive of armament, shall not exceed $2,000,000.

"For the purchase of and the trial and testing of torpedoes and appliances using explosives, to be operated from naval vessels, floating batteries, or rams, $50,000, which sum shall be immediately available.

"That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be, so far as practicable, of American production, and furnished and manufactured in the United States, and all contracts made for their construction shall be under the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled, 'An act to increase the naval establishment:' Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such civilian expert aids, additional draughtsmen, writers, copyists, and model-makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and strike out on page 28 of the bill lines 2 to 18, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. For expenditure towards the construction and completion (exclusive of armament) of the five double-turreted monitors, the four vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, and the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886, $2,420,000.

"Towards the armament, of domestic manufacture, for the vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, of the vessels authorized by sections 1 and 2 of the act of August 3, 1886, of the unfinished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, and of the Miantonomoh, and of the vessels authorized by this act, $2,128,362.

"Towards procuring, testing, and delivering the armor and gun steel for the vessels authorized by section 1 of the act of August 3, 1886, and the unfinished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, and the vessels authorized by this act, $1,000,000: Provided, Said armor and gun steel shall be of domestic manufacture."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
JOHN R. THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Maine who has charge of the bill please tell the Senate how much money it appropriates as agreed upon in conference and for what specific purposes?

Mr. HALE. To begin with, there was no great controversy between the conferees representing the two Houses as to the general appropriations for the Department for its running expenses. The real subject-matter that took time to settle was the increase of the Navy as found in the several items that have been reported by the conference committee.

The conferees on the part of the Senate found the House conferees very set and determined as to the amounts of appropriation. The House conferees would not consent to the appropriations that had been made by the Senate, which covered all of the sums required running through three, four, or five years for the completion and armament of the different naval structures provided for by the Senate, and insisted that the appropriations should be made piecemeal year by year. The Senate conferees found that the House conferees were so firm and determined upon this that they yielded.

So the amounts covering all the construction of the ships and the rams and the gunboats and the floating batteries, which the Senate provided for, are very largely reduced, because only appropriations are made for the next fiscal year. These appropriations amount, in addition to the running expenses of the Department, to between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000 for what may be called the new establishment, the increase of the Navy. That comprehends four vessels; that comprehends $2,000,000 for harbor defense, with a small appropriation for torpedoes and experiments.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the Senator says "harbor defense" he means floating batteries?

Mr. HALE. Floating batteries, rams, and other structures. The language of the amendment is "for coast and harbor defense."

Then there are $2,500,000 for work on vessels already begun. There are a little more than $2,000,000 for work upon the iron-clad monitors, which, when completed, will be a feature in harbor defense. There are $4,000,000 for armor, armor plates, and gun steel or forgings, which, together with what the Secretary already has, will enable him to offer inducements to manufacturers to establish a plant to the extent of from 12,000 to 13,000 tons of steel for armor and for gunboats.

The House conferees consented to the method adopted by the Senate of distributing this fund among vessels for harbor defense and upon cruisers provided by this act. The feature adopted by the Senate of additional premium for increased speed in the way of an incentive and the penalty of a reduced appropriation if the initial point is not reached was conceded by the Senate. That initial point, upon the insistance of the other House, was changed from 20 knots to 19 knots.

These are general features of the report. The amounts allowed were all that the Senate conferees could obtain the consent of the House conferees to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Only providing for four new vessels?

Mr. HALE. Only four new ships.

Mr. HAWLEY. While the bill is not all that I presume the committee would have desired, and some of us would have hoped for, there are in this report some very peculiar reasons for congratulation. While we have had an eight months' war over the question whether we should fool away our time making experiments upon antiquated guns the Navy has succeeded in getting such an appropriation and such orders for new ships that in order to make the armor and get the rough gun-metal for the guns and for the armament of these ships, the Secretary of the Navy, without any cast-iron restriction, is at liberty to contract for some 12,000 tons of steel, which will be forged steel of the best quality under the modern processes. While we have considered in the Senate the general question of what shall be done to rearm the country, and while the fortifications conference committee may amuse itself as much as it pleases, and there is no fortifications bill for this year and there will be none for next year, the victory is won, and in a few months contracts will be made that will justify establishing in this country a costly plant, up to the highest demands of modern science known abroad or at home.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have not changed in the least my own opinion formed from my study of what the naval demands of the country require, but as to the differences between the two Houses, I think a very fair and just compromise has been effected, and I am certain that it will receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I intended, as one of the conferees on this bill, to say something about the reasons that induced me to sign the report, and even to agree to it, but the deficiency bill is not yet passed, and therefore I will not say anything now, but on some other conference bill before the final adjournment I expect to give my reasons for voting for this report.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MILLER, Mr. WILKINS, and Mr. G. E. ADAMS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, insisted upon by the Senate, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. D. B. HENDERSON the managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1683, to insert:

Senate:

For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, &c., in the employ of the Senate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $14,229.08.

For horses and wagons, $1,500.

For fuel, oil, and cotton waste for heating department, $2,000.

For furniture and repairs of furniture, $3,000.

For folding speeches and pamphlets, $4,500.

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $5,000.

For expenses of inquiries and investigations, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1699, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Caroline W. Pike, widow of Hon. Austin F. Pike, late a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, deceased, the amount of compensation as a Senator from October, 1886, to March 3, 1887, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1706, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Mary A. Logan, widow of Hon. John A. Logan, late a Senator from the State of Illinois, deceased, the amount of compensation as a Senator from December 27, 1886, to March 3, 1887, $917.81.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to this amendment, and I move to strike out, in line 1711, the words "March 3," and insert "December 27;" and then, in line 1712, to strike out "$917.81," and insert "$5,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand there are several precedents for allowing more than has been given by the amendment of the committee, and I think there are peculiar reasons why my amendment ought to be adopted. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing a matter of this kind. I hope the amendment I have offered will be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the paragraph for the widow of Hon. Austin F. Pike to make it exactly the same thing, to December, and $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. No; from October 1886, to October, 1887.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good. I move, to make it conform, to strike out, in lines 1704 and 1705, "March the 3d," and insert "October;" and in lines 1705 and 1706 to strike out "two thousand," and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Caroline W. Pike, widow of Hon. Austin F. Pike, late a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, deceased, the amount of compensation as a Senator from October, 1886, to October, 1887, $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as amended is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1713, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay W. R. Reynolds for services as messenger of the Senate from January 7 to February 3, 1885, inclusive, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, the sum of $104.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1719, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay W. P. Brownlow for extra services in folding-room, $240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1722, to insert:

To pay Thornton A. Jackson, laborer of Senate from February 7, 1887, to March 4, 1887, inclusive, $52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1726, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William M. Olin the sum of $123.33, being the amount of his compensation as clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs, withheld from him by reason of his holding the office of clerk of customs, from December 16, 1885, to January 21, 1886; the same to be paid out of any balance of the appropriation for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others, Senate, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1737, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay George N. Stranaham for extra services on the Senate elevator from April 1, 1886, to March 1, 1887, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1742, to insert:

For the purchase of the Edison electric-light plant, including dynamo base and frame, engine, belting, steam-pipes, and fittings, wiring, lamps, sockets, chandeliers, drop-lights, shades, and all other appurtenances now and for some thirty months on trial in the Senate wing of the Capitol, including the cost of engineer prior to December 1, 1886, $5,350; and the Architect of the Capitol is hereby authorized to expend the money appropriated by the act of August 4, 1886, for an electric-light plant; and he shall report to the next Congress what, if any, will be the additional expense for fixtures, and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1784.

Mr. GORMAN. In line 1784 I move to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five" and insert "six hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that be explained.

Mr. GORMAN. This is a provision for the stationery of certain deceased members of Congress. As it came from the House it provided for only three, whereas there are five.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a House matter.

Mr. GORMAN. It is an oversight, and they have called our attention to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1784, to insert:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay N. G. Ordway for rent of land used for a stable for the House post-office from January 1, 1885, to December 31, 1886, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1803.

Mr. ALLISON. At this point I desire to offer an amendment to insert a matter omitted in the House because of the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a good reason for our interference?

Mr. ALLISON. I do this at the unanimous request of the Committee on Elections of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It illustrates the method of legislation somewhere.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "dollars," in line 1803, I move to insert:

To George W. Steele, additional expenses, $1,000.

And, in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "four" and insert "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1843, to insert:

To pay one hundred compositors and eight pressmen employed exclusively at night on Congressional work during the second session Forty-ninth Congress, $60 each, $6,480, to be paid only to those who have received no extra compensation for night work.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following amendment to the amendment: Strike out all the paragraph and insert:

The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay 25 per cent. in addition to the amount paid for day labor to the employés of the Government Printing Office, such as compositors, pressmen, stereotypers, laborers, press-feeders, RECORD folders, and engineers who have been and are exclusively employed on the night forces of the Government Printing Office during the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Printing and has thoroughly investigated this matter and knows more about it than I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HALE. It is undoubtedly subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont raise any point of order?

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not make a point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand the amendment. Let the Senator explain it, reserving the point of order for the time being.

Mr. GORMAN. Some of the employés of the Government Printing Office who are at work during the session are compelled to remain from eight to twelve hours at night, beginning at 7 or 8 o'clock and working after 12 at night and till the next day sometimes. The rule in all private printing offices in the country is to pay for night labor about 25 per cent. more than for day labor. The substitute that I have offered for the committee's amendment embraces all who are on night work at the Government Printing Office. The whole amount involved is only $10,000.

Mr. HARRIS. Does it allow the payment usual in such cases?

Mr. GORMAN. Usual in such cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not make any point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am not familiar with questions of order, but I desire to offer an amendment here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to action on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No, sir.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire——

Mr. HALE. Unless the Senator is offering an amendment to a committee amendment, I hope we may go through with the bill until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague agrees to do that.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to section 3.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the Senator in charge of the bill to explain what the third section means. It came to my knowledge a few days ago that under some act of Congress the Treasury Department is now engaged in paying balances of salary, &c., to officers of the Army of the United States who deserted its flag and went into the rebellion down to the time when they were finally dismissed from the service and after they had left their regiments, and so on. I want to know whether this is to cover any more cases of that kind.

Mr. HALE. I do not so understand. The committee was very careful about all ante bellum claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How came the act to authorize such payments as I have described?

Mr. HALE. There is no appropriation law that authorizes such payments. If there has been any law on the subject passed by Congress, it is a specific statute. The Committee on Appropriations has in every case cut off the bills all ante bellum claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I asked the Second or Fourth Auditor—whoever it is who has charge of Army claims—in writing, and got his reply that his authority for paying that sort of thing was derived, I think, from a deficiency bill, the date of which he gave to me, and which, I think, I read or called the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to not long ago. It is an interesting public fact. That is all I care to say about it just now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 3, under the head of "Interior Department," after the word "years," in line 80, to strike out "to pay the claims numbered 253239 and 256060, certified in said Executive Document No. 49, $36.46," and insert "$142,000.71;" so as to make the clause read:

For geological survey, 1884 and prior years, $142,000.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, after line 87, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

For data respectiug the agricultural needs of the arid regions of the United States, 1882, $39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 133, to insert:

For heating apparatus for public buildings, 1886, $4,692.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, after the word "years," in line 179, to strike out "for payment of the claim numbered 9147 certified in said Executive Document No. 49, $9.40," and insert "$34.87;" so as to make the clause read:

Indian service: For contingencies of the Indian Department, 1884 and prior years, $34.87.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, after line 189, to insert:

For telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies, 1884 and prior years, $42.67.
For transportation of Indian supplies, 1884 and prior years, $303.77.
For traveling expenses of Indian inspectors, 1884 and prior years, $147.77.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 212, after the word "years," to strike out "for payment of the claims numbered 89644, 89643, and 89033 certified in said Executive Document No. 49, $42.34" and insert "$318.26;" so as to make the clause read:

For Signal Service transportation, 1884 and prior years, $318.26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 247, after the word "years," to strike out:

Except the claim numbered 81102 in said Executive Document No. 49, $1.006.21.

And insert "$1,079.69;" so as to make the clause read:

For regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department, 1884 and prior years, $1,079.69.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. Why is that stricken out? It is striking out one particular claim.

Mr. HALE. We do not strike it out; we restore it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; you strike it out. You except the claim and then strike out the exception.

Mr. HALE. They are all one class of claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was that claim that was excepted?

Mr. HALE. I do not remember what the particular claim is, but the course of the committee, where these claims have been certified and audited and of the same kind, was to put them all in. The other House in some instances struck out particular items, and we reinserted them. What this particular one is I do not now remember; it is a small one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 3, line 256, after the word "years," to strike out "except the claim of the Central Pacific Railroad Company certified in said Executive Document No. 49, $10,578.15," and to insert "$280,167.98;" so as to make the clause read:

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, 1884 and prior years, $280,167.98.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department claims allowed by the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller," after line 297 of section 3, to insert:

For transportation and recruiting Marine Corps, 1884 and prior years, $3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Claims allowed by the Sixth Auditor," after the word "numbered," at the end of line 345 of section 3, to strike out "8644 and;" and in line 348, after the number "49," to strike out "$47,935.23" and insert "$48,079.04;" so as to make the clause read:

For deficiency in postal revenues, 1884 and prior years, except the claims numbered 8646 in said Executive Document No. 49, $48,079.04.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, under the head of "Treasury Department," after line 30, to insert:

Miscellaneous: For Coast and Geodetic Survey (western division), 1883, $16.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, under the head of "Navy Department," after line 34, to insert:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses Naval Observatory, 1884 and prior years, $6.39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, under the head of "claims allowed by the First Auditor and the Commissioner of Customs," after line 71, to insert:

For expenses of revenue-cutter service, 1884 and prior years, $54.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 5, the following:

SEC. 5. That for the payment of the following supplemental list of claims which are fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 110, second session Forty-ninth Congress, there is appropriated as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE SECOND AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

For pay of two and three year volunteers, 1871 and prior years, $13,891.90.
For pay, &c., of the Army, 1884 and prior years, $1,807.20.
For bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, 1871 and prior years, $14,350.30.
For bounty, act July 28, 1886, 1880 and prior years, $2,990.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE FIRST COMPTROLLER.

For fees of clerks, United States courts, 1884 and prior years, $38.

NAVY DEPARTMENT CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE FOURTH AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

For pay of the Navy, prior to July 1, 1884, $536.73.
For pay, miscellaneous, 1884 and prior years, $42.44.
For contingent, Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, 1884 and prior years, $44.64.
For provisions, Navy, Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, 1884 and prior years, $565.20.
For enlistment bounties to seamen, prior to July 1, 1884, $233.34.
For bounty for the destruction of enemies' vessels, prior to July 1, 1884, $74.45.
For construction and repair, Bureau of Construction and Repair, 1884 and prior years, $598.55.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE SIXTH AUDITOR.

For deficiency in postal revenues, 1884 and prior years, $42.66.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 6, the following:

SEC. 6. That for the payment of the following supplemental list of claims which are fully set forth in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. —, second session Forty-ninth Congress, there is appropriated as follows:
For transportation of the Army and its supplies, 1884 and prior years, $125.
For subsistence of the Army, 1884 and prior years, $21.
For incidental expenses Quartermaster's Department, 1884 and prior years, $16.50.
For pay, transportation, services, and supplies of Oregon and Washington volunteers in 1855 and 1856, 1871 and prior years, $31.02.
For commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States and to soldiers on furlough prior to July 1, 1884, $466.25.
For horses and other property lost in the military service prior to July 1, 1884, $1,390.96.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to know what the document is that is referred to on line 3 of section 6. There is a blank there for the number.

Mr. HALE. That has not been inserted, but I have sent to the clerk of the committee for the number of the document. It is the last claims document that came in only a few days ago. I will put in the number.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 7, the following:

SEC. 7. For transportation of the Army and its supplies: To pay Randolph Barton, trustee, &c., and other claimants enumerated in the memorandum of the Second Comptroller, House Executive Document 210, page 25, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, the sums severally reported therein, and amounting to the sum of $73,105.64, said sums having heretofore been reported by the Secretary of the Treasury as audited claims in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, and enumerated in House Executive Documents 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, under "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

For transportation of the Army and its supplies: To pay the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and other claimants enumerated in Schedule C, House Executive Document 210, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, the sums severally reported therein, and amounting to the sum of $97,704.57 (see pages 23 and 24 of said House Executive Document 210), said sums having heretofore been reported by the Secretary of the Treasury as audited claims in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, and enumerated in House Executive Documents 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, under "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 8, the following:

SEC. 8. To pay the claims re-examined in compliance with the requirements of the deficiency act of August 4, 1886, and certified by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 22, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, $77,769.64.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor;

A bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.; and Joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HALE. On page 91, in section 3, after line 350, I offer an amendment which is of the same nature as the clause preceding.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, after line 350, it is proposed to insert:

Claims allowed by the Sixth Auditor for compensation of postmasters, readjusted under the act of March, 1883, and reported to Congress in Senate Executive Document numbered 116, second session, Forty-ninth Congress, as due and unpaid, payable from deficiency in the postal revenues for 1884 and prior years, $57,501.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit an amendment to come in on page 39, section 1, after line 935.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 935 of section 1, after the word "cents," it is proposed to insert:

For payment to the Choctaw Nation, $2,858,798.62; the same being the amount of a judgment in favor of the said Choctaw Nation, rendered on appeal by the Supreme Court of the United States at the October term of said court, in the year 1886; and that said sum shall be paid over directly to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I have an amendment to offer which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan will please indicate the line of the bill in which the amendment is to appear.

Mr. PALMER. Let it be inserted at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay to Chittenden Brothers, contractors, for money expended in the construction of a dam at the Great Falls of the Potomac over and above that contemplated in the contract with said Chittenden Brothers as amended, the sum of $15,000, payable from any unexpended balance of money appropriated for the construction of such dam.

Mr. HARRIS. That is a private claim.

Mr. PALMER. I send to the desk a statement of the case which the Secretary will please read. Then if any further remarks are required I will make them.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of S. H. Chittenden and George B. Chittenden, citizens of the United States, trading under the firm name of Chittenden Brothers, and carrying on the business of general contractors, respectfully shows:

That the bill (S. 938) passed the Senate August 4, 1886, and in Committee of the Whole House of Representatives was laid aside to be reported to said House with a recommendation that it do pass, February 14, 1887. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 15, 1887.)

That the petitioners are advised that in the present state of business in said House it is impossible that said bill can be reached for such virtually formal action as indicated in the preceding paragraph of this petition.

That the exceeding merit of said bill (which, as stated, has passed the Senate and the Committee of the Whole, House of Representatives) is exhibted in Sen-Report 1413, a copy of which is hereunto appended.

Wherefore, in order that the petitioners may not be subject to further undeserved loss in the faithful execution of a public work, they ask that provision be made in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to them of the approved sum of $15,000 out of the unexpended balance of appropriation for said mentioned dam at the Great Falls of the Potomac.

Mr. PALMER. I will state that this provision was in a bill which passed the Senate at the last session. It went over to the other House and passed the Committee of the Whole there, but owing to their changing and going to some other order of business it did not get to a final vote in the House. It is only the stress of the circumstances of the individuals that impels me to offer it now. This relief means the saving of these persons from bankruptcy. It takes no money out of the Treasury. There will be $10,000 balance left out of the amount appropriated for that work after they are allowed this additional sum.

Mr. HARRIS. This is a private claim. I am not sure whether I did not assent to it as a private claim in the Committee on the District of Columbia, but there are constituents of mine who have claims audited in a much more satisfactory manner than this, which amount to perhaps $100,000, that I do not think in order to offer as an amendment to this bill. This claim is not in order upon this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee raises the point of order?

Mr. HARRIS. I do.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to have the Senator state his point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. My point of order is that this is a private claim and you can not insert it as an amendment to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. PALMER. I will say that I was instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report this amendment. We have gone through all the forms prescribed. I am not sufficiently a parliamentarian to cope with my friend the Senator from Tennessee in the discussion of parliamentary rules and regulations, but it seems to me that under the circumstances the amendment can come in on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The fourth clause of Rule XVI reads:

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The Chair would hold that under that rule the amendment is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would strike out most of this bill. It ought to be applied to all of it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I offer an amendment to which I hope the members of the Committee on Appropriations will consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 483 of section 1, on page 20, it is proposed to insert:

For renewal of the Signal Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this money shall be used in laying a new cable at such point until the Secretary of War shall be fully satisfied that it is impossible, with all reasonable and proper efforts, to repair the broken cable at such place, for the repair of which the sum of $500 of the above amount may be used.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish to take time. I will simply say that this is recommended by the Chief of the Signal Service and by the Secretary of War. The amendment was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was recommended by that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I have modified it so as to provide that the $500 which shall be used to repair the cable, if it is possible to do it, shall come out of the $5,000.

Mr. HALE. Is this recommended by the head of a Department?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and by the Military Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the papers read.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will have the papers read if required.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the papers referred to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. First read the letter of the Secretary of War.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 14, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter of the 10th instant from the clerk of your committee, inclosing, for the views of this Department, a copy of a proposed amendment to the House bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, &c., namely: $5,000 for renewal of the Signal Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, and $500 for the repair of the broken cable, if possible.

In reply I beg to invite attention to the inclosed report of the 11th instant on the subject, from the Acting Chief Signal Officer, in which the repair or renewal of the cable in question, as provided for in the amendment, is recommended on the ground of its great value to the commercial interests of the Pacific coast.

The copy of the amendment inclosed in the letter from your committee is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now I ask that the letter of the Chief Signal Officer may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 11, 1887.

SIR: Referring to H. R. 113, and the amendment proposed by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, I have the honor to report that July 31, 1886, the cable across the Columbia River failed, presumably broken by some ship anchored in its vicinity. About September 1, 1886, a small steamer was hired for three and a half days, but failed to raise the cable, owing to its being heavily sanded. In October a second attempt was made, in which a steamer was employed for five days, and this attempt was unsuccessful for the same reasons as before. These attemps were made at an expense of $367.50, and in these trials all means at hand were exhausted. It was later asked that the light-house tender Manzanita be used for a third attempt, but her services have not yet been spared, and it is more than doubtful if anything could be done beyond the recovery of a mile of the cable.

The cost of the original cable was over $6,000, it having three conductors. It would be more economical for the Government to buy a new cable of one conductor for the whole distance than to purchase a cable of the old pattern to be spliced with the mile which could be recovered.

The cable in question is represented, and I believe correctly, as being of great value to the commercial interests of the Pacific coast, and its repair or renewal is recommended on this ground.

In case of bad weather, vessels lying off the mouth of the Columbia River are reported from one to three days earlier when the cable is in operation than otherwise, a not unimportant fact considering the great distances between the harbors on the Pacific coast. The appropriation for the renewal is reasonable in amount and the proviso is entirely acceptable to this office, although it is more than probable the $500 will be spent without avail.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. GREELY,
Captain, Fifth Cavalry, A. S. O. and Asst.,
Acting Chief Signal Officer, United States Army.

The honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. BECK. Read the last few lines again.

The Secretary read as follows:

The appropriation for the renewal is reasonable in amount and the proviso is entirely acceptable to this office, although it is more than probable that the $500 would be spent without avail.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. He thinks the effort to repair the cable will be a failure.

Mr. BECK. They will never make the effort if you give them the $5,000 now.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. They can not use the balance under the amendment until they do make an honest effort, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I propose, on page 76, after line 1849, to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 1849 of section 1 it is proposed to insert:

To pay the sum of $71.25 each to J. A. Patterson, John T. Whitaker, W. E. Miller, and John Talbert; $21.75 each to John A. Bayly and A. M. Sprague; $21 to R. W. Simmons; $6.75 each to Russell Barnes and A. R. Hilton; and $4.50 to J. R. Francis, for services performed by them as employés of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a private claim.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I trust the Senator from Vermont will hear me for a moment? These are laborers and employés at the Government Printing Office, and this is a claim for work done, or rather for pay due them for holidays to which they were entitled under the law. It was not paid them, and they are entitled to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why was it not paid to them?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. For the want of money, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Want of money with a hundred millions of surplus!

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The amendment only amounts to the sum of $346. They are laboring men; it is a small amount, and it is due them under the law. To present them as individual claims and to pass them through Congress would involve delay, and I think as a matter of justice that no exception or question of order should be made, and the amounts should be paid. I have the recommendation of the Public Printer saying that this is due and proper to be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make no point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment of my colleague which has just been adopted prompts me to withdraw, if I have the liberty to do so, the question of order I made upon the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. His was a private claim, as this was a private claim, and my recollection is that as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I assented to the justice of the claim he seeks to present.

If private claims are to be put upon the bill, I withdraw the question of order that I made, and I am ready to allow the Senate to determine upon the justice of the claim indicated by the Senator from Michigan in favor of Chittenden Brothers.

Mr. PALMER. I accept the withdrawal of the Senator from Tennessee with pleasure. It does credit to his candor and fairness. I ask now that a vote be taken upon the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate where the amendment is to be inserted?

Mr. PALMER. At the end of the bill or after line 418; either place.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let it be inserted at the close of the provisions for the District of Columbia, after line 418, on page 18.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, after line 418, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay to Chittenden Brothers, contractors, for money expended in the construction of a dam at the Great Falls of the Potomac over and above that contemplated in the contract with said Chittenden Brothers as amended, the sum of $15,000, payable from any unexpended balance of money appropriated for the construction of such dam.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. At the end of line 1688 of section 1, on page 69, I move to insert:

For clerk of Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from the 4th day of March to the 1st day of July, 1887, $708.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment to come in on page 75, at the end of line 1842 of section 1.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, at the end of line 1842, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay one month's salary, from the 15th of April to the 15th of May, 1886, to R. A. Fennell, a messenger of the Senate removed from office as provided for by resolution of the Senate of August 4, 1886, being $123.34.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Under instruction of the Committee on Contingent Expenses I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

For compensation to J. M. Coombs for injuries received by the breaking of the gearing of the freight elevator under the sidewalk of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $2,500, said amount to be in full for all damages and for medical and all other expenses incurred and to be incurred by said Coombs on account of said injuries.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment to come in on page 75, after line 1842, to follow the amendment I previously offered.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 1842, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Charles F. Hopkins and William C. Sollee, of Jacksonville, Fla., the sum of $1,567.91, for surveys made by them in 1884 of townships 50 south, range 32 east; 50 south, range 33 east; 52 south, range 33 east; 51 south, range 34 east; and 52 south, range 34 east, Florida, substituted by them for certain other proposed surveys covered by contract with the surveyor-general of Florida numbered 52, dated December 28, 1883, under his verbal authority, which said surveys have been accepted by the Government as though contracted for.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer an amendment to come in at any convenient spot in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

To reimburse A. B. Norton, late postmaster at Dallas, Tex., for payments improperly collected by special agents of the Post-Office Department in 1877, $1,853.

Mr. HALE. The committee rejected that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin indicate at what point the amendment is to be inserted?

Mr. HALE. What law is there for that?

Mr. SPOONER. What law is there for several of those which have just been adopted.

Mr. HALE. Not any.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, why this discrimination?

Mr. HALE. I have to make it somewhere.

Mr. SPOONER. It would have been better if the Senator had waited.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry to make it with the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine interpose a point of order?

Mr. HALE. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think it is in order under the rule.

Mr. HALE. It is a private claim. I do not suppose a committee reporting a private claim and sending it to the Committee on Appropriations makes it in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be compelled to rule, if the point of order is made, that under the fourth clause of the sixteenth rule the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have been requested by a member of the House of Representatives to submit an amendment. At the end of line 36, of section 8, of the old print, I move to insert:

To pay funeral expenses of the late Lieut. John G. Kyle, First United States Cavalry, $175.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that is subject to the point of order, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine interpose a point of order.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Henry G. Healy, an employé of the Senate, the difference between the salary he received and the full pay of a messenger, whose services he performed, from January 1, 1882, to May 1, 1884, $1,026.64.

Mr. HALE. There is no law for that.

Mr. CALL. I wish to state that an amendment similar to this has been offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. The person named is a discharged Union soldier, whose record has been sent to me, although the amendment would more properly be presented by some gentleman on the other side.

Mr. Healy was a man of very distinguished gallantry. He was severely wounded, and afterwards resigned from the service. He was in the employ of the Senate for a number of years, and was discharged without cause; and he claims that under the statutes of the United States he was improperly discharged, and that he ought to have the compensation which he has asked for, the difference between that of a skilled laborer and a messenger, he having performed service as a messenger during that period of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Maine to interpose a point of order?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CALL. I move to add to the bill the following:

For payment to the State of Florida of 50 per cent. of the amount paid by the State of Florida to supervisors and actual enumerators of the interdecennial census of 1885, $9,326.21, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The sum of $9,326.21, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the State of Florida for taking and completing a census of that State for the year 1885. (See letter of the Secretary of the Interior of January 29, 1887, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, Executive Document No. 63.)

Mr. HALE. There is no law for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine interpose the point of order?

Mr. CALL. What is the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Maine to interpose a point of order upon the ground that there is no law for the proposed appropriation?

Mr. CALL. There was a law authorizing that census to be taken, and authorizing the payment to be made to the States taking the census.

Mr. HALE. There is a general law, but there is no law that has been followed in this case by its being regularly presented for the consideration of the Departments, to be audited and certified to Congress as a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. CALL. I do not understand that there is any statute of the United States requiring that to be done anywhere. That is one of the processes of administration in the Departments, but it is not by virtue of any law. There is a law authorizing this payment, and authorizing and requiring the United States to pay 50 per cent. of the cost of taking the census. This has come from the Department and it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. But it is not either presented as an estimate nor from a committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the law authorizing the payment is not recited on the face of the amendment. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer an amendment, and I desire to say that it covers a class of claims allowed by the Court of Claims, where the United States as well as the claimant was represented in their investigation. They are better and more carefully audited than any claims that have been paid by the acts of the Congress of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the several claims hereinafter mentioned, examined, investigated, and reported favorably upon by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," namely:

To Mary Blackwell, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $940.
To Urias Buskirk, of Logan County, West Virginia, $972.
To John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, $1,046.50.
To Anna M. Cogswell, of Garland County, Arkansas, $3,884.
To Henry Bazsinskey, administrator of Abraham Bazsinskey, deceased, of Warren County, Mississippi, $23,848.
To the Corporation of the Roman Catholic Clergymen of Maryland, $4,035.50.
To W. H. Cook, sr., of Saint Mary's Parish, Louisiana, $2,085.
To Elizabeth P. Dyer, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $480.
To Newitt Harriss, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $600.
To David Hildebrand, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,078.
To Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $3,231.
To Indiana E. Hughes, administratrix of John P. Hughes, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,436.
To James P. Jenkins, administrator of Thomas C. Jenkins, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $1,275.
To Sarah McFerrin, administratrix of Robert Waters, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,753.
To John R. McKennie, administrator of David McKennie, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $11,432.
To Sarah E. Mendenhall, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $583.73.
To John A. Oursler's administrator, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $2,439.10.
To Thomas F. Perkins, administrator of Eliza M. Dawson, deceased, of Marshall County, Mississippi, $19,237.68.
To John B. Reid, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $1,000.
To Robert Smith, of Madison County, Tennessee, $510.
To S. H. Brodnax, executor of George T. Taylor, deceased, of Tipton County, Tennessee, $1,435.
To James Tucker, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $500.
To Robert H. Walton, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $360.
To Americus V. Warr, administrator of Nicholas H. Isbell, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $13,475.15.
To John R. Watkins, administrator of Matilda W. Anderson, deceased, of Haywood County, Tennessee, $2,530.
To Simon Witkowski, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, $7,200.
To Mrs. Ann Moreau, of Avoyelles Parish, Louisiana, $5,595.
To John R. McDowell, administrator of John McDowell, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $15,570.
To John Loague, administrator of Delos A. Harrell, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $885.
To T. J. Powell, administrator of Warren M. Benton, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, $14,585.
To John H. Mitchell, of Sebastian County, Arkansas, $2,070.
To Duncan Marr, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, $——.

Mr. HALE. I will raise the point of order upon the amendment, because it is simply a list of claimants and amounts of claims, and there is no law and no judgment at the bottom of this amendment. I do not myself fully understand, and I wish the Senator would explain, what these claims are, and whether there is any judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. HARRIS. They are claims that have been referred to the Court of Claims, where the claimants and the Government of the United States have been represented by attorneys, and where all the testimony has been submitted, and the Court of Claims have found the facts; and in every case the proper committee of the House of Representatives have reported in favor of these allowances. They are better authenticated than any claim that has been allowed by this Congress on any private bill that has passed through at this or any other session.

Mr. HALE. Have these matters been before the Committee on Claims?

Mr. HARRIS. I referred this amendment to the Committee on Claims, but for a technical reason the Committee on Claims declined to put it on the Fourth of July claims appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. That is what I am coming to.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] can answer perhaps as to the reason why it was not put on that bill. But I can not quite understand the reason, because every other claim in that bill was based upon ex parte testimony in the Departments and before the committee, while these claims have stood the ordeal of an investigation in the Court of Claims, where the Government as well as the claimant was represented, and the whole claim thoroughly investigated, and every fact found in favor of the claims, just as I have presented it.

Mr. HALE. I should be glad to know what the technical reason was that prevented these claims from being reported in what is called the Fourth of July claims bill?

Mr. HARRIS. That I can not answer, but if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who represents the Claims Committee, or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] can answer the question, I can not. I do not know why. I do know, or think I know, that they ought to have been allowed as an amendment to that bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I can state in a word to the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Maine why the Committee on Claims did not report in favor of the incorporation of this amendment in what is known as the Fourth of July claims bill.

All of the items of that appropriation bill were adjudications made under the Fourth of July act by the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General. That act requires that the investigations be made, and that the facts being found and the amounts ascertained, the proper officers of the Treasury Department shall audit the claims. One section refers to an audit for payment.

We found on examination that each year efforts had been made to incorporate in that bill claims other than those provided for by the act of July 4, 1864, and that those efforts had always been unsuccessful. It seems to have been the policy of Congress to confine the Fourth of July claims appropriations to the claims passed upon under the provisions of the Fourth of July act, and we thought it was wise to limit that bill to those claims.

Mr. HALE. The committee did not believe that the claims now presented come within the scope of that statute.

Mr. SPOONER. It was very clear that they did not. No one pretended that these claims came within the provisions of that act.

Mr. HARRIS. But the committee rejected them simply because they did not come within the technical literalisms of that act. The committee did not doubt that these claims were as carefully audited and as thoroughly established as any other claims which appeared in that bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The committee did not examine the findings of the Court of Claims as to those claims. Congress has not always been willing to adopt the report of the Court of Claims and its findings under the Bowman act, and has not always been willing to make appropriations upon that basis. These claims have never been reported upon by any standing committee, I understand.

Mr. HARRIS. Every one of them has been reported favorably by the committees of the Senate and of the House.

Mr. SPOONER. That is true, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that I yielded to the decision of the Committee on Claims because they did not fall technically within the appropriations that the committee were required to make to pay what are called the Fourth of July claims; but I reiterate the fact that they are better authenticated; they have stood a more severe ordeal; they have stood the ordeal of an investigation in the Court of Claims where both sides were represented, where every fact has been found as to the justice of these claims by the Court of Claims; and they have stood the additional ordeal of having been favorably reported by a committee of the other House. I say that they are better authenticated than any claim that we have appropriated for in the Fourth of July claims bill, or any claim that we have appropriated for in any private bill that this Congress has passed. I therefore ask that they be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I think if this discussion was to stop here there would be a wrong impression created. In the case of the Fourth of July claims they are sent to the Quartermaster-General and to the Commissary-General to be examined, and then they are audited by the proper auditing officers of the Treasury.

The Bowman act never was intended for any such purpose. It was intended to make use of the Court of Claims merely as an aid to Congress. Cases which are referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act are referred there simply for information for the action of Congress. Congress does not determine, in the first place, whether the law authorizes an appropriation to be made or a claim to be paid. The Court of Claims does not determine whether the facts authorize the payment of the claim. Congress is not bound by the facts found by the Court of Claims. Congress may find on the testimony that the facts are even different, in my judgment. But even if that were not so, the report of the Court of Claims would be no more than the report of a master in chancery or of a jury of inquest to ascertain a fact in any legal proceeding.

It was never intended that the report of the Court of Claims under the Bowman act should be the foundation of an appropriation for the payment of the amount found by that court as a judgment; and it would be a very dangerous proposition to maintain that that was the case, and that all that Congress had to do was to make an appropriation for the amount found where a case was referred by the action of a committee of either branch of Congress to the Court of Claims to find the facts.

This amendment was referred to the Committee on Claims, as it is offered here, consisting of a large number of items, without the testimony accompanying them that was submitted to the Court of Claims, without the facts found by the Court of Claims, or at least without those facts being obtained by the committee, without any opportunity for the committee to examine them. It was offered as a single amendment to a bill.

I think the Senator from Tennessee is entirely mistaken in regard to the intention of the Bowman act or the binding force upon Congress of the findings of the court. As I said before, claims under the Bowman act are merely referred to the Court of Claims to furnish information to Congress itself, and to the committees of Congress, to determine, in the first place, whether the facts found by the court are warranted by the testimony, and if not to determine whether the facts found are sufficient upon which to base the payment of a claim; but the court does not pass upon the question of law at all. Congress under that act reserves to itself the right to pay or not to pay the claim upon the law applicable to the facts found.

Mr. HALE. Or upon other facts.

Mr. DOLPH. Or upon other facts that may be presented to the committee when a case is referred. Every one of these claims ought to be referred afterwards to the committee where it originated when sent to the Court of Claims. Each individual claim ought to be examined in connection with the report of the Court of Claims of the facts; and then Congress is to determine whether the claim should be paid.

If we are to give these findings the force of a judgment, as the Senator from Tennessee would have us to do, we might just as well make a law that they shall all go to the Court of Claims for final judgment in the first instance. I think the Bowman act never was intended for any such purpose.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It occurs to me that the Senate is already committed to the proposition of my colleague, for we have adopted to-night this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations:

To pay the awards of the Court of Claims on the following claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, under the act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," namely:

When the act of Congress referred to the Court of Claims the question of the ascertainment of the rights of American citizens was not the legal and logical effect the same precisely as that of the Bowman act? The Bowman act contemplated a reference of a disputed question before Congress, or any of its committees, to ascertain the loyalty of the claimant and the justice and the amount of any claim against the Government. In logical effect there is the precise condition of things under the one act and the other. Inasmuch as the Senate has decided under the pending bill that it is in order to entertain, consider, and pass the claims under the act referred to, providing for indemnity for spoliations committed by the French prior to 1801 upon the American citizen, I submit that it is in order and germane, and legitimate, in connection with that, to consider the amendment proposed by my colleague.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Oregon has kindly informed the Senate what every Senator knew before he did us the favor to give us the information.

Of course the finding of the Court of Claims is not a judgment against the Government, but that Senator, as a member of the Committee on Claims, has reported favorably and adversely upon many claims on the mere ex parte affidavits of parties. The claims that I present here have undergone the ordeal and stood the test of investigation, where the Attorney-General of the United States, on the one side, and the attorney of the claimant, on the other, have presented all the facts pro and con.

I repeat that the claims contained in my amendment are better vindicated and have been more carefully audited than any private claims that this Congress has at this or any other session passed or allowed by special bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I will.

Mr. DOLPH. Did the Court of Claims pass upon the question as to whether there was any obligation upon the Government to pay these amounts?

Mr. HARRIS. The Court of Claims have found the facts that the claimant was loyal, and that the property was taken and used for the benefit of the Government, and as to the value of the property.

Mr. DOLPH. Are the facts the same?

Mr. HARRIS. I repeat that that Senator, as well as every other Senator who is a member of the Committee on Claims, has reported many and many bills favorably that were not the thousandth part as well authenticated as each and every one of the claims that are contained in my amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the Senator know at this moment that the report on any one of these claims shows that the property was taken by any officer of the Government or dealt out and used regularly for the benefit of the Government?

Mr. HARRIS. It was the judgment of the Court of Claims; and I would rather trust that judgment than the judgment of the Senator from Oregon upon ex parte testimony.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the report show that?

Mr. HALE. I hope the point of order will be decided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say that when the Senator from Maine sits there and allows other private claims not half so well authenticated to be received, I appreciate his question of order and I shall remember it.

Mr. HALE. I am very sorry to have to make the point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. You may be sorry, but I am sorrier than you are.

Mr. HALE. I did not begin with the Senator from Tennessee by any means, I may say.

Mr. HARRIS. I am sorry the Senator did not begin earlier if he intends to resort to the question of order.

Mr. HALE. I am inclined to think I ought to have begun earlier. I began with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], a friend of mine on this side of the Chamber, and I stuck to it, and I have been sticking to it ever since, as I am going to do for the rest of the time on.

Mr. HARRIS. I will watch the Senator from Maine to see that the question of order shall be enforced in every case.

Mr. HALE. I shall be very glad to have the assistance of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. You shall have it.

Mr. HALE. In section 6, line 2, after the word "Senate," I move to strike out "miscellaneous" and insert "executive," and to fill the blank in line 3 by inserting "123;" so as to read:

That for the payment of the following supplemental list of claims which are fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 123, second session Forty-ninth Congress, there is appropriated as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. By the instruction of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I report an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, after line 1726, on page 71, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all committee clerks, pages, laborers, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives who do not now receive annual salaries a sum equal to one month's pay, at the adjournment of the present session of Congress; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to make the point of order upon that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair deems that the point of order is well taken.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.;

A bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley; and

A bill (H. R. 9860) to authorize payment to Sergt. James W. Kingon of amount withheld by reason of sentence of general court-martial.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be regarded as concurred in in gross unless some reservation is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve the French spoliation amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that the amendment on the second page of the bill, beginning in line 22, was passed over during the progress of the bill. The amendment there under the head of "Foreign Intercourse" was passed over at the request of the Senator from Vermont for the production of a document.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was a private claim; but I have nothing more to say about it, as the bill is filled up with private claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. The Senator from Vermont reserves for a separate vote the amendment regarding French spoliation claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I make the point of order that every one of the items named in the amendment is merely to provide for the payment of a private claim.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will make the point on all private claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I make it upon those particular ones, for "there's millions in it."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole other than those reserved by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Jersey?

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first reserved amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I make the point of order on the French spoliation matters. They are purely for private claims.

Mr. HALE. That point of order was made in Committee of the Whole and overruled.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The first reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to insert, after line 565, the following:

To pay the amounts certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for transportation services rendered the War Department over the several railroads which have been built without the aid of Government bonds, as per settlement certificates numbered 8311, 8385, 6575, 6381, 2982, 7248, 6994, 2983, 7338, 7501, and 7236, being for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, $135,053.81.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, after line 580, to insert:

To enable the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or the Southern Pacific Company, as assignee of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the amounts found due and which may be found due for transportation services rendered the War Department over the several railroads which have been built without the aid of Government bonds, being for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, $251,444.49.

Mr. MCPHERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Why can not a vote be taken on all down to line 600.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done if Senators desire. The question is on the amendment from line 581 to line 600.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

Mr. HAMPTON. I perceive that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has voted. I will vote then.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 18; as follows:

So the amendment was concurrred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committtee of the Whole was, after line 1652, to insert:

To pay the awards of the Court of Claims on the following claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, under the act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," namely:

On the schooner Industry, Benjamin Hawkes master, namely: Thomas Cushing, administrator of Marston Watson, $6,555; Charles F. Adams, administrator of Peter C. Brooks, $3,000; William Sohier, administrator of Nathaniel Fellowes, $1,000; H. W. Blagge, administrator, and Susan B. Samuels, administratrix of Crowell Hatch, $1,000.

On schooner Delight, Stephen Curtis, master, namely: George Holbrook, administrator of Edward Holbrook, $6,302; Charles F. Adams, administrator of Peter C. Brooks, $4,000; Ebenezer Gay, administrator of executor of the assignee in bankruptcy of Thomas English, $500; Charles F. Hunt, administrator of Joseph Russell, $1,000; H. W. Blagge, administrator, and Susan B. Samuels, administratrix of Crowell Hatch, $1,000.

On schooner Little Peg, William Auld, master, namely: Francis King Carey, administrator of Samuel Hollingsworth, $5,960.50.

On ship Theresa, James Brown, master, namely: R. Stewart Strobel and Henry L. Bruns, administrators of Thomas Stewart, $6,350.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is to provide for a private claim, and nothing else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would rule on the point of order that although private claims they are in pursuance of the language of the fourth clause of the rule under the provision of an existing law, which is cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it is a private claim all the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XVI permits amendments for private claims to be offered if they are offered within the provisions of the fourth clause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I submit to the Chair with great respect that the law does not provide for their payment. I have read it and nobody insists that it does. Therefore, although they refer to the act, the act does not bear out the fact that the United States owes these people anything. I read the section and will read it again if the Chair desires. That is my point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair still holds that the amendment is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. SHERMAN'S name was called). The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 12, as follows:

So the amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3095) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation in Montana Territory.

The message also announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10, of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes; the enrolled bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend, after the word "one," in line 865 of section 1, by inserting:

And fifty copyists at $720 each.

I offered an amendment to-day to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the purpose of giving an opportunity to the Commissioner of Pensions to appoint persons at $720 a year and another class at $840 a year as copyists in the Pension Office. I was induced to offer that amendment because I had been informed in person by the Commissioner of Pensions, who exhibited great anxiety on the subject, that he needed three hundred and twenty clerks in the execution of the pension law. He had reference to the law recently passed in regard to Mexican war pensions. I do not know whether any application came in from any Department for these three hundred and twenty clerks, if that was the right number, but I am induced to believe that there was some signification of that character here, that the amount of force would be needed.

While this subject was under discussion the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, suggested that perhaps my amendment might have the effect of removing persons from office who now hold office at $1,000 a year. I believe there are three hundred of those now in the office, and I was informed by the Senator that there would appear upon the deficiency bill a claim for three hundred and twenty clerks, if I remember the number aright—it may have been two hundred and twenty, perhaps. The record will show what occurred to-day in the Senate. I thereupon withdrew my amendment, relying upon the fact that that committee would report either three hundred and twenty or two hundred and thirty clerks.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Alabama certainly misunderstood me if he understood me to state that the Committee on Appropriations would report on this bill for adding any particular number of clerks. I simply stated to the Senator that as I understood that clerks would be dismissed before the 1st of July, and on that day I had been informed, and I suppose it is within the report of the Committee on Appropriations, that one hundred and fifty clerks would be employed, and that provision would be made in this bill for the necessary number of clerks; and on examination, if the Senator will turn to page 36, he will find that the House of Representatives has provided for such number of clerks as in its judgment is required for this specific purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. That gives a chief of division at the rate of $1,800 per annum, ten clerks of class 2, and ten clerks of class 1—twenty-one in all, including the chief of division. I do not think I am mistaken at all, and I do not think the Senate could have understood otherwise than that upon the deficiency bill there would come in a demand for quite a large number of clerks, to which my amendment as I offered it to-day would be applicable, and therefore I withdrew it on the legislative bill. I did not withdraw that amendment because it was out of order, or because I did not believe I had the sympathy in my movement of the Senate, but I withdrew it upon the assurance of the committee that this question would come up on this deficiency bill, and that clerks would be demanded in that Department to whom this provision might be applicable. I was quite astonished when the bill came in to-night without any reference to it at all, and so was the honorable Senator from Tennessee, for we understood it alike. The bill came in here with twenty-one clerks, and with the information also that the Commissioner of Pensions had said to somebody in this House or somewhere else—I do not know where—that he intended to dismiss as many as five hundred clerks.

Mr. HALE. I think not as many as that.

Mr. MORGAN. What number?

Mr. HALE. I did not hear the Commissioner make the statement, but I think probably members of the Committee on Appropriations did hear him make the statement that he expected to discharge of the present force from two to three hundred clerks, and the Committee on Appropriations rejected this request for additional clerks upon the simple and apparent theory that if the Commissioner had an old, established, skillful lot of persons there, men and women, he had better keep them than turn them out and put in a lot of fresh ones.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad if the Senator from Alabama would allow me to ask the Senator from Maine to get the communication from the Commissioner, because the statements to me are wholly inconsistent with the statement made by him. I wish to know exactly what the Commissioner officially says in respect to this matter.

Mr. HALE. I think there is no doubt as to what he said before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN. Has he made a communication to the committee in writing?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions, in which he does suggest an additional force of two hundred and twenty-one employés.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what he told me.

Mr. ALLISON. That communication is addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, and is dated the 22d day of February.

Mr. MORGAN. And by the Secretary recommended?

Mr. ALLISON. And the Secretary of the Interior recommends an increase of two hundred and twenty-one in the clerical force, and communication was transmitted to the House of Representatives by Mr. Manning, the Secretary of the Treasury, and after this communication was sent to the House of Representatives the House committee reported the legislative bill, carrying the clerical force of the Pension Office, and reported also this bill, and made the provision only which is to be found on page 36 of this bill.

The Secretary of the Interior appeared personally in the room of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the legislative bill, and he did not make a suggestion of an increase of force in this case. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, so far as I know, have had no recent communication with reference to this subject.

Mr. HARRIS. But his attention was called to the suggestions of the House of Representatives. There is his recommendation in writing. Was his attention called to the fact that the other House had allowed less than he had asked for?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not say that the attention of the Secretary of the Interior was specially and directly called to this communication, but I will say that his attention was called to the clerical force in his Department, covering not only the Pension Bureau but all the other bureaus in it, and he made a great many suggestions, but none in reference to this office.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a written recommendation for a given amount of force for a given purpose, and if he made no retraction of that recommendation the inference is to me certainly that he stands upon it.

Mr. MORGAN. The production of that paper, which I have never had the pleasure of seeing before, makes my motion in order to the number of two hundred and twenty-one clerks.

I am quite surprised to find that no attention has been paid to this request either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, and the Commissioner of Pensions have required these clerks, and we are met now with some vague, uncertain, unreliable declaration that some commissioner has said to somebody at some time that he expected to turn out as many perhaps as five hundred clerks on the 1st of July.

I confess that I am unable to understand this thing. The Senate is not enlightened by this committee in regard to the facts of this case, and I was misled this morning in regard to the legislative bill in respect of this very particular matter.

Either the Government wants the clerks asked for in this communication thus deliberately and solemnly made, or it does not want them. I maintain that we ought to vote these clerks into this bill, or at all events we ought to take advantage of this opportunity to make some provision for those people in this town and elsewhere in the United States who may come here that are willing to do this work at $720 a year that we are now paying $1,000 for.

I suppose that the Republican party, having its employés there at a thousand dollars, are unwilling to accept the services of people who offer to do the same kind of work just as well for $720, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations and the committee of the other House have neglected entirely this recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions.

Now, what is the purpose of all this? Here are persons who are willing to serve the Government of the United States at a lower rate than $1,000 a year, and serve it just as well as those who are in office, and the Congress of the United States refuses to accept their services and will vote down my amendment when I offer it as I have before the Senate.

I protest that I have not the slightest feeling in the world in regard to this matter except in one respect, and that I stated to-day. There are persons in this city to-day who are entirely competent to do this work, and who depend upon an opportunity to get it for the bread of life. They can not get away from Washington city. They have been invited here by members of Congress and by their friends, their former political friends, Republicans in this town many of them. They have held office under the Government, and in one way and another they have gone out of office. They have been supplanted through the importunities of members of Congress who demand personal patronage at the expense of many of the poor women in this town.

I repeat what I said to-day, and I do it under the solemnity of the position I hold on this floor, that ladies of the highest respectability, ladies of real accomplishments, ladies who have enjoyed wealth and luxury in life, who are now strong and active and ready to work, have come to me in the Marble room of the Senate Chamber, with the blanch of hunger on their faces, asking for opportunity at the hands of Senators, including myself, to obtain employment. Now, at the close of this Forty-ninth Congress, when we have been squandering our millions amongst persons who have higher or less claims to them, jobbers, lobbyists, contrivers, sappers and miners of the Treasury, men who hold high positions at large salaries who are indulged from year to year in the mere perfunctory performance of the duties of office, we come on this morning of the 4th of March just as the sun is rising, and after having scattered these millions into the hands of our pets and favorites and influential people, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, we refuse to scatter the crumbs of bread that are left in our hands among these poor, penniless, dependent, and yet virtuous and good women, and while we do that we know, as every Senator on this floor has reason to know, that persons under the operation of the civil-service law have elected themselves to places who are utterly unworthy of any recognition at all; and those modest people who have not got the hardiness and the brass upon their cheeks to assist themselves into place by importunity have to go back to the darkness of poverty and into dismay, while we sit here at the close of this Congress and refuse to give the Commissioner of Pensions an opportunity to appoint them unless they can go before a civil-service commission and prove, through geography and arithmetic and history and other branches of education, that they are adepts according to the scrutiny of a civil-service commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Practical printers!"

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps they may be, or practical engineers or something of that kind. We have a great many ways of judging the qualifications of people in this country, but I notice that the most popular and familiar way is to judge of persons when they go after office. If they have no temptations to offer they are lost, whether they are political temptations or personal temptations, and if they have none to offer they are lost. If they have nothing to recommend them but decent character, honest bringing up, faithful adherence to principle, obedience to the laws of God and of society, a modest delicacy when they look a man in the face, if they have nothing to recommend them but these homely and, I regret to say, these unusual qualities, they are neglected, and what a regret do they leave to the members of Congress who neglect them in their opportunities to do them justice.

Now, let us think of these things for a moment and ask ourselves the question whether we can afford to shut the door in the face of their fears and their importunities and whether we can afford to depart from these precincts where honor and justice and a sentiment of noble and high manhood have always prevailed, leaving these people uncared for.

If we are representative men so far as the offices of this country are concerned we represent all who are worthy of office, and if we can not make the personal selections ourselves there are reasons why we should leave the selections in the hands of the men who are charged with the duty of making them upon the ground of the personal fitness of the applicant for the place, and that personal fitness does not consist merely in the ability to answer questions that might be put by a schoolmaster with the prospect of a successful answer to a boy or girl of thirteen or fifteen years of age. They ought to be asked questions that relate to the character, the fitness, the industry, the honesty, and the integrity of these people.

If you can do a better thing for the Departments in Washington city than to place in the midst of these office-holders an element of strong, earnest, honest Christian virtue and fortitude, I do not know what it is that you can resort to that would be better for you. They need it more than they need anything else. If there is any one thing that is needed among the men and women who hold the offices in this town it is that tempering influence which brings them up to an understanding of their responsibility to society and God for their conduct; and if you will take, not through civil-service recommendations, through geography and arithmetic and history, but through that knowledge of character which impresses itself upon every human mind in the world—if you will take under influences of this kind the women that we can put into office in this city you can leaven the whole lump after a while so that it will at last become an irreproachable public service.

But just as it is I can only confess that I think it needs this leaven very much, and I believe the very best opportunity to get it is not through the Civil Service Commissioners, but through the enlightened and instructed judgment of men who are responsible for the choice they make, for the people they select, men to whom we can go and ask why they appointed this man or that woman to an office.

Mr. President, the amendment being in order, the necessity having been established by this demand coming from a Department of this Government, the opportunity being afforded, I hope the Senate of the United States will accord this much of opportunity to these people to be employed in the service of the Government when they offer and are willing to do it for $720 a year, if not in the place of, at least to do the work done by, those who are now getting $1,000 a year.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to submit a conference report which will not require any action.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

D. B. CULBERSON,
J. R. TUCKER,
A. X. PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no necessity of action. The House recedes.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT BAY CITY, MICH.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to submit another conference report, which should have been submitted some days ago but was overlooked.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan, at Bay City, in said district, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its amendment.

JAMES F. WILSON,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
J. Z. GEORGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN H. ROGERS,
A. A. RANNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That does not need any action.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] by adding these words:

To be appointed after examination and selected in accordance with the provisions of the law known as the civil-service law.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to submit a conference report.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the pending amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has risen to present a conference report.

Mr. HALE. I wish to enter the motion, not to interfere with the Senator from Kansas.

SETTLERS AND PURCHASERS OF LAND IN KANSAS AND NEBRASKA.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments and agree to the House bill with amendments as follows: In line 28, after the word "thereof," insert "so certified as hereinbefore provided."

In line 43, after the words "referred to," insert "his or their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives."

In line 47, after the word "Treasury," insert "such person, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives."

And the House agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
JAMES H. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. M. SPRINGER,
W. H. SOWDEN,
JAMES LAIRD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I now submit the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. MAHONE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN M. TAYLOR,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. What is "amendment numbered four?"

Mr. PLUMB. That amendment which the Senator from Tennessee in some infelicitous language a few hours ago spoke of as a subsidy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the papers here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont inquires if the papers are in possession of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. They are here.

The report was concurred in.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the report of the conference committee on that bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. L. WILSON,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that the differences are the same as they were at the time the last conference was granted—the provision for school facilities in the District of Columbia and the question of appropriations for the streets and the distribution of the same. I believe the House of Representatives has asked for a conference. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and agree to the request of the House for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion for a few moments.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that in my discussion this morning, or rather yesterday morning, on the legislative appropriation bill I stated no number, but stated to him and the Senate at that time that I understood the deficiency bill would provide for this force, because it was contemplated that this whole question would be out of the way by the 1st of July next. At that time I did not know whether or not the Committee on Appropriations would report an increased clerical force for this purpose over and above the force provided for in this bill.

I have before me the testimony taken by the House Committee on Appropriations respecting this very subject, and that testimony will show that the House went into the subject quite fully and examined General Black on the whole question, and General Black said, among other things in his testimony before the House committee, that during the next fiscal year, certainly at the end of it, he would have largely reduced his present force of fifteen hundred and forty-one persons.

Mr. HARRIS. After July next?

Mr. ALLISON. After July next. And he also stated to this committee that his estimate for this force of two hundred and twenty-one clerks was an estimate which would enable him to bring up the entire work by the 1st day of July next; and he stated to the committee that if it was not expected that this work should be completed by the 1st day of July, a smaller force would do for the service.

In the book which I have before me it is disclosed that not only the Pension Bureau but other Departments of the Government, for instance, the Adjutant-General's Office and other bureaus of the War Department, will necessarily be called upon for information with reference to the Mexican war pensions as they are now called upon with reference to the ordinary pensions. So the House committee, after going over this whole question and finding that General Black himself believed that he could dispense with a large number of his present force soon after the first of July, and in a year from the first of July could dispense with at least two hundred and twenty of them, thought it was wiser and better for the service to allow this whole Mexican pension business to run into the ordinary operations of the office and utilize the force that is there now, which is a trained force and which can much better perform the duties required of it with reference to these examinations than can a new set of people; and they believed that with the addition provided for in this bill the Commissioner of Pensions could go on with the pension cases as he goes on with other pension cases. The Mexican pension claims can not be expected to be concluded on the first of July. They cover a large number of persons (from 40,000 to 50,000 in all) almost certainly 50,000. The pensioners are widows and all classes of people, and these soldiers must expect to run, as the soldiers of the war of the rebellion have run, some of them for ten, fifteen, and twenty years, with their pension-claims pending in the Pension Office without having an opportunity of having them disposed of.

So we do not want the Senator from Alabama to suppose that here is a present urgent, absolute necessity that requires a particular, specified force to accomplish a particular, specified thing within three months.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator send that paper to the Secretary's desk and have it read? I want to hear what the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior say.

Mr. ALLISON. It will give me great pleasure to have this read. This is the examination before the Committee on Appropriations of the House. I certainly have no objection to having it read; but if the Senator from Tennessee insists on the reading of that paper I shall be obliged to ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to present a conference report.

Mr. HALE. I yielded on my motion to lay the amendment on the table with the understanding that it was only for a moment. If the Senator has finished and the Chair will recognize me, I will make the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a privileged question. I want the communication from the Interior Department read.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not a communication. It is testimony taken before the House committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; I want it read. I want to hear exactly what it is, because I have some statements from the Department myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Maine to move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Alabama on the table.

Mr. HALE. I feel constrained to make that motion; it has been debated on both sides.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to know what is the number of the force employed now in the Pension Bureau who are not mere copyists.

Mr. ALLISON. There are a number of copyists.

Mr. MORGAN. A large number?

Mr. ALLISON. Not a very large number. The great bulk of this force is of a higher grade than copyists. Although I have not consulted with General Black on the subject, every other Commissioner of Pensions who has ever been before the Committee on Appropriations has said that he had no use for copyists, that what he desired was a force that could examine pension cases.

Mr. MORGAN. General Black informed me that he would need a large number of copyists, persons who had no skill in making examinations, and it was upon that hypothesis that I moved this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not been consulted about it.

Mr. MORGAN. He told me so, and therefore I offered the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I renew the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. Can I not have that communication from the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be in the nature of debate. A motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite aware of that, but here is a communication from the head of one of the Executive Departments of the Government with respect to the subject-matter, I suppose——

Mr. HALE. It is not an executive communication; it is only a partial report of some examination.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Maine object to allowing it to be read to the Senate?

Mr. HALE. I object to any more debate, as the question has been discussed on both sides.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. COKE (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. SABIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. SPOONER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] to my colleague [Mr. SAWYER], and vote "yea."

Mr. HAMPTON. Then I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—28.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Dawes, | Ingalls, | Plumb, |
| Allison, | Edmunds, | Jones of Nevada, | Ransom, |

| Conger, | McPherson, | Saulsbury, | |

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senator would yield to me for a moment for a matter of current business.

Mr. HALE. We are just about through now.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the House concurrent resolution for printing the report of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, to report it without amendment. I ask its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported by the Senator from Connecticut will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1886, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by said superintendent.

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe this is the usual annual resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

BARRACKS PROPERTY IN NEWPORT, KY.

Mr. BECK. The next House bill but one on the Calendar under the Harris rule is a bill to authorize the sale of the United States barracks property in the city of Newport, Ky., and the purchase of a new site and the erection of buildings thereon. I ask that it may be considered. I have been trying for a week to get a chance to call it up.

Mr. HOAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I will withdraw for the Senator from Kentucky. I make the motion now so that I may have a right to make it hereafter.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to give notice——

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BECK. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6066) to authorize the sale of the United States barracks property in the city of Newport, Ky., and the purchase of a new site and the erection of buildings thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the legislative bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 20, 30, 34, 36, 37, 44, 45, 46, 49, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 59, 81, 82, 83, 92, 93, 94, 101, 102, 112, 113, 117, 119, 120, 127, 128, 130, 132, 133, and 134.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 25½, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 57, 58, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 97, 98, 99, 100, 105, 106, 107, 110, 115, 116, 118, 121, 122, 125, 126, 129, 131, 136, and 137, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert "and disbursing clerk;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert "one clerk of class 1; one clerk at $1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,925,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out amended by inserting "first day of March" in lieu of "thirty-first day of January;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$195,690;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 109: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$32,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$26,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 3 and 14: As to amendments numbered 3 and 14, the committee are unable to agree.

W. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. What are the amendments on which the conferees are unable to agree?

Mr. ALLISON. The managers on the part of the House were unable to assent to the amendment providing clerks to Senators. That is the point. They could not agree to it without some further consultation with the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. The two amendments are practically one.

Mr. ALLISON. They are one amendment, one of them being a footing.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments numbered 3 and 14 to the legislative bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT WINONA, MINN.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 10146 and the other House bridge bills on the Calendar. There are four of five of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can only be entertained for one bill at a time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River and a certain island therein.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUTHER F. WARDER.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave to call up a joint resolution from the House of Representatives, which will take but a moment. It is Order of Business 2334, House resolution 82.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Warder. It proposes to pay Luther F. Warder, assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, $394.06, that sum being the difference between the pay of Doorkeeper and assistant-doorkeeper of the House of Representatives for the period of time between the 15th of July, 1885, and the 7th of December, 1885, he having acted as Doorkeeper of the House during that time.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to inquire into the condition of the schools in this District, reported this morning.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I yield for that purpose, but I wish to proceed with the other bridge bills immediately afterwards.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution as amended by the committee be read.

The resolution as proposed to be amended by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to inquire into the condition of the public schools of the District of Columbia, especially as compared with that of the schools in other cities of the United States, and report upon the same to the next session of Congress. Said committee shall be authorized to sit during the recess, send for persons and papers, and employ a stenographer, the expense of said inquiry to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

VICKSBURG AND MERIDIAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to take up Order of Business 2359. It is a local bill, and I desire to state that I have not been one of those who have asked to take up bills out of their order, but older Senators do it, and I ask it now.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I thought it was understood that the bridge bills were to be disposed of immediately on the disposition of the resolution just acted on.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator to give way. This will take but a very short time, and it is the only request of the sort I have made. It is a local bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE FRAUDS.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance I report the testimony in relation to the undervaluation of imported merchandise, taken by that committee under the order of the Senate. I ask that it may lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

FIREMEN'S INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11063) extending the charter of "The President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown," in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1444) for the relief of William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CONSIDERATION OF BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the remaining House bills on the Calendar authorizing the construction of bridges in different parts of the country. There are four or five such bills left, and they can be disposed of without much delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of certain bills upon the Calendar from the House of Representatives for the construction of bridges. Is there objection?

Mr. VANCE. I should like to inquire if those bills will give rise to any discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not able to advise the Senator.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think not.

Mr. VANCE. I have no objection to their consideration if they can be passed without discussion.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe there will be any discussion upon them. There are no amendments, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Minnesota will indicate the bills.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The first is House bill 10098.

The bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out section 6 and to insert at the end of section 7 the following:

And if the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced in good faith within two years from the approval of this act, and completed within five years from the same date, the rights and privileges herein granted shall cease and be null and void.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. It was recommended by the committee and is an important amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The adoption of the amendment simply kills the bill. It is a House bill, and if it goes back there with an amendment that is the end of it; and it is important to various interests that the bill should pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee river at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes, was considered as in Commitee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri, River at Pierre, Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JACOB CRAMER.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3642) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of Pensions to issue to the heirs of Jacob Cramer a bounty-land warrant for 200 acres of land, for services rendered by him as a lieutenant in the Pennsylvania Continental Line in the Revolutionary war, Jacob Cramer being entitled thereto, pursuant to the resolution of the Continental Congress of September 16, 1776, and the provisions of the act of July 27, 1842, extended by the act of February 8, 1854.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMS FOR STATES.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, relating to the purchase of arms for the use of the States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal so much of section 3 of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, as provides that so much of the appropriations between the 1st of January, 1861, and the 9th of April, 1865, under the act of April 23, 1808, therein referred to, as would have been used for the purchase of arms to be distributed to the several States that were in rebellion, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT PHYSICIANS TO THE POOR.

Mr. CHENEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10514) regulating the compensation of physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to fix the compensation of the physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia at $50 per month each, so long as employed, to date from January 1, 1887.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3095) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation in Montana Territory; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 277) for the relief of Samuel P. Evans.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; and

A bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

EXTRA PAY FOR EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 107.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. 107) providing for one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate and House of Representatives was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to all committee clerks, pages, laborers, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives who do not now receive annual salaries a sum equal to one month's pay at the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, They shall not receive pay for more than four months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3877) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. That was reported adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The attention of the Chair is called to the fact that the bill does not come within the Harris rule, for it appears to have been reported adversely.

Mr. CALL. I am willing to give way for the consideration of House bills unobjected to, but I want a vote on this bill, as it is a House bill, and a very important one to the State of Florida. But I will give way for the present if there are any House bills to be considered to which there is no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I am informed that it is very doubtful whether the clerks can enroll in the time left the bills already passed. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SABIN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion just a moment?

Mr. HOAR. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SABIN. I have been informed by a member of the other House that if the joint resolution which I hold in my hand can be sent over there, there is very little question about their being able to pass it there. There is great interest felt in the measure. It is the joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit.

Mr. HARRIS. If it be a Senate joint resolution I object, because there is no hope of action on it in the other House.

Mr. SABIN. I am informed that there is no question about its passage there.

Mr. HARRIS. I object all the same.

Mr. SABIN. The delegation there have looked over the ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee objects to the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withhold his motion until I can make just one remark in response to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The Senator from Florida has moved to take up a bill that is an exceedingly important one: to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes. I am compelled to object to that, because it would lead to a long discussion. While the Senator doubtless thinks the claim is due the State, I do not think any of it is, and I think that after discussion it can be shown that there is nothing due the State.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2441) to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," and to further regulate the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected;

A bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River, and a certain island thereon;

A bill (H. R. 6066) to authorize the Secretary of War to improve and enlarge the barracks at Newport, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 3642) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer;

A bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of court at Mississippi City, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 11063) extending the charter of "The President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown," in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Warder.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and the Senate resumed its legislative session at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m. (Friday, March 3, 1887).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2725) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss.;

A bill (S. 2414) for the relief of Miss Eula E. Henry; and

A bill (S. 130) for the relief of John Fletcher.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 277) for the relief of Samuel P. Evans;

A bill (S. 1444) for the relief of William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico;

A bill (H. R. 10514) regulating the compensation of physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, relating to the purchase of arms for the use of the States;

A bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points; and

A bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River, at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNES, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. MCCOMAS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8337) for the relief of James Brice; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 182) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. HALE it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and that it had receded from its disagreement to the third and fourteenth amendments of the Senate to the said bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2414) for the relief of Miss Eula E. Henry;

A bill (S. 2725) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss.; and

A bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RICHMOND, IND.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move to take up Senate bill 132.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 132) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Richmond, in the State of Indiana, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 12, after the word "exceed," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so that the section will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase suitable grounds in the city of Richmond, in the State of Indiana, and caused to be erected thereon a suitable public building, with a fire-proof vault, for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city. The cost of the site, and the building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed $75,000: Provided, That no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the grounds for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Indiana shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil processes therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "of," to strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $75,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended in the purchase of said grounds and the erection of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 15, 24, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 48, 49, 50, 56, 57, and 62.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 10, 11, 14, 17, 18, 25, 26, 27, 42, 43, 45, 46, 52, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, and 64; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$16,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$1,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$61,190;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$80,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"For improvement of streets and avenues named in the schedule of work on city streets and avenues proposed for the fiscal year 1888, contained in the annual report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year ended June 30, 1886, pages 146 and 147, being part 6, House Executive Document No. 1, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows: In Georgetown, $45,000; in the northwest section, including the pavement of New Jersey avenue from M street to Boundary street northwest, $140,000; in the southwest section, $50,000; in the southeast section, $65,000; in the northeast section, $50,000; and for filling streets below grade, at not exceeding 10 cents per cubic yard, $10,000; in all, $360,000: Provided, That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886, and with same depth of base."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$30,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 21 and 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21 and 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"For current work of repairs on county roads and suburban streets, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"For constructing county roads and suburban streets, including the completion of the Eastern Branch road, the Benning's Bridge road, the Tennallytown road, and the Bladensburg road, $50,000; no part of the above amount to be expended in the laying out of new roads or streets."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and on page 7, in line 27, strike out "ten thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$122,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the words "for ice boat;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$770,970;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert "and no increase in salaries paid to teachers in grades now receiving $900 or more, and no increase in the number of teachers in any of such grades shall be made, and the minimum compensation shall not be less than at the rate of $300 per annum, and the names of and actual compensation paid to each teacher under this provision shall be reported to Congress at its next session by the commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,900;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. L. WILSON,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East Saginaw, Mich.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri, the Chair lays before the Senate messages from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 8337) for the relief of James Brice was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East

Saginaw, Mich., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and

The joint resolution (H. Res. 182) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I submit a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreetng votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. H. FORNEY,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate a moment upon this report. The history of this negotiation up to the present time has been given to the public in both Houses of Congress. I do not desire to go over that ground at all, or to change anything that was stated in the Senate in reference to it. It is with infinite regret that the conferees on the part of the Senate are obliged to make this report. They feel that they have receded very much in order to reach a conclusion and to save the essence and vitality of the measure designed to bring about an efficient system of coast defense and fortification.

Their plan, which they submitted to the committee, is embraced in the form of an act which I have here, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, and along with it I desire to have printed the plan which at the last moment, after nearly six months of fruitless negotiation, was submitted on the part of the managers of the other House. The country will judge between these two propositions where the blame lies that nothing has been done by this Congress towards the bringing about the inauguration of some efficient system for fortifications.

The main difference, upon which there seems to be an irreconcilable antagonism, will be found in what is section 8 of the proposition submitted on the part of the Senate conferees. It is upon the question of securing steel for the purpose of making steel guns of the highest type.

The question between the conferees on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House may be summed up in one sentence, whether steel guns shall be subordinated to cast-iron guns or cast-iron guns subordinated to steel guns. The whole plan submitted on the part of the conferees of the House seemed to the conferees of the Senate to subordinate steel guns of the highest type to the cast-iron guns. The effort on the part of the conferees of the Senate was to subordinate the cast-iron gun to the steel gun, not to do away with it entirely, but to hold out and to cling to the effort to avail ourselves of present knowledge and present advance in the manufacture of steel and the construction of steel guns as the primary object in undertaking to improve the fortifications of our harbors. On the other hand it was an effort that our conferees had to encounter to the proposition to manufacture largely cast-iron guns, and to enter into a slow and postponed process of manufacturing steel guns, the first of which would not be made under two years and a half or more, and after that we should undertake the creation of a plant for the assembling of the rough parts of steel which are to be produced by private contractors induced from that point to create a plant for the manufacture of guns.

The conferees on the part of the Senate were anxious to enter at once upon some system that would produce at the earliest possible moment steels guns of the highest type, and at the same time carry on for immediate necessity and for all the uses to which it was possible to apply them, the construction of cast-iron guns of the best possible quality. All this effort in reference to steel was, by the proposition on the part of the House, subordinated and postponed to the manufacture and construction of iron guns. Upon this irreconcilable difference the conferees have been compelled to differ. Of course there is no opportunity for further conference upon this bill, and I shall not ask for a new conference.

I ask that these two propositions may be printed in the RECORD, and to them I invite the attention, not only of the Senate, but all that part of the public that is anxious for some efficient mode of proceeding to fortify our coasts and our harbors.

SENATE CONFEREES' PROPOSITION.

An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sums of money herein provided for be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

SECTION 1. For the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other work of defense, and for the construction of sea-walls, $125,000.

SEC. 2. For torpedoes for harbor defense; the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them; for needful casemates, cable-galleries, and appliances to render it possible to operate submarine mines; for continuing torpedo experiments, and for practical instruction of engineer troops in detail of the service, $100,000.

SEC. 3. For experiments in guns and projectiles for high explosives, including the purchase of guns, projectiles, and targets for such tests as the board hereinafter authorized shall direct, $100,000.

SEC. 4. For the procurement of powders, projectiles, fuses, implements, and materials for the service of heavy guns, for the alteration of seacoast carriages, and for the compensation of draughtsmen on gun-construction while employed in the Ordnance Bureau, $200,000.

SEC. 5. For the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary buildings, tools, machinery, and fixtures for a gun factory for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance at such arsenal as said board may select, having due regard to proximity of material, approach, by rail and water, and security, $500,000.

SEC. 6. To complete the guns now under fabrication by the Ordnance Department, and for testing the same, as follows: One 10-inch breech-loading steel gun, wire-wrapped, with longitudinal bars on Woodbridge plan, $20,000; for testing the same, $25,000; one 10-inch breech-loading steel-hooped gun, $20,000; for testing the same, $25,000: one 10-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, wire-wrapped, $1,500; for testing the same, $12,000; one 8-inch breech-loading steel-hooped gun, $10,000; for testing the same, $12,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, steel-tubed, $20,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, hooped and tubed with steel on the French system, $20,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading mortar, cast-iron, hooped with steel, $12,000.

That the sum of $57,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of $400,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the construction and payment of the guns authorized by said act and now being constructed by the South Boston Iron Works, under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884; and the extension of said contracts is authorized accordingly.

SEC. 7. For the construction of 12-inch rifled mortars, either of cast-iron, steel-hooped, or mortars principally or all of cast-iron, or mortars principally or all of steel, either muzzle-loading or breech-loading, all as the board hereinafter provided for shall determine, to fire a projectile weighing not less than 615 pounds, to have a maximum range and an accuracy of fire, if of cast-iron to be equally efficient in all respects to any cast-iron mortars of such size yet tested by the Government; if cast-iron, steel-hooped, or if made principally or all of steel, to be equally efficient in all respects with [the steel] mortars of the best kind at present made by others of like system, as shown by the published records of like tests. If any have stood the required test then the board may retest and purchase therefrom such mortars of such system as proves most efficient to the extent permitted by this appropriation, cost, effectiveness, and time of delivery being considered, $500,000.

SEC. 8. That the said board is hereby authorized and required to make contracts with responsible steel manufacturers, after suitable advertisements, to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed, for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned, and tempered forged steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, for Army and Navy purposes, in quantity not to exceed 10,000 gross tons, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, which shall insure the production beyond reasonable doubt of sound and reliable material, possessing the necessary tensile strength, elasticity, and extensibility to adapt it to the construction of guns of high power, subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture and including all the parts of each caliber specified: Provided, That no money shall be expended except for steel accepted and delivered; and each bidder shall contract to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months and the largest calibers at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the execution of the contract; and all the forgings shall be of American product and manufactured in the United States; and one-half of the material purchased under this provision shall be for the use of the War Department, and one-half for the use of the Navy Department, in the armament of ships heretofore or hereafter authorized by Congress; and for the purposes of this section the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available during six years from the date of the execution of the contract.

SEC. 9. For the manufacture of twenty 12-inch cast-iron rifle-guns, about 33 calibers length of bore, and weight not less than 104,000 pounds, not exceeding $520,000; for carriages suitable for the same, and such projectiles as the board may order for these guns, including the proving and transportation of these guns, $480,000. Each gun, before it is accepted, shall be subjected to such test as shall be prescribed by said board, not less in effect than that prescribed by statute of July 5, 1884, section 2, making appropriations for fortifications, and other purposes, and such other test shall be applied as may be ordered by the board or thought necessary to enable it to determine that such guns are equal in all respects to the 12-inch cast-iron rifle made by the South Boston Iron Company and now at Sandy Hook.

SEC. 10. Whoever shall produce one or more 12-inch breech-loading single-charge rifle-guns, of not more than 33 calibers in length of bore, and not more than 104,000 pounds weight, for projectiles of not less than 800 pounds weight each, which guns are to be made principally or wholly of steel, or principally or wholly of cast-iron, each supplied with projectiles, powder, implements, ordnance supplies, and including all incidental expenses of such a test as is hereinbefore provided for, shall, for each test gun so provided by him or them which withstands the test prescribed, without such injury as would prevent some continuation of the firing, be paid for the same, by direction of said board, if such gun or guns be made principally of steel, at the price of $160,000 each, and if made of cast-iron principally, at the price of $80,000 each, which sums of money are to be accepted as the full prices of the guns and the cost of the test, but not including the cost of the carriages therefor, which, if furnished by the party providing the gun, shall, if it be found suitable for use with such gun, be paid for at a price of not more than $25,000; but should the carriage for testing any such guns be provided by the Government, it shall be paid for by the party whose gun is tested thereon if the gun shall, by bursting, destroy the same before the gun has been fired to the prescribed test. In testing the trial guns the Government shall furnish free of charge the use of proving grounds for range and accuracy, the necessary butts for durability, and targets for penetration, and bear all expense of handling and transporting the guns, and for this purpose and for any further expense of testing such guns $500,000 is hereby appropriated.

The plans of the guns of either kind, the breech-loading mechanism, the system of rifling, the projectiles adapted thereto, and the kind of powder or powder and cases therefor used may be of the kinds heretofore approved by the War and Navy Departments, or may be after original designs or plans and proportions satisfactory to the projector and producer; and the guns furnished by any party, and all the supplies therefor, shall be furnished without any cost to the Government until such guns have endured the prescribed test. If any gun or guns made principally of steel or principally of cast-iron shall be provided which withstand the prescribed test, all such guns shall, if the producer of the gun desires, be further tested at the expense of the Government, under the joint direction of the party producing such gun or guns and the board, until it is fully determined which of the steel guns are the most durable and serviceable, and which of such cast-iron guns are the most durable and serviceable, and that steel gun so selected and the cast-iron gun so selected as the best of its kind shall be contracted for by the board with the party or parties producing such steel gun and such cast-iron gun. The contract to be for fifty steel guns at 65 cents per pound, with a carriage suitable for each gun, to be delivered therewith, the price of the carriage to be one-third that of the gun, and some projectiles for each gun, the carriage to be bought of the party who produces the gun, provided he or they will furnish such carriages suitable in all respects for use wherewith. The projectiles to be of such kind as the board shall determine, and shall be furnished by the party who furnishes these service guns, on condition that the board can make satisfactory contract therefor. For purchasing these fifty 12-inch steel rifles, $3,380,000; for carriages therefor, $1,125,000; for proving these guns, transportation of the guns and carriages, and for such projectiles as the board may purchase for use therewith, $500,000.

For thirty cast-iron guns, which shall in like manner have stood the prescribed tests, for each gun at the price of not over 25 cents per pound, $780,000; and for thirty suitable carriages therefor, $540,000; for projectiles for these cast-iron guns, to be contracted for by the board under such specifications as they may direct, and for proving these guns and carriages and transportation of the same, $300,000; these carriages and projectiles to be purchased of the party furnishing the said guns if the board can make suitable contract therefor.

The contract for the steel guns or for the cast-iron guns may each be increased to sixty, if the Government shall desire. If more than one of either of each kind has been provided and withstands the prescribed test, then the firing shall continue, under the same conditions and under direction of the board and at the cost of the Government, until it is determined unquestionably which of either or each class has the best endurance, and the board shall report with a recommendation what action ought to be taken with regard to the other gun or guns of either or both kinds which have withstood the prescribed test, but have been excelled in endurance under the continued firing.

SEC. 11. For service and experimental seacoast carriages, and testing the same, $150,000.

SEC. 12. The President of the United States shall appoint an advisory board, to consist of the Secretaries of War and Navy, and the general commanding the Army, and two civilians, the civilians to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which board shall make, execute, and supervise all contracts and authorize all payments provided for by this act. The contracts for material procured under this act, except when made at Government shops, except as herein otherwise directed, shall be awarded to the lowest and best responsible bidder, after proper advertisement, and under such conditions and specifications as the board may determine; and the board shall certify that prices under which contracts are awarded are reasonable and just. The board shall determine, except as otherwise directed, the order and time of delivery of the steel forgings, guns, mortars, and appliances, and all other material, under such checks and rules as it may determine, and have general supervision of all tests necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. The board is further authorized to examine inventions and designs of heavy ordnance, carriages, projectiles, torpedoes, and other defensive appliances which may be submitted to it, and may contract for an 8-inch multicharge gun of such proportions and on such terms as the board may consider for the interest of the Government, and to be tested in such manner and to such extent as the board may direct. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, $100,000.

SEC. 13. The compensation of the civilian members of the board shall be $7,000 per annum. In the payment of such services, and the contingent and necessary expenses of the board, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated. No person shall be eligible as a member of this board who has any pecuniary interest, either directly or indirectly, in the material, manufacture, or inventions to be employed in the construction or operation of the defenses herein provided for.

SEC. 14. All the material entering into the construction of the armaments herein provided for shall be of American material and manufacture. The appropriations herein made shall remain available until otherwise ordered by Congress. The board herein provided for shall annually report its operations to the Secretary of War, for submission to Congress, at the beginning of each session, which report shall state in detail the amount expended under each section of this act and the progress made in carrying out its provisions, with such additional information as the board may deem advisable.

SEC. 15. All tests to which any material or gun shall be subjected shall be determined and published by said board in advance of any such offer of contract for the furnishing of the same, and there shall be no differences in the test applied to any material or gun furnished or finished by the Government, and a like material or gun furnished by any private contractor.

HOUSE CONFEREES' PROPOSITION.

An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sums of money herein provided for be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

SECTION 1. For the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, and for the construction of sea-walls, $125,000.

SEC. 2. For torpedoes for harbor defense; the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them; for needful casemates, cable-galleries, and appliances to render it possible to operate submarine mines; for continuing torpedo experiments, and for practical instruction of engineer troops in detail of the service, $100,000.

SEC. 3. For experiments in guns and projectiles for high explosives, including the purchase of guns, projectiles, and targets for such tests as the board of defense hereinafter authorized shall direct, $100,000.

SEC. 3. For the procurement of powders, projectiles, fuses, implements, and materials for the service of heavy guns, for the alteration of seacoast carriages, and for the compensation of draughtsmen on gun-construction while employed in the Ordnance Bureau, $300,000.

SEC. 5. For the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary buildings, machinery, tools, and fixtures for a gun-factory for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance, to be erected at such arsenal as the board of defense hereinafter provided for may select, $550,000. In determining upon the location the board shall fully consider the facilities for transportation both by water and rail, the proximity to the establishments which may be likely to furnish the materials to be worked, and freedom from danger from hostile forces.

SEC. 6. To complete the guns now under fabrication by the Ordnance Department, and for testing the same, as follows: One 10-inch breech-loading steel gun, wire-wrapped, with longitudinal bars on Woodbridge plan, $20,000; for testing the same, $25,000; one 10-inch breech-loading steel-hooped gun, $20,000; for testing the same, $25,000; one 10-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, wire-wrapped, $1,500; for testing the same, $12,000; one 8-inch breech-loading steel-hooped gun, $10,000; for testing the same, $12,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, steel-tubed, $20,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, hooped and tubed with steel on the French system, $20,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading mortar, cast-iron, hooped with steel, $12,000.

That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of $400,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1883, for armament of fortifications, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the construction and payment of the guns authorized by said act, and now being constructed by the South Boston Iron Works under contracts dated September 24, 1883, and June 30, 1884; and the extension of said contracts is authorized accordingly.

SEC. 7. For the construction of 12-inch rifle mortars, either of cast-iron, steel-hooped, or mortars principally or all of cast-iron, or mortars principally or all of steel, either muzzle-loading or breech-loading, all as the board hereinafter provided for shall determine, to fire a projectile weighing not less than 615 pounds, to have a maximum range and an accuracy of fire, if of cast-iron to be equally efficient in all respects to any cast-iron mortars of such size yet tested by the Government; if cast-iron, steel-hooped, or if made principally or all of steel, to be equally efficient in all respects with the steel mortars of best kind at present made by others of like system, as shown by the published records of like tests. Unless the trial mortars herein provided for reach the above test they shall not be purchased. If any of said mortars reach the above-specified standard, then the board shall pay an equitable price therefor. If any have stood the required test, then the board may select and purchase therefrom such mortars of such system as seems most efficient, to the extent permitted by this appropriation, cost, effectiveness, and time of delivery being considered; and each service mortar purchased shall be provided with suitable carriage and fifty projectiles, $500,000.

SEC. 8. The standard weight for projectiles for testing 8, 10, and 12-inch rifled guns shall not be less than 250, 500, and 800 pounds, respectively. The standard weight of rifled guns to be tested for endurance and of service guns shall not be more than 33,000, 65,000, and 104,000 pounds, respectively, for 8, 10, and 12-inch rifles.

SEC. 9. For the purchase of oil-tempered steel forgings, rough-dressed, of dimensions suitable for 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch rifles, according to specifications provided by the board of defense; for finishing the same and converting it into finished breech-loading guns at the Government shop or shops; for testing three rifled guns, one 8-inch, one 10-inch, and one 12-inch caliber; for accuracy, range, durability, and penetration; for carriages for the guns to be made from the steel to be purchased from the funds provided in this section, and for projectiles for these guns, $6,000,000: Provided, That no steel shall be paid for which does not fill the specifications under which it was purchased, and that only so much steel shall be bought for the guns provided for in this section as shall be required for one 8-inch, one 10-inch, and one 12-inch rifle, other than that required to replace some parts of one of these three guns until they shall have been made and tested sufficiently to determine that they will each endure two hundred rounds of firing with a weight of projectile of not less than one one-hundred and thirtieth part of the weight of the gun and a muzzle velocity of 2,000 feet per second, and each has withstood without serious derangement or injury a rapid firing test of twenty rounds in eighty minutes from the 8-inch rifle, for twenty rounds in one hundred minutes from a 10-inch rifle, and of twenty rounds in one hundred and twenty minutes from a 12-inch rifle: And provided further, That these guns shall, of either size, have equaled or exceeded in endurance that of any gun of similar caliber which has been made and tested before July 1, 1891, or July 1, 1892, as provided in this act.

Should these guns, or any of them, fail to fulfill these conditions without more expense for repairs than can be put upon them ordinarily for 5 per cent. of the cost of the gun, if fired two hundred rounds with 2,000 feet muzzle velocity of the projectile, or 10 per cent. if fired two hundred rounds with a projectile of the prescribed standard weight and an average muzzle velocity of not less than 2,200 feet per second, then no more of these guns shall be made from the funds appropriated in this section. If these three guns fulfill all these conditions, the balance of the money appropriated in this section may be expended for the purposes provided; but steel for these guns shall only be purchased to the extent that it can be paid for and converted into such guns as fill all the requirements of this section, with a suitable carriage and a suitable number of projectiles for each gun, all to be paid for from the money provided in this section, and of the guns so provided there shall be an equal number of each of the specified sizes. A sufficient amount of this six millions shall be reserved to complete the proof tests provided for service guns as herein provided for, which shall be applied thereto. The projectiles to be provided for these guns shall be made or purchased under specifications to be provided by the board of defense.

SEC. 10. For service and experimental sea-coast carriages, and testing the same, $150,000.

SEC. 11. For the manufacture of twenty 12-inch cast-iron rifle guns, about 33 calibers length of bore, and weight not less than 104,000 pounds, not exceeding $520,000; for carriages suitable for the same, and such projectiles as the Board may order for these guns, including the proving and transportation of these guns, $480,000. Each gun, before it is accepted, shall be tested with not less than five nor more than ten rounds with the service charge of powder and projectiles, which shall give 1,750 feet velocity per second to an 800-pound projectile; and such other test shall be applied as may be ordered by the board or thought necessary to enable it to determine that such guns are equal in all respects to the 12-inch cast-iron rifle made by the South Boston Iron Company and now at Sandy Hook.

SEC. 12. Whoever shall produce one or more 12-inch breech-loading single-charge rifle-guns, of not more than 33 calibers in length of bore, and not more than 104,000 pounds weight, for projectiles of not less than 800 pounds weight each, which guns are to be made principally or wholly of steel, or principally or wholly of cast-iron, each supplied with projectiles, powder, implements, ordnance supplies, and including all incidental expenses of a test of two hundred rounds, to be fired as hereinafter provided for, shall, for each test gun so provided by him or them which withstands the test of two hundred rounds hereinafter prescribed, without such injury as would prevent some continuation of the firing, be paid for the same, by direction of the board of defense, if such gun or guns be made principally of steel, at the price of $160,000 each, and if made of cast-iron principally at the price of $80,000 each, which sums of money are to be accepted as the full prices of the guns and the cost of the tests, but not including the costs of the carriages therefor, which, if furnished by the party providing the gun, shall, if it be found suitable for use with such gun, be paid for at a price of not more than $25,000; but should the carriage for testing any such guns be provided by the Government, it shall be paid for by the party whose gun is tested thereon, if the gun shall, by bursting, destroy the same before the gun has been fired two hundred rounds.

But no trial or test gun shall be paid for unless it endure the test of firing not less than two hundred rounds with a weight of projectile of not less than 800 pounds from the 12-inch rifle, nor less than one one-hundred and thirtieth part of the weight of the gun, and with an average muzzle velocity for two hundred rounds of not less than 2,000 feet per second, and of these two hundred rounds not less than twenty shot of the prescribed weight shall be fired within two hours, and the firing of this two hundred rounds shall not disable the gun so much as to prevent some continuation of the firing without repairs exceeding 5 per cent. of the cost of the gun ordinarily, if the average velocity of the projectiles is 2,000 feet per second; or such repairs as may cost ordinarily 10 per cent. of the price of the gun if the average velocity reached for two hundred rounds is 2,200 feet per second. In testing the trial guns the Government shall furnish free of charge the use of proving grounds for range and accuracy, the necessary butts for durability, and targets for penetration, and bear all expense of handling and transporting the guns, and for this expense and for the further expense of testing guns after they have been fired the two hundred rounds prescribed, $500,000.

The plans of the guns of either kind, the breech-loading mechanism, the system of rifling, the projectiles adapted thereto, and the kind of powder or powder and cases therefor used may be of the kinds heretofore approved by the War and Navy Departments, or may be after original designs or plans and proportions satisfactory to the projector and producer; and the guns furnished by any party, and all the supplies therefor, shall be furnished without any cost to the Government until such guns have endured the prescribed test of firing two hundred rounds with a weight of projectile of not less than 800 pounds nor less than one one-hundredth and thirtieth part of the weight of the gun with an average muzzle velocity for such two hundred projectiles of 2,000 feet per second. This firing shall proceed under the joint direction of the producer of the gun and the board, and after one hundred rounds have been fired twenty rounds shall be fired with the prescribed standard weight and velocity of projectile within two hours of time during consecutive firing.

This twenty rounds of continuous firing in two hours may be made at any time after the gun has been fired one hundred rounds, but shall be done before the two hundred rounds are completed, and the firing of this two hundred rounds shall not disable the gun so much as to prevent some continuation of the firing without repairs exceeding 5 per cent. of the cost of the gun ordinarily, if the average velocity of the projectiles is 2,000 feet per second, or such repairs as may cost ordinarily 10 per cent. of the price of the gun, if the average velocity reached for two hundred rounds was 2,200 feet per second. And the test of the trial gun must be such as to make it reasonably certain that, firing from service guns made on any such system, twenty rounds in two hours, of the standard weight of projectiles, with a velocity of 2,000 feet per second, would not disable the service gun.

If any gun or guns made principally of steel or principally of cast-iron shall be provided which withstand the prescribed test of two hundred rounds with the prescribed weight and velocity of the projectile, at least twenty rounds of which were fired consecutively within two hours, all such guns shall, if the producer of the gun desires, be further tested at the expense of the Government, under the joint direction of the party producing such gun or guns and the board, until it is fully determined which of the steel guns are the most durable and serviceable, and which of such cast-iron guns are the most durable and serviceable, and that steel gun so selected and the cast-iron gun so selected as the best of its kind shall be contracted for by the board with the party or parties producing such steel gun and such cast-iron gun.

The contract to be for fifty steel guns at 65 cents per pound, with a carriage suitable for each gun to be delivered therewith, the price of the carriage to be one-third that of the gun, and some projectiles for each gun, the carriage to be bought of the party who produces the gun, provided he or they will furnish such carriages suitable in all respects for use therewith. The projectiles to be of such kind as the board shall determine, and shall be furnished by the party who furnished these service guns, on condition that the board can make satisfactory contract therefor. For purchasing these fifty 12-inch steel rifles, $3,380,000; for carriages therefor, $1,125,000; for proving these guns, transportation of the guns and carriages, and for such projectiles as the board may purchase for use therewith, $500,000.

For thirty cast-iron guns, which shall in like manner have stood the prescribed tests, for each gun at the price of not over 25 cents per pound, $780,000; and for thirty suitable carriages therefor, $540,000; for projectiles for these cast-iron guns, to be contracted for by the board under such specifications as they may direct, and for proving these guns and carriages and transportation of the same, $300,000; these carriages and projectiles to be purchased of the party furnishing the said guns, if the board can make suitable contract therefor.

The contract for the steel guns or for the cast-iron guns may each be increased to sixty, if the Government shall desire. If more than one of either of each kind has been provided and withstands the prescribed test, then the firing shall continue, under the same conditions and under direction of the board and at the cost of the Government, until it is determined unquestionably which of either or each class has the best endurance, and the board shall report with a recommendation what action ought to be taken with regard to the other gun or guns of either or both kinds which have withstood the prescribed test, but have been excelled in endurance under the continued firing.

It is herein provided that all guns contracted for as provided in this section, to be delivered for service, shall be tested at the place or places where built, by the party furnishing the same, or at such other suitable place or places as he or they may provide, with not less than five nor more than ten rounds from each gun, with that charge equal to the maximum charge endured for two hundred rounds in the trial gun on which the contract for the gun of such calibre was made, the Government to furnish an officer to witness such test at the time the party making the gun shall desire.

The gun shall endure such test without more injury than the ordinary wear and tear of such guns should be, or that the ordinary wear and tear of the trial gun was in firing a like number of rounds of equal energy. The Government shall not accept guns which are seriously injured by this test or which are injured more than the ordinary wear and tear of such guns, unless the injured parts are replaced or made good, when the gun may be again tested, and must endure the test before it shall be accepted without more injury than ordinary wear and tear that such number of fires shall produce. The powder, cartridges, and projectiles for these tests shall be paid for by the Government at a reasonable price therefor.

SEC. 13. The President of the United States shall appoint a board of defense, to consist of the Secretaries of War and Navy, and the General commanding the Army, and two civilians, the civilians to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which board shall make, execute, and supervise all contracts and authorize all payments provided for by this act. The contracts for material procured under this act, except when made at Government shops, except as herein otherwise directed, shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, after proper advertisement, and under such conditions and specifications as the board may determine; and the board shall certify that prices under which contracts are awarded are reasonable and just.

The board shall determine, except as otherwise directed, the order and time of delivery of the steel forgings, guns, mortars, and appliances, and all other material, under such checks and rules as it may determine, and have general supervision of all tests necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. The board is further authorized to examine inventions and designs of heavy ordnance, carriages, projectiles, torpedoes, and other defensive appliances which may be submitted to it, and may contract for an 8-inch multicharge gun of such proportions and on such terms as the board may consider for the interest of the Government, and to be tested in such manner and to such extent as the board may direct. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, $100,000.

SEC. 14. The compensation of the civilian members of the board shall be $7,000 per annum. In the payment of such services, and the contingent and necessary expenses of the board, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated. No person shall be eligible as a member of this board who has any pecuniary interest, either directly or indirectly, in the material, manufacture, or inventions to be employed in the construction or operation of the defenses herein provided for.

SEC. 15. All the material entering into the construction of the armaments herein provided for shall be of American material and manufacture. The appropriations herein made shall remain available until otherwise ordered by Congress. The board herein provided for shall annually report its operations to the Secretary of War for submission to Congress, at the beginning of each session, which report shall state in detail the amount expended under each section of this act and the progress made in carrying out its provisions, with such additional information as the board may deem advisable.

SEC. 16. It is hereby provided that all guns for competitive trial and tests to be made and tested as provided in this bill shall be finished ready for test on or before January 1, 1891: Provided, That if no 12-inch rifle gun made principally or wholly of steel has been completed and offered for test at that time, which shall withstand the prescribed test of two hundred rounds, then the time for accepting guns for competitive test as herein provided shall be extended to January 12, 1892. The board of defense shall make all reasonable efforts to make all the tests provided for as quickly as possible after any such gun is ready for test; and all the test experiments shall be open to the inspection and observation of all parties furnishing guns for test as provided in this act.

SEC. 17. That with a view of utilizing a portion of the now useless guns on hand; that is to say, the Parrott guns, and the 11, 10, 9, and 8 inch smooth-bores, to the extent which shall seem desirable and in the shortest possible time, as follows:

For the conversion of twenty-two 300-pounder Parrott guns on hand into muzzle-loading rifle guns of 11-inch caliber, for projectiles of 250 pounds weight; forty-two 200-pounder or 8-inch Parrott guns into 9-inch muzzle-loading rifle guns, for projectiles of 150 pounds weight, and forty-two 100-pounder or 6.4-inch Parrott guns into 7-inch rifle guns, for projectiles of 100 pounds weight; one muzzle-loading rifle gun, six hundred and six in all, at a price not to exceed an average of $1,000 per gun, inclusive of transportation; and the board is hereby authorized and directed to cause two or more guns of each caliber and kind of the above guns to be converted as above proposed, beginning with the largest calibers, and have them fired for durability sufficient to properly judge what kind and quantity of powder may probably be used in these converted guns to have them endure from one hundred to one hundred and forty rounds each before bursting; and if the board after such tests think it desirable to alter the specified one hundred and six guns to be so converted, they shall contract, after duly advertising, for the conversion of these one hundred guns, with fifty projectiles for each, provided that all such guns shall be rifled with the uniform twist of the rate provided in the new army and navy guns of similar caliber, but with no more than six-tenths or three-fourths as many grooves, the grooves and lands to be correspondingly wider unless the board find by actual test of one or more guns that the greater number is desirable.

The projectiles to be of the prescribed weight and suitable for use in these guns, and to be furnished at a price of not more than 10 cents a pound. They shall be full caliber cast-iron shot and shell, with chilled fronts to the extent that the board think best, and shall have brass or bronze packing-rings at the rear, and if the board think best shall have a guide-band of brass or bronze at the front. The conversion of these guns and the procuring of the projectiles therefor shall be done as soon as practicable after the rifling is fully determined upon and the size and number of grooves fixed. Suitable contracts to be made for each of these parts of the work after due advertisement.

For the conversion of one hundred and six guns, their transportation and the supply and transportation of five thousand three hundred projectiles therefor, including the conversion and test of the three sizes of the trial guns, $225,000, or so much as the board may find necessary of that amount.

SEC. 18. Section 2 of an act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, and so forth, approved July 5, 1884, is hereby repealed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to reconsider the vote by which the resolution I presented in relation to the Executive Departments was passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the report of the conference committee been disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The accompanying documents have been ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say a word with regard to it before it passes away.

Mr. DAWES. The report has not been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asked that the report be printed in the RECORD; which was ordered, there being no objection.

Mr. DAWES. No; the two propositions on the part of the Senate conferees and the House conferees make no part of the record but are printed in the Congressional RECORD if the Senate consent; but I suppose the question should be submitted to the Senate whether this report will be accepted or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish only to emphasize in a very few words this most extraordinary condition of affairs.

There is no fortification bill for the current year or for the next year. For two whole years, so far as the Army is concerned, with coast defenses and heavy guns nothing whatever has been done. There is no money to cut the grass along the glacis of our forts, there is not money enough to buy paint to save the old guns from rusting, there are no nails and shingles for the old sheds, the dwellings in the forts—not one solitary cent. The workshops and what we have—it is a good deal in value if not adapted to modern warfare—what little we have is left to go to rack and ruin for the coming two years.

The simple statement of that fact is a most extraordinary indictment of somebody. I have no doubt whatever that if this whole subject can be left open to the full and free deliberation of Congress, high, patriotic, progressive, enterprising ground will be taken by both Houses, by the whole Congress. I have no doubt that if Congress had been permitted to discuss these questions it would have done what would have been substantially a credit to it. So far as the Senate is concerned the debate has been unlimited and the record will show that our votes have been up to the highest demands of the times. On both sides of the Chamber there has been nothing of great national concern in many years concerning which the gentlemen of this Chamber have been so substantially and so heartily united. It is practically a unanimous determination of the Senate that our defenses of all kinds need renewal and must be renewed.

Now let the country say where the blame shall be. I am not speaking of it at all in a partisan sense. I can not, even yet, after all I have heard for eight months concerning conferences on this year's appropriation bill, possibly fathom the motives of those men who have deliberately blocked the way and forbidden Congress to do anything. That is what it amounts to. They have denied the right and privileges of free government to the people of the United States on this subject of vast national importance.

I affirm again, as has been affirmed by report after report, year after year, by speech after speech, by the scientific magazines of the world, and by the scientific men of war of all nations, that we have reached a stage when there is no longer an excuse for our remaining inactive.

I affirm that the day of manufacturing cast-iron guns of any description has passed. I do not deny the very considerable value of the old guns we have. There are many fighting vessels which these guns would greatly injure; but we have to consider what is the best the world has and how we shall meet that best, and it is deliberately proposed by a part of this Congress that we shall meet the best the world has with the remnants of old science that is worth perhaps seventy-five against one hundred or sixty against one hundred in warfare.

That is the deliberate proposition; and there have been men haunting these halls for months and for years, but especially for months past—haunting these corridors, endeavoring to foist on this Government their worn-out old schemes. They have told us how to take old cast-iron guns and saw them in two, screw a bolt and a jacket on long cast-iron tubes to lengthen those guns that the modern slow-burning powder may be fired from them. They brought us here that once enterprising and advanced idea, but now a useless and an abandoned idea, the Haskell multicharge gun. Honorable as the men are connected with it, they have been trying to get us into the manufacture of 12-inch cast-iron rifles and numerous cast-iron mortars, a thing no civilized country will do now.

We have a vast quantity of old mortars that are of some use, and, as I said before, a great many old cast-iron guns of other kinds that may be of some use to us; but we have come now to a stage where it is absolutely certain that steel in enormous masses, running up to as high as 50 tons, can be handled perfectly, forged, kneaded, worked over, and brought to that condition which will adapt it for the gun where both toughness and elasticity are required under the tremendous blow of the powder twenty, thirty tons to the square inch. Nothing in the world will spring out with elasticity and instantly return to its former dimensions like steel. Every book shows, every man knows, that there is nothing like steel for such a purpose.

I need not answer the question. You can refine steel until it will suspend 200,000 pounds to the inch in diameter if necessary. It may be tempered; it may be brittle. Everybody says your steel may fly to pieces when you apply to it the high charges of the modern gun. It would have done so ten, five, or perhaps three, years ago, though the process began long before that; but there is now no practical difficulty in making a large amount of steel substantially homogeneous throughout the whole mass, cutting it, sawing it this way and that; and taking the little things from the testing-machine for it, and they will show substantially the same character throughout.

It would be just as sensible to go to work and make cast-iron sporting arms as to make cast-iron great cannon, and there is no man of the House conferees, or in the House, or anywhere else who wants a cast-iron fowling-piece, or a cast-iron musket, because he knows with the rolled steel completely forged how elegant a weapon he gets. He can have precisely the same difference in great cannon. The handling of steel in small masses was long ago known. The handling of it in large masses is only now known.

But I do not go any further. There is no time except to read something like what I said during the night—for the distinction between this and yesterday and to-morrow is very indefinite with the twenty-four hours' session—that those men who have attempted to tie us to these worn-out products, without their own knowledge, apparently, have been signally and completely foiled; for, thanks to some patriotism, we have gone on ordering vessels for the Navy armored and partly armored, and ordered guns for them, which guns will be those of modern kind, 6-inch steel guns up to 8 and 10-inch, and even, perhaps, the 12-inch gun, until the laws now on the statute-book, including those that I hope will be signed to-day, put within the hands of the Secretary of the Navy the right to contract for some 22,000 tons of forged steel of the best class, while the two bills called the twin bills, passed here awhile ago, called for a permanent contract of only 10,000.

The Navy Department has practically in its own hands the right to contract for twelve thousand, and I prophecy to you that within a few weeks you will find competing the greatest steel manufacturers in the country for the manufacture of that steel under contract and to put in the best machinery and the best plant known to the world, and we shall begin to have a delivery of forged steel of the kind we have been trying for, and no man will dare after six months are past to talk iron guns any more.

I am not sure sometimes but that I have discovered one secret of this delay. Before next December there will be existing in this country plants, partly or nearly, possibly quite, finished, capable of taking the big contracts we have talked about, because there are one or two people at least who are working for it. If we had put out these great proposals for 10,000 tons for the Army and 10,000 tons for the Navy, perhaps eight or ten firms would have competed for the privilege of putting up the great plants and manufacturing them. But when next December comes one man anyhow, possibly two, will have the plant ready and nobody in the United States can compete against him. He will be ready to promise a gun from six to eight months sooner than anybody else, up to the highest standard; and those who might have competed with him will be entirely left out. Yet we have been told that we were talking jobbery while we endeavored with all our heart to put this thing before the whole magnificent manufacturing interest of the country. It may result in giving it all to one or two, possibly the great contracts to one firm, while they have been crying "monopoly" and "jobbery" to us.

They are taking the course, whether they mean it or not, calculated to entirely cut off competition from the beginning of the work. Now we see what was meant by it. The old common sense of the common law says that a man shall be held to intend that which his action will inevitably produce, to intend the result inevitably following from his acts. If it shall appear inevitable that this course is to throw this primarily into the hands of one man or two men, we shall have a right, on looking back at the history of it, to see how possible it was that all these charges of jobbery may have been directed towards the United States Senate simply to cover the path of Wall street management that would secure to one or two men the beginning of these great contracts.

Mr. GORMAN addressed the Presiding Officer.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to pass a bill of considerable consequence, a House bill that has been agreed to by the Committee on Finance and reported favorably, and will only take a moment or two?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

SCHOOL-FARM LANDS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] asks that the bill, the title of which will be stated, be considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must object to that at present until I can get a better look at it.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course any delay in the passage of this bill will secure its rejection. It is an important bill. These eighteen farms of 160 acres of land are owned by the United States, and it is proposed that we give them back to the actual occupants or owners of the land upon the payment of the taxes originally due upon them, and with the interest and penalties that have accrued, and then that the proceeds shall go to the support of schools in those districts, the rice districts of South Carolina, in Beaufort County. I take it there can be no objection. It has received the close scrutiny and the approbation of every member of the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the objection on such a statement, but I am very much afraid of it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 20, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "direct tax proper charged" and insert "amount of tax, penalty, interest, and costs properly chargeable;" and, in line 27, before the words "and costs" insert "penalty, interest;" so as to make the section read:

That all the lands in Beaufort County, South Carolina, known as the school-farms, now owned or held by the United States by virtue of the proceedings under the act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862, and under acts supplementary thereto or upon the same subject-matter, may be redeemed and restored to such persons as shall make application therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within one year from the passage of this act, and furnish satisfactory evidence that such person or applicant in each case was, at the time the United States acquired title thereto, the legal owner of such land, or the heir-at-law or devisee (or grantee, in good faith and for a valuable consideration) of such legal owner; but before such redemption shall be awarded and title restored on any such application and proof, such applicant shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the amount of tax, penalty, interest, and costs properly chargeable against the lands described in such application, together with the cost of advertising the sale of said lands: Provided, That if any such school-farm is only a part of a tract of land against which such tax was levied, then the applicant for redemption shall pay only such pro rata share of the tax, penalty, interest, and costs as may be ascertained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be properly chargeable against such school-farm.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 2, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That if the applicant has received from the United States the surplus proceeds of the sale of such land, under section 36 of the act of August 5, 1861, he shall not be entitled to redeem the same under this act unless such applicant shall refund the surplus so paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there an amendment to that bill in the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL. I shall ask to have a conference on the amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. I am afraid there will not be time.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MORRILL, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

EXPENSES OF SENATE INVESTIGATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report on the fortification bill is before the Senate. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to make a report?

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that I may introduce a bill to be put on its passage at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to introduce a bill for present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read subject to objection.

The bill (S. 3358) to provide for the expenses of certain investigations was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000, to be immediately available for the expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate at its present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINNEAPOLIS INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to report a bill for which I wish to ask immediate consideration? It will take but a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SEWELL. I report from the Committee on the Library the joint resolution (H. Res. 182) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EAST SAGINAW, MICH.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Maryland will yield for the passage of a bill which has just passed the House for a public building.

Mr. MAHONE. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds direct me to report without amendment the bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East Saginaw, Mich. I ask that it be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to have the first part of this bill read again with reference to the use of the building, what the building is to be erected for.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For the use and accommodation of the United States court, post-office, and other Government offices, and for other Government uses.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would suggest that at the present session of Congress the courts were fixed at Bay City. This provides a court-house at East Saginaw, so that the courts will be convened at one place and the court-house be built at another. It seems to me rather inconsistent.

Mr. CONGER. It is for the post-office and other buildings of that sort. The provision relating to the court was put in in case court should be held there.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest that the bill be amended by striking out the words "United States court," as there is no court there.

Mr. CONGER. You might as well strike out the whole bill as to strike out a word of it, we are so near the final adjournment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will not insist if the Senate wish to pass so inconsistent a bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Maj. John L. Sucss be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

WORK IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask a vote on my motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to reconsider the resolution submitted by me in relation to the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only entertain the motion with the consent of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I yield.

Mr. MAHONE. I hardly suppose the Senator from Missouri would like to cut off the opportunity of my expressing my views about this matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is not debatable at this late hour.

Mr. HARRIS. It is not a debatable question at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. MAHONE. I am aware of that fact, but this resolution was passed in my absence, and as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I felt that I had a right, and it should not be refused me by the mover of the resolution, to express my objections to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us vote, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MAHONE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope by unanimous consent the Senator from Virginia may have a few moments to state his objections. I should like to hear what they are. Let there be unanimous consent for, say, five minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The time is very short, but I have no objection to the Senator having four or five minutes, a reasonable time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, then, will recognize the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MAHONE. I ought to be very grateful for such a concession on the part of the Senator from Missouri when I say this resolution was passed in my absence. What is the object of this resolution? The Senate will hear it:

Resolved, That a select committee to consist of five Senators be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and examine the methods of business and work in the Executive Departments of the Government, the time and attention devoted to the operations thereof by the persons employed therein, and generally to inquire into and report to the Senate the causes of the delays in transacting the public business said to exist in some of said Departments.

If that is the object of this special committee that is to sit during the recess, why not confine it to that purpose? If the object is to explore these Departments to ascertain if there is delay in any manner or from any cause, why not confine it to that, and I might inquire wherefore the necessity of such a committee with all the committees of both branches of Congress empowered to make such investigations? But the resolution goes on further. It provides:

We are advised further that this committee is to ascertain what buildings are rented in the city of Washington and what are the rentals paid. That information is to-day in the possession of the Senate. There has been no time when an inquiry in that direction could not have been promptly answered. The information is here, and wherefore the necessity of this committee, I ask, to inquire what additional public buildings are necessary, and what buildings are rented, and what rentals are paid?

The said committee shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to inquire and report what further public buildings are necessary to the transaction of the public business in Washington and the proper uses of the public buildings now existing in said city.

I suggest that if such an inquiry as this is to be made it is eminently proper that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should be empowered and instructed to make the inquiry.

Then I would inquire where there has been a failure on the part of this committee or on the part of this Senate to provide all the additional public buildings that seemed to be necessary for carrying on the business of the Government at the city of Washington? There has been no neglect in that respect.

I say, therefore, that this proposition occurs to me to be a reflection which I feel it to be my duty as the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to call the attention of the Senate to. I am not aware that that committee has in any respect neglected its duty. I am not aware that it is not fully competent and capable of pursuing this investigation for which this resolution would appoint a special committee to sit during the recess at a considerable charge to the Government.

If such an investigation is necessary, I ask the Senate if the gentlemen remaining on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, composed of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], are not as capable as any committee that the Senate could form to perform that duty? Hence my opposition to the resolution, Mr. President, and I hope the Senate will not pass it in the form it now is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just one word, Mr. President, by unanimous consent. This resolution is not intended as a reflection upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, directly or indirectly. It is not intended to cover any ground which that committee occupies; none whatever. It is simply intended to inquire into the status of the public buildings used by the Departments here, to ascertain whether their business is behind, to ascertain what steps are necessary to bring it up to date, and relieve Senators and Representatives from the immense burdens that are heaped upon them. We now make provision by renting rooms, and also by the erection of new buildings. I propose to inquire into the uses made now of public buildings here, and there is no reflection on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or upon any committee. It is in the interest of the best administration here that we shall make this inquiry.

We have an official report from the War Department that the adjustment of the claims under the act of July 5, 1884, will require four and a half years' time. We have similar reports from other Departments, and all of us are receiving letters every day inquiring into these matters, and it is time to devise some plan or means by which this business can be brought up to date if it is possible, and there is no reflection any one.

I hope that the motion to lay on the table will prevail.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This motion is debatable only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALL. I only desire to say a word by unanimous consent.

The appointing of special committees to perform the duties of the standing cammittees is, I think, an unfortunate proceeding. Certainly while there is no reflection intended upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it is a reflection upon them to say that some other Senators can perform the duty assigned to them better than they can, and certainly there can be no reason for that assertion. It is not the predicate of the resolution by this body. There are no Senators here who are more capable of performing this duty than those who belong to the Committee on Public Buildings, whose regular business it is to perform them.

I quite agree, therefore, with the Senator from Virginia that this resolution ought not to pass superseding the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the performance of one of the duties assigned to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MAHONE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. Is this a motion to reconsider or to lay on the table the motion to reconsider?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate adopted a resolution on the motion of the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Virginia moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the resolution. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay that motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. May I inquire of the Senator from Virginia if I understand his object is to amend the resolution, or to defeat it entirely?

Mr. MAHONE. In answer to the Senator from Tennessee, I suggested to the author of this resolution that if he would strike out the second paragraph of the resolution, we had nothing to say about it; but that he refused to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHENEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 14, nays 47; as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution passed was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, I hope the Senator from Missouri will consent to strike out the clause about public buildings.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the second clause of the resolution be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the words:

The said committee shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to inquire and report what further public buildings are necessary to the transaction of the public business in Washington, and the proper uses of the public buildings now existing in said city.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion to reconsider still insisted on by the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MAHONE. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By leave of the Senate the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will have to be reconsidered in order to put in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the amendment was made by unanimous consent. The Senator from Missouri asked unanimous consent that a reconsideration be had for the purpose of amendment, and the resolution has been amended.

Mr. HOAR. What was the motion passed on the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To lay on the table the motion to reconsider. The resolution as amended is agreed to unless there be objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. CULLOM the select committee to inquire into and examine the methods of business and work in the Executive Departments of the Government, &c., authorized by resolution of the Senate of this day.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

A bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 130) for the relief of John Fletcher; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 182) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit.

BRIDGES ACROSS CUMBERLAND AND CANEY FORK RIVERS, TENN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Maryland will yield to me to pass a bridge bill which did not get here with the others, merely amending an act by changing the names of the parties as they have been changed in the reorganization. I ask that the bill may be passed. I report it from the Committee on Commerce.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9793) to amend an act approved March 3, 1885, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, in Tennessee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL BANKS IN RESERVE CITIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a report from a committee of conference, and ask for its adoption. I ask that the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one report from a committee of conference already pending, on which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish, then, to state that the House of Representatives by an error has sent an enrolled bill, and it has been signed, and the signature of which has been announced, and that is invalid unless this report of the conference committee is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield for that purpose?

Mr. GORMAN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same amendment to read as follows:

Strike out all of said bill after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 50,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency, in writing, asking that the name of the city in which such banks are located shall be added to the cities named in sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller shall have authority to grant such request, and every bank located in such city shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per cent. of its deposits, as provided in sections 5191 and 5195 of the Revised Statutes."

SEC. 2. That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 200,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency, in writing, asking that such city may be a central reserve city, like the city of New York, in which one-half of the lawful-money reserve of the national banks located in other reserve cities may be deposited, as provided in section 5195 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller shall have authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to grant such request, and every bank located in such city shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, 25 per cent. of its deposits, as provided in section 5191 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payment," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding, after the words "New York," the words, "and the city of San Francisco, Cal."

Amend the title to read "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JAS. F. MILLER,
BERIAH WILKINS,
GEO. E. ADAMS,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHERMAN,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three members on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress, having finished its business unless he may have some further communication to make the two Houses of Congress, are now ready to close its session by an adjournment sine die.

The message also announced that the Speaker had appointed under the foregoing resolution Mr. MORRISON, Mr. TUCKER, and Mr. REED the said committee.

PETITIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the Senator from Maryland to yield to me. My colleague [Mr. ALLISON], who is detained from the Chamber by committee duty, requested me to present resolutions of several Grand Army posts of Iowa and of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto. I move that the resolutions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1887.

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress, having finished its business, unless he may have some further communication to make the two Houses of Congress, is now ready to close the session by an adjournment sine die.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East Saginaw, Mich., and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Chair to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses having completed the business of the present session are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some further communication to make to them.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. SAULSBURY were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3358) to provide for the expenses of certain investigations.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report on the fortification appropriation bill is before the Senate, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], the chairman of the conference committee, as well as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], has sought to create the impression that the conferees on the part of the other House have been endeavoring to subordinate steel guns to cast-iron. The Senator from Connecticut is good enough to go further and intimate that there has been a deliberate purpose to tie us to the worn-out practice of making cast-iron guns, and that there was a desire to have this bill fail so that hereafter the manufacture of steel for the larger guns would be confined to one firm.

Mr. President, no Senator regrets more than I do the failure of the conferees to come to an agreement. This failure naturally subjects them to sharp criticisms, but the suggestions of the Senator from Connecticut are so unjust that I can not permit them to go to the country without an answer.

In July last the Senate considered the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications, &c. The bill as it came to the Senate made no provision for the construction of guns. The Senate added two new sections, Nos. 4 and 5. The fourth provided for the construction of ten 12-inch muzzle-loading rifled cast-iron mortars. Now, it must be noticed that when that bill came to this body there was no provision for a cast-iron gun or a cast-iron mortar. The Senate went beyond this, and provided by section 5 for the purchase of 10,000 gross tons of steel and appropriated therefor $6,000,000, leaving to the Secretary of War the power to purchase this steel upon such tests as he might prescribe, the guns to be made from the steel to be finished in the Government shops.

When we came to consider in conference these propositions there was a wide and radical difference between the conferees of the two Houses as to the propriety of making large appropriations for the construction of guns, to be expended by the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department. Congress since 1870 having failed to make any considerable appropriation for new work, it was urged that it was equivalent to a vote of want of confidence in that bureau as now organized; and the conferees on the part of the House insisted with great force that it was unwise to intrust the expenditure of so large a sum of money in the hands of gentlemen who have not shown any special capacity for such a work. They therefore insisted that no proposition would be entertained unless it embraced a provision to give private enterprise an opportunity to compete for the finishing and assembling of these steel guns, so that there might be active competition between the Government shops and those established by private enterprise. It was insisted upon that by this means, and this alone, the Government could secure first-class guns within reasonable cost.

To go on with this work, to create the best guns that can be made in the world, was the object of every gentleman on this conference. As to the amount of money to be appropriated there was scarcely a difference of opinion. The conferees on both sides were not only prepared to take the $6,000,000 provided for in the bill as it passed the Senate in July last, but to add to it $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 more, the difficulty being as to how it should be expended. The conferees on the part of the other House said that it must be by a board independent of the present organization, and they suggested a board to be composed of civilians to be appointed by the two presiding officers of the respective Houses. After a long conference we all agreed that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, the General of the Army, and two civilians to be appointed by the President would be a proper board to expend this money.

The proposition was then to buy $6,000,000 worth of steel, to be manufactured in the Government shops, for which ample provision was made, about which there was no difference of opinion, but it was coupled with the other proposition, coming from the other side, that if the Government should go on and assemble these guns they would only consent to it upon the further condition that an additional appropriation should be made throwing open to the inventive genius of every American the opportunity to manufacture guns to compete.

There is sufficient talent, enterprise, and skill in the manufacturers of this country not only to produce the steel but to make the gun, and make it equal to if not better than any that can be made by the Government; and there can be no question that they will make it at a cost 25 per cent. less than it can be made at any Government shop.

The real point of difference was this: It was insisted that the test of the steel to be made and purchased by the Government should be not only the ordinary test, but that three guns of 8, 10, and 12-inch caliber should be actually made and fired according to the tests to be prescribed by the board. To-day an 8-inch gun can be made out of American-manufactured steel. Beyond that it is impossible with our present facilities to go, and it was insisted upon with great force that it was unwise for the Government to contract for so large an amount of steel until an actual test had been made by firing.

I want to say—and it is proper that I should say it, because it is true—that the Senate conferees did not adhere closely to their proposition. They were ready to accept anything that they believed would bring about the result with a view to secure the best interests of the Government.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GORMAN. As to the statement of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that the conferees on the part of the Senate, as well as those on the part of the other House, made a great blunder in making provision for cast-iron guns, it is due to the conferees on the part of the Senate, as well as those on the part of the House, to say that both sides have been ready to make more liberal provisions for cast-iron guns than either of us contemplated when we went into conference.

I shall detain the Senate but a few moments. I feel that it is due to gentlemen who labored for months to produce a result to make this statement of fact, that if the entire appropriation of $17,000,000 had been made it would not have been possible to procure the steel guns of large caliber within the next three or four years, and there is not a commercial body to-day upon the Atlantic or Pacific coast that has not come to Congress to insist that at least some provision should be made within the next year or two for the defense of our seacoast cities. Cast-iron or cast-steel is the only metal with which you can construct guns of a greater caliber than 8-inch within two years; and it was to meet this urgent demand that provision was sought to be made for cast-iron guns.

The General of the Army, the fortification board, and every authority that has looked into this subject has urged that we secure mortars at once. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the proposition that has been made in conference and substantially agreed to by both sides.

SEC. 7. For the construction of 12-inch rifled mortars, either of cast-iron, steel hooped, or mortars principally or all of cast-iron, or mortars principally or all of steel, either muzzle-loading or breech-loading, all as the board hereinafter provided for shall determine.

Leaving it optional with the board to determine whether the mortars and guns should be all of cast-iron or cast-iron bound with steel, or all of steel, and of this whole appropriation of about $17,000,000 not more than a million and a half—I think I am correct in the figures—will be applied for the manufacture of cast-iron guns.

The Senator from Connecticut says that a postponement until December next in the appropriations for the manufacture of steel guns places us hereafter in the hands of one firm.

Mr. HAWLEY. Temporarily, in the beginning.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, everybody knows that none of the great establishments in this country would enter on the manufacture of steel that would make a gun of 10 or 12 inches without a large contract. The Bessemer Iron Company, the Cambria Iron Works, and the Midvale, all say that they must have contracts of from two and a half to four million dollars, and as high as $8,000,000 for the 16-inch gun before they will obtain the plant for the manufacture of the steel.

If this bill had passed you would probably have had at least two great firms preparing to manufacture the steel for the 12 and 16-inch guns. But the Senator from Connecticut knows, as I know, for it is an open secret, that while we can not manufacture steel of that character to-day American enterprise has already made arrangements to secure the two great processes that are considered best in the Old World, and, as the Senator from Connecticut stated on the floor last evening, with the appropriations that have already been made for the Navy, you will secure, as he stated, one and probably two great plants that will enable us to manufacture steel by which we can make 12 and 16-inch guns.

I regret that we have not gone further. I regret extremely that the fortification bill has failed. I regret above all other things that we have not been able to take the manufacture of our arms out of the rut in which it has been. As I said a few days ago, when I addressed the Senate, we have as brilliant and intelligent men in the Ordnance Department of the Army as are to be found on the face of the globe; but as now organized the young men of talent, enterprise, and genius are kept in the rear or banished to some outpost, while the old fossils are kept at the head.

The door must be opened so that any officer of the Army, no matter in what arm of the service, who shows special talent for the construction of guns shall have an opportunity to serve the Government in this particular branch. What reason, Mr. President, can there possibly be for excluding an officer in the Engineer Corps, and especially in the artillery arm of the service, who is to fire and use these guns, from any participation in the manufacture of them? I repeat again that the best interests of the Government demand that the finishing and assembling of the guns in the Government factories shall be under the charge of the most competent officers of the Army, no matter in what arm of the service they may be found; and then the young men of genius and enterprise who are now in the founderies and factories and machine-shops shall have fair opportunity to compete with our officers who are educated at West Point. And this is what the House conferees insisted will produce the best possible result for the Government, and the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed to it.

Mr. President, we have had recently a marked illustration of the effect of such a policy as we had hoped to inaugurate in the manufacture of heavy guns. It is the fault of no party, it is the fault of no particular individual, it was the fault of the system; but you had the same trouble in the Navy. It was so organized that they have failed for years to furnish successful plans and specifications for the construction of ships and the machinery to propel them, but by the legislation of the last session of Congress the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to or he did procure plans for vessels outside of the officers of his department and in the advertisements for proposals for the construction of these ships he permitted private enterprise to come in and not only to build on the plans furnished but to make suggestions and alterations in the machinery provided they guaranteed the power and speed. The result is you now have under contract several vessels which it is believed will equal any of their class in the world. This opened the door wide for every enterprising ship-builder and machinist. Five or six bidders contested for these great ships.

New plans for engines were offered and at prices remarkably low. It has given new life to the construction of iron ships. The Cramps, Harling & Hollingsworth, the two great yards at Baltimore, one at San Francisco, are all now ready to do the Government work and ready to undertake to build the fastest cruisers afloat.

What we sought to do was to put in sharp competition with our Army officers the best and most skillful of our mechanics. We have failed to do so, but it is far better that we should wait another year rather than go on without such competition.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3358) to provide for the expenses of certain investigations; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

APPOINTMENT OF VISITORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the provisions of section 1327, the Chair appoints as the Senators to attend the annual examination at the Military Academy the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and on the board of examiners at the Naval Academy at Annapolis the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the fortification appropriation bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sorry the time is so limited. I believe it is the first occasion I have regretted the conclusion of a Congress and the beginning of our vacation.

The Senator from Maryland has so confounded error with truth that it is very difficult to sift it precisely. He ought to be criticised. For example, he says that our Ordnance Departments of the Army and Navy, our military men, have failed to produce a first-class gun of either iron or steel within these twenty years past. In 1860 we had the best cast-iron guns in the world and our navy was the best armed navy in the world. There was nothing on any ship abroad so destructive as some of our heavy steel guns and cast-iron guns, and we were in advance of the world in the science of casting them.

The Senator says the Ordnance Department is not to be trusted. I perceive that this scheme of a bill, which I have just glanced at, submitted by the House conferees, provides for a board composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the General of the Army, and two civilians—a deliberate verdict of condemnation of the entire Army and Navy boards that have been engaged in studying this subject. And while the Senator talks about the plans for the future, adopting the best ideas going, and speaks of this question having been in discussion for six years past, why does he omit to state that these very same ordnance officers of both Army and Navy, who have given the greatest possible attention to this subject and who have been selected confessedly from among the most skillful men the Army and the Navy have ever seen, reported in one direction only?

The armament board, composed of as able officers as we had; the the gun-foundry board, a competent board of as able officers of the Army and Navy and of civilians as could be found; the fortification board of Army and Navy officers of the ordnance and other branches of the service, and two of the most eminent manufacturers in the country—all three of these boards, and, after them, whatever weight you choose to give it, the Senate Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, which compiled the judgment of similar boards in the Old World and this, made reports, all pointing in one direction.

The Senator speaks as if the whole air was murky before us and there was no certain conclusion that had been reached by anybody anywhere on the subject. Definite results have been reached by the science of the world, but the Old World proceeds in one general direction. The board which the conferees propose is a most clumsy one. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have no time for any of these matters; the General of the Army has his own necessary duties to perform, and the only two persons who would be supposed to give any real time to the subject are the two civilians to be put upon the board.

So far as this side of the Chamber is concerned—and I desire to avoid partisanship as much as possible here—we can give no higher evidence of our sincerity than the fact that we are willing, with general instructions pointing out a general plan, to commit the work in its details, without attempting to hamper it in particulars, to Democratic Government officials.

The scheme which has been under discussion here goes into all the technical engineering scientific details of the construction of various kinds of guns and the tests required.

The Senator says that we have met with great difficulty, our conferees have met with great difficulty in conferring with the House conferees in the matter, and he would give us to understand that really the Senate has embarrassed the House in the matter. Now, sir, note the fact that the Senate has passed four great independent bills, at least, and then has taken the substance out of one or two of them, and put it on the fortification bill for the current year. We have made our propositions first in this shape and then in that, and sent them to the other House. Then note the fact that the only energy that the House has displayed has been in nullifying the fortification bill for the current year, and it has not originated one single bill or made one independent proposition of itself, neither its Appropriations Committee, nor its Military Affairs Committee, nor its Naval Affairs Committee. Whatever sign of healthy life there has been in the House of Representatives has been in the Naval Committee and in the Military Committee, and not in the Committee on Appropriations; and the House has failed to send us a single proposition on this subject of any description. It has not matured one, it has not taken up for discussion even, as we have by the hour and by the day, a single proposition of the many that were within its reach. If our plans were not good, if even the twin bills, the bill of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the bill of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], were not good, and if the proposition of the Fortification Committee was not good, why did they not pass through the House and send to us a proposition which is good?

There are some extraordinary propositions in this scheme for an act. For example, it is prescribed in regard to steel guns that possibly $6,000,000 may be set aside for steel guns, the purchase of forgings of dimensions suitable for 12-inch rifles. After giving the particulars that are entirely unnecessary, which may be trusted to the technical men who want these guns, it proceeds to say:

That these guns shall, of either size, have equaled or exceeded—

When you come to the test—

in endurance that of any gun of similar caliber which has been made and tested before July 1, 1891.

And it proceeds to give four years to the manufacturer to present a gun for test. It says that these steel guns, these experimental guns, may be presented in four years, in January, 1891, and that they shall not be accepted, none of these steels guns, unless they show an endurance that equals or exceeds "that of any gun of similar caliber." The technical man knows that nobody in the world will compete under such a condition. That $6,000,000 is utterly thrown away; that is to say, it will never be availed of; it will remain in the Treasury, because nobody will prepare the plant of half a million to a million and a half necessary to go into this in order to present four years hence a steel gun, and if that is not satisfactory he shall have no contract.

This is what they challenge us to contract for, that they will deliver to us steel of the best quality, and under the best processes known, and under this proposition we shall not accept a pound of it, after putting it through every stage with the severest tests, unless it comes up to this standard, and then they will go on and make gun after gun and we shall not pay for them until the guns are fired, and then, when a gun fails, the contractors shall get nothing for their steel. You go straight on making threats and have no power to enforce them.

Not to dwell too long on the subject, nobody will contract four years in advance to present one gun, if he is to fail to have any further contract. The manufacturers will make as many guns as you want, and ask not a dollar for any of them unless every one of them passes a satisfactory test.

Here is a proposition to make "twenty 12-inch cast-iron rifle guns." If I were the ruler of a foreign power, and wanted to make war against the United States, I should be glad to pay secret service money to the men who would get this Government into that sort of a scheme. I challenge the gentlemen who advocate these things to bring us the opinion of any three engineers or great artillerists in the Old World who will say that that is a practical and sensible thing, or who will not laugh at it as a farce.

We have some of the old Parrott guns on hand, and here is a proposition to take one hundred and six of them and convert them into what I do not know—for example, "twenty-two 300-pounder Parrott guns on hand into muzzle-loading rifle-guns of 11-inch caliber." The 300-pounder Parrott is a 10-inch gun, and they propose to make it an 11-inch gun, and then they will get better service out of an 11-inch gun with thinner walls than out of the present 10-inch Parrott!

I have stood and seen Parrott gun after Parrott gun go to pieces in the city of Charleston, and I have heard from the ships in the harbor what they lost by it. Read the report of the bombardment of Fort Fisher, and see how gun after gun went to fragments on the decks of those ships, in some cases disabling twenty, thirty, and forty men by a single explosion. More damage to our men was done by those bursting guns than was done by the fire of the enemy.

The Parrott gun was good in its day; it was the best there was. I have seen it do good service, but it was a dangerous gun. I will tell you what is the record of one of these, the pieces of which lie at West Point. It was fired on Morris Island 4,600 times; it was tended like an infant throughout the whole experiment, and it threw 4,600 projectiles toward Charleston.

Suppose you say you will not take any guns from a man unless they are equal in endurance to the best that are known. That was an exceptional, a miraculous gun. You might buy Parrott guns for twenty-five years and never get another to do it. It is four times the ordinary record of any smooth-bore gun, and yet it was a rifle gun. There was something exceptionally fortunate and happy in its construction, and yet, as I tell you, I have seen the breech go out of these guns, scattering over the ground. I have seen 200-pound fragments go 75 feet into the air, and all the men who worked those guns knew what the dangers were.

There is no use now in our having guns of cast-iron or with bands, and yet here is money to be fooled away to alter these into Heaven knows what; to convert them not into a 10-inch gun but into an 11-inch gun at a cost of $1,000 apiece, spending $1,000 apiece on guns that we can not certainly hope to use, and reducing them in strength with the idea that they are going to be valuable.

Yes, sir; I do affirm that the proposition is full of absurdities, and it is almost ridiculous in me to attempt to discuss it at this late moment and under these circumstances; but it is all full of errors, and is, especially as to its steel paragraph, so constructed that absolutely nothing can be done under it. Do not take my impassioned words for that. I affirm that the twelve or fifteen great steel manufacturing concerns in this country, unless I am very much mistaken, will not undertake to make guns under a contract like that.

But I rejoice that there is a prospect of better things.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I desire to announce to the Senate from the conference committee upon the deficiency appropriation bill that the committee has agreed upon a report. The bill, however, as it went to the conference committee was not printed. The amendments, which are numerous, are not numbered.

No report can be made until the written amendments in the written bill are selected and numbered by the clerks, and they are now engaged in that duty. It is a long bill, over one hundred pages; the amendments are very numerous, and whether or not the clerks will be able, with this labor upon them, to complete the report so that it can be presented to the Senate in the next seventeen minutes, I am uncertain. Everything is being done that can be done, and if the report can be brought in here before 12 o'clock I shall then read it.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SPOONER, it was Ordered, That A. H. Herr have leave to withdraw from the files his petition and papers, there being no adverse report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer a resolution and ask its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due, and hereby are tendered, to Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, for the ability, courtesy, and impartiality with which he has fulfilled his duties as President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question and declared the resolution adopted unanimously.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, when it shall be completed, a statement of the amount of the appropriations for the next fiscal year. The clerks will not be able to complete it before 12 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent to have the table inserted with a little analyzation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. A single word. I disavow entirely any intention or thought of reflecting upon any of the Senate conferees, as I was charged with having done by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. They have worked for six or seven months, conceding a great deal in a sincere and energetic attempt to come to some reasonable conclusion.

Mr. DAWES. It is due to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the other conferee, to say that whatever fault may lie at the door of any of the conferees, it does not lie at the door of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not at all.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN PATERSON, N. J.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, we have a few minutes yet, and I ask leave to pass two bills. It will take but the reading of these bills. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the public building bill for Paterson, N. J.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks that the bill be now considered by the Senate the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 3130) for the erection of a public building at Paterson, N. J."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I am wholly unable to hear a word of the bill that is being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators and persons on the floor will please be seated.

Mr. HARRIS. The galleries had better be emptied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Persons in the gallery will keep order.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. MAHONE. I now ask to take up Order of Business 2381, a bill of like character.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3233) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Jacksonville, Fla.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas S. Hopkins be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The signature of the President pro tempore of the Senate was announced to the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States.

VISITOR TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, my engagements are such during the summer as to compel me to ask to be excused from service as a member of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the annual examination of the cadets at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vacancy occasioned by the declination of the Senator from Massachusetts will be filled by the appointment of the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. ALDRICH.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

a. Fifty per cent. of the amounts appropriated for the District of Columbia are paid by the United States. The amount for the water department (estimated for 1888 at $300,201.69) is paid out of the revenues of that department.

b. The appropriations for the postal service are paid out of the postal revenues (estimated for 1888 at $50,612,596.46), and any deficiency in the revenue is provided for out of the Treasury of the United States.

c. This is the estimate submitted for rivers and harbors for 1888. "The amount that can be profitably expended," as reported by the Chief of Engineers, is $30,281,749 (Book of Estimates, pages 174–179).

d. No bill making appropriations for fortifications for 1888 was reported to the House.

e. No appropriations for fortifications were made for 1887.

f. This amount includes the sum of $3,500,000 for increase of the naval establishment appropriated by special act.

g. In addition to this amount for pensions for 1884–'85, an unexpended balance of appropriation, estimated at $66,000,000, was reappropriated and made available for that fiscal year.

h. The river and harbor bill for 1888 failed to receive the approval of the President. As passed Congress it carried an appropriation of $9,913,800.

i. No appropriations were made for rivers and harbors for the fiscal year 1885–'86.

k. This amount covers deficiency estimates submitted in House Executive Documents Nos. 21, 22, 49, 89, 120, 133, 180, and 187, and Senate Executive Documents Nos. 110, 116, and 123, and other executive and miscellaneous documents, second session, Forty-ninth Congress.

l. The general deficiency bill failed to pass; as agreed to in conference it carried an appropriation of $4,275,023.66.

m. This amount includes the sum of $5,769,015.28 for payment of Alabama claims awards.

From the above statement it appears that the sum total of the appropriation bills as passed the House of Representatives amounted to $251,127,678.11; and as passed the Senate to $286,173,888.72, showing a net increase made by the Senate of $35,046,210.61.

Some of the principal objects of this increase were as follows:

|---|---|
| For increase of the naval establishment, namely: | |
| For six protected steel cruisers in lieu of two provided for by House bill, net increase | $6,530,000 |
| For guaranteed speed of 20 knots, &c | 1,200,000 |
| For armament of same | 2,880,000 |
| For armored vessels, or floating batteries, or rams for harbor defense | 6,000,000 |
| For light-draught gunboats | 720,000 |
| For torpedo boats | 600,000 |
| For torpedoes and other explosives to be operated from naval vessels | 600,000 |
| For armament of said batteries and rams | 1,800,000 |
| For purchase of the Destroyer | 122,000 |
| Total increase of the Navy | 20,452,000 |

[The increase of Navy appropriations of $20,452,000, the whole of which is added above, contemplated that the expenditure of the sum would extend over a period of five years, or about $4,000,000 per annum; so that the real increase to be expended for this purpose during the next fiscal year is $4,000,000, and not $20,452,000, as stated in the tables.]

|---|---|
| For general support of the naval establishment | $528,000 |
| For audited accounts certified by the Treasury Department | 1,800,000 |
| To pay judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States | 2,858,000 |
| For completing new cruisers, Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta | 261,000 |
| For completing public buildings | 2,300,000 |
| For light-houses and light-house establishment | 259,000 |
| For revenue cutter for Southern coast | 60,000 |
| For Coast and Geodetic Survey | 170,000 |
| For United States and Mexican boundary survey | 100,000 |
| For Alaska and British Columbia boundary survey | 50,000 |
| For completing Capitol terraces | 165,000 |
| For support of the Signal Service | 36,000 |
| For construction of Congressional Library building | 250,000 |
| For hospital buildings at volunteer soldiers' homes | 160,000 |
| To prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia | 400,000 |
| For restoring the diplomatic and consular service to status of current fiscal year | 120,000 |
| For support of the government of the District of Columbia | 490,000 |
| For transportation of foreign mails in American steamships to South American republics | 500,000 |
| For river and harbor improvements | 3,000,000 |
| For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses | 140,000 |
| For expenses of collecting internal revenue | 50,000 |
| For public printing and binding | 37,000 |
| For expenses of United States courts | 65,000 |
| For armament of fortifications | 50,000 |

Other items of increase and various reductions in the appropriations provided in House bills were made by the Senate, showing, as above stated, a net increase of $35,046,210.61.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 3, 1887.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emil Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands;

A bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison;

A bill (H. R. 10991) to quiet title to certain lands in the city of Washington, D. C.; and

A bill (H. R. 10799) for the relief of St. Dominic's church, in the city of Washington, D. C.

Also, that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1885, requested a conference thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. PUGH managers on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service, &c.; and agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK managers on the part of the Senate.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, NEW MEXICO, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the State of Colorado; with request for a conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILKINS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HALSELL. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the amendments and agree to the conference.

Mr. WILKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HALSELL. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the motion I have made.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time, except by consent.

PHILIP TAYLOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to submit a motion that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked thereon.

The SPEAKER. The amendments had better be read.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

There being no objection, the motion to non-concur and agree to the conference was agreed to.

WILLIAM FIGLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask consent to non-concur and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on that bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall object to that.

Mr. EDEN. Let the amendments be read.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. TUCKER. I move to concur.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the subject regularly before the House at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just laid the bill before the House. It came from the Senate on yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not consent to the unanimous consent asked.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, that is killing the bill; and it is a denial of justice to the litigants in that district. If the gentleman does that, of course he takes the responsibility upon himself for defeating the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This bill comes with the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. TUCKER. Can I submit the motion to concur?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing that the House shall vote on the motion of the gentleman; but I do not agree to the unanimous consent asked.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well, then I submit the motion and demand the previous question upon it.

The previous question was ordered. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 95, noes 11.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum, Mr. Speaker, has voted.

Mr. TUCKER. Evidently a quorum is present in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is quite manifest that the House is inclined to pass this bill. I do not think it ought to be passed; but inasmuch as the indications are so clear that a majority of the House favor the passage of the bill, I shall withdraw the point of order so as to avoid delay.

So (no further count being demanded) the Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY DURKEE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments. These I will say simply change the dates fixed in the original bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What is the character of this bill?

Mr. WHEELER. It is simply granting a discharge to a man under his proper name.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments will be read.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the bill will be reported to the House as amended by the Senate.

The bill was read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. WHEELER. I can state the facts of this bill in a moment. Henry Durkee enlisted in the Army under the name of "Grant," that being the name of his step-father with whom he lived. He simply asks now to have a discharge, to which he is entitled, made out in his own proper name, the name under which he lives and holds office and is known as a good citizen. It appears that he enlisted when a mere boy and having been reared by a step-father he had always been known up to the time of enlistment by the name of Grant. After the war, and after he became of age, he assumed his rightful name, Henry Durkee, and he wishes to have the records of the War Department show that the Henry Durkee who is now an honorable citizen is the same person who served during the war as a private in the Second and the Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers under the name of Henry Grant. The Senate amendments are simply changes of dates. I hope that the House will concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion to concur was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

A bill (S. 175) for a public building at Monroe, La.;

A bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery;

A bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre; and

A bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods.

SETTLERS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. SOWDEN, and Mr. LAIRD.

JAMES W. KINGON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military services of James W. Kingon with amendments by the Senate, a request for a committee of conference, and the announcement by the Senate that it had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The amendments were read.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This bill seems to be the reversal of a judgment of a court-martial. The House and Senate disagree. We should have at least some explanation as to the difference between the two Houses.

Mr. WHEELER. I will endeavor in a few words to give the explanation requested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER]. The bill which passed the House was framed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which committee the petition of Mr. Kingon was referred by the House of Representatives. The petition was supported by affidavits and other proof, all tending to sustain the proposition that the petitioner had been wronged, and this was abundantly confirmed by the report made upon the case by the War Department. The transcript of the proceedings of the court-martial showed that the trial was illegally conducted, and that the verdict of the court was not sustained by the proof. The affidavits of reputable citizens, who had been Kingon's comrades, showed that in violation of the Constitution of the United States the court undertook to try and did try the accused in his absence.

The effect of the bill which passed the House was to set aside these illegal proceedings, which were simply a parody upon justice. The effect of the bill, as amended by the Senate, is to allow the proceedings of the court to stand, but to relieve Kingon from all the penalties inflicted by the court except the stigma which inevitably follows a conviction by any lawfully constituted court. We think that this stigma, thus improperly and illegally cast upon this soldier, should be removed. Sergeant Kingon entered the service when the war commenced, served with distinction, and re-enlisted as a veteran after three years' service, serving altogether for four years and two months. I feel convinced the Senate conferees will agree to a bill which removes an unjust stain from a man who was a good soldier for more than four years, and who has always been a good citizen.

Mr. MILLS. I think this is a very bad character of legislation, for Congress to review decisions of courts in the Army. There can be no proper discipline if we allow every man who is punished for misconduct to appeal to Congress. I do not think Congress should pass such a bill as this.

Mr. STEELE. That was my argument on the Fitz John Porter case.

Mr. WHEELER. The affidavits show that the accused was never before the court, and that the evidence adduced against him did not sustain the charges. He was tried, not being present, in violation of the Constitution, and the charge ought to be removed.

I fully concur with my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that Congress ought never to set aside the findings and verdict of a court-martial where the proceedings are conducted according to law and the finding is sustained by the evidence. But I think my friend will agree with me that it will improve the discipline of the Army to rebuke, censure, and reverse unwarranted and illegal verdicts.

My investigations have shown me that there are cases of this character, and it seems that President Cleveland has made the same discovery, as in his first message to Congress he uses these words:

If some of the proceedings of courts-martial which I have had occasion to examine present the ideas of justice which generally prevail in these tribunals, I am satisfied they should be much reformed if the honor and honesty of the Army and Navy are by their instrumentality to be vindicated and protected.

My friend will always find me an advocate of discipline in the Army, and will never find me advocating anything that can impair the efficiency of the service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in, and the House agreed to the request for a committee of conference.

EULOGIES ON DECEASED MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress on the late Abraham S. Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, and William H. Cole, with amendments by the Senate and a request for a conference.

The amendments which provided for the printing also of eulogies delivered on the late Senator Pike, of New Hampshire, were read.

Mr. VIELE. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments.

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, with amendments by the Senate and a request for a conference, the Senate having appointed Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. PUGH as managers of the conference on its part.

The amendments were read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request for a conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. The importance of this bill is well known. It would seem to be a measure of so much importance as to justify a conference, notwithstanding that there is one exceedingly objectionable feature in it. With the understanding that that feature increasing the salaries of district judges will not be yielded by the conferees on the part of the House, I, for one, do not object to the conference.

Mr. STRAIT. I object. I think the amendments should go to the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will let the amendments go to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota declines to withdraw his objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules so that the House may non-concur in the amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Does the gentleman from Minnesota withdraw his objection?

Mr. STRAIT. I do not.

The bill and Senate amendments were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ALFRED HEDBERG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg; which bill was returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to a conference.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to have the amendments read.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as the managers of the conference on the part of the House, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ANDERSON, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. NEGLEY.

JOHN A. LONDON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London, which bill was returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur and accede to the request for a conference.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ELIZABETH AND MARY GLASSBRENER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10093) for the relief of Elizabeth Glassbrener and Mary Glassbrener, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments were read.

Mr. MATSON. The effect of the amendment is to give to the two parties named one pension instead of giving a pension to each.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 117) to authorize the use of hot water off the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that joint resolution be considered now.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Let us hear it read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is being read only for information.

The SPEAKER. That is all.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman whether there is any provision there for the renewal of leases at the Hot Springs?

Mr. ROGERS. None whatever.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us have a brief explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. Ten years ago Secretary Schurz decided that the bath-houses off the reservation might have hot water, and from that time until now they have enjoyed that privilege, but recently the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States decided that the law did not authorize the continuance of the privilege to the bath-houses off the reservation, and the Secretary of the Interior is now in doubt as to whether he ought to continue it, or, when Congress adjourns, cut it off.

This joint resolution allows the water to be continued only to bath-houses now in existence off the reservation until Congress shall take some permanent action, and the matter is left entirely subject to any legislation that may hereafter be enacted by Congress. These bath-houses pay for the water, and of course it is a source of revenue to the Government, and does not affect in any way the status of the property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2965) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMES. I wish to ask whether it is not in order to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HOLMES. Or to move to suspend the rules and consider the bill at the present time?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman may ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

Mr. MORRISON. I object. We have not time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PARKER. I object.

The bill having been read twice was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

VALIDATION OF LAWS OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3349) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, a bill to accomplish this same result is now on the Calendar, having been reported from the House Committee on Territories, and I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement in connection with this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, the passage of this measure is of most vital importance to the Territory of Washington. By virtue of its provisions thirty-five acts of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory are validated. Section 1924 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requires that every act of the Legislative Assembly shall contain in its title a specific statement of the object of the act. The supreme court of that Territory in the early part of last month decided that where the title of an act simply stated that it was, for instance, "An act to amend section 140 or 150 of the code of Washington" the title did not comply with the requirement of section 1924. The effect of this decision is to invalidate every act of the Legislative Assembly of the sessions of 1883–'84 and 1885–'86; so that we in Washington Territory are left for the next year practically without any law.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this bill authorize woman suffrage in that Territory?

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] for asking me that question. Amongst the thirty-five acts to be validated is one conferring upon women the right of suffrage; and aside from the sentimental aspect of the woman-suffrage question, it is just as important that this law should be validated as any of the other laws, for during the last two years, or since the passage of the act in question, women have been sitting upon our juries, and have become part and parcel of our whole governmental system.

I do not desire to commit this House to woman suffrage. Speaking only for myself, I am in favor of extending to woman every right that man enjoys in this country. But I do not want to commit Congress or this House—and this bill has no such purpose—on the question of woman suffrage, for it is specifically provided that Congress may at any time invalidate any or all of these acts. This bill simply validates the acts in question so far as the defect to which I have called attention is concerned. I submit that the House, in view of the vital importance of this question, ought to allow this bill to go through.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. SYMES. I hope the gentleman will not object. To refuse to pass this bill will be a great injustice to that Territory.

Mr. DANIEL. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. OATES. I renew the objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Bills of the following titles were taken up, laid before the House, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 3330) for the erection of a national memorial bridge over the Potomac from Washington to Arlington; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 3354) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.; to the Committee on Commerce.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the Senate of the United States:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 2, 1887.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senate will be granted, and this bill will be returned.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUTTON, for this day.

To Mr. COMSTOCK, for the remainder of the session after 4 o'clock today.

To Mr. MARTIN, for the remainder of the session, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print remarks in the RECORD was granted as follows:

To Mr. DIBBLE, on the joint resolution (H. Res. 61) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States creating and defining the office of Second Vice-President of the United States.

To Mr. FREDERICK, on the appropriation for the extermination of pleuro-pneumonia.

To Mr. HAMMOND, on the bill (H. R. 7219) to amend sections 4132 and 2513 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the purchase of foreign-built ships by citizens of the United States and to permit the same to be registered as vessels of the United States, and to admit certain materials to be used in the construction of vessels free of duty.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave to withdraw papers without leaving copies was granted in the following cases, there having been no adverse report:

To Mr. JACKSON, in the cases of Mary Thorn (H. R. 2199), George H. Rider (H. R. 2201), W. P. Withrow (H. R. 6888), William Straub (H. R. 6236).

To Mr. ROMEIS, in the case of Mrs. Eliza Whiteaker (papers now in the Committee on War Claims).

To Mr. DAVIS, in the case of Charles Harding, applying for increase of pension.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 4476) for the relief of Alexander Worrall;

A bill (H. R. 6663) for the relief of Thomas P. Westmoreland;

A bill (H. R. 8593) for the repair and preservation of the road heretofore constructed by the Government leading from Vicksburg to the national cemetery adjacent thereto; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 130) to distribute copies of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PUGH, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison;

A bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands;

A bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10991) to quiet title to certain land in the city of Washington, D. C.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. CURTIN, it was ordered that the report of the special committee appointed to investigate labor troubles in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, Texas, and Illinois, and testimony taken by the committee, necessarily made part of the report, should be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print remarks in the RECORD was granted as follows:

To Mr. GROSVENOR, on the Mexican pension appropriation bill.

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, on the revenue laws.

VETO MESSAGE—THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I am directed to report back the veto message of the President on the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, and to recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee will be read.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, and the message of the President stating his objections thereto, have considered the same, and respectfully submit the following:

As is stated by the President, this bill proposes to remove the limitation fixed by the law of 1879, prescribing the date prior to which an application for pension must be filed in order to entitle the claimant to draw the pension allowed from the time of his discharge from the service. Neither in the original report of this committee nor in the message of the President is attention directly called to the most important fact that the statute alluded to contained a clause which expressly exempted from the limitation contained therein "insane persons and children under sixteen years of age." This provision was duly considered by the committee, and formed the basis of favorable action, and it may be considered an unfortunate oversight that this vital point in the case was not as fully and clearly stated in the report as it should have been.

The vital question is whether the mental condition of claimant was such during the years of 1879 and 1880 as to fairly and equitably entitle him to the benefit of the exemption in favor of "insane persons." The proof of his mental condition from a date prior to the passage of the arrears act down to some months after the limitation expired is absolutely conclusive. There is not a shadow of a doubt in regard to it. The list of physicians who attended him during the period in question, and who certify to his complete prostration, contains the names of some of the most distinguished members of the profession in Washington.

Drs. Fry and Johnson, in their joint affidavit, attached to applicant's memorial to Congress, dated December 27, 1881, say:

"He could see and converse with no one but the members of his own family and his physicians, and even that intercourse was of the simplest and most limited character. He could not read or hear read a single line or put forth the slightest mental effort without producing most distressing symptoms. He was so weak that he could not grasp a pen, lift a book, or feed himself."

And in their subsequent affidavit of June 7, 1882, they say:

"That his disease has been the severest case of nervous exhaustion which has ever come under their observation.

"That from March 3, 1879, and for many months previous thereto, down to November, 1880, he was absolutely disqualified, both mentally and physically, from attending to the business of applying for a pension, or any other business, by reason of the intensity of his symptons, and that there were no intervals, however short, during that period when he could have safely undertaken the work.

"That the effort he made in applying at so early a date has seriously retarded his recovery."

These statements are fully corroborated by the affidavits of such eminent specialists as Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and Dr. A. F. A. King.

It is also shown by certified transcript of record on file with the papers in this case that he was, by decree of the supreme court of the District, removed from his office as trustee under a certain deed of trust on the ground that he was "totally unable to perform his duties as trustee under said deed of trust, or to attend to any business." This decree was made in September, 1879.

There are also affidavits from notaries public of this District certifying that in 1879 and in 1880 they called at the applicant's residence, seeking to obtain his signature and acknowledgment to various deeds. These were formal acts on his part, but it was of great importance to the parties interested that the signatures and acknowledgments should be obtained. But none of the notaries were allowed even to enter the applicant's room, because of his critical condition.

That his then and his present condition are the result of disease contracted in the Army has been officially decided by the Pension Office, which diagnosed his case as "disease of the brain and spinal cord from chronic diarrhea and malarial poisoning," and granted him a pension therefor as soon as he was able to make proper application.

The case briefly summarized is this: In the summer of 1878 Hopkins was suddenly stricken down upon the street with nervous exhaustion (neurasthenia) of the severest character. He lost the use of both his mental and physical powers for several years, and has been confined to his bed ever since.

The disease is not "insanity" within the strict technical definition of that term, but the incompetency is absolute and continuous. It is conceded to be the result of service in the Army. With the very first return of mental strength he applied for a pension, which was granted him for "disease of the brain and spinal cord." While laboring under this disability Congress passed the arrears of pension act of March 3, 1879, which contained a limitation providing that all applications under it must be filed prior to July 1, 1880; but "insane persons and children under sixteen years of age" are especially exempted from the limitation.

The application of the soldier was made four months after the limitation of the time expired. He was then so weak, mentally, that he could neither read, write, nor be read to, and so weak, physically, that he could not feed himself nor make any voluntary effort whatever to attend to his own wants. His physicians certify that his recovery was seriously retarded by the effort which he made in applying for the pension while he was still so feeble. As a result of his complete prostration and inability to avail himself of his rights, his pension only dated from the time when his application was actually filed, so that he received no allowance for the two years and more during which, owing to the extreme character of his illness, he was unable to take any steps toward securing a pension; and he also lost the increase of pension he would otherwise have been entitled to under the act of June 16, 1880.

This committee are of opinion that in such a case the soldier should not be debarred from a participation in the benefits intended to be conferred upon him by law, because the disease of the brain, from which he suffers, happens not to be aptly described by the term "insane," as used in the statute, although the disease does not in fact effectually deprive him of the use of both his mental and physical powers. Nor should the fact that the soldier's illness was of almost unexampled severity, instead of securing him greater consideration, be allowed to become the very means by which he is deprived of the benefit of laws enacted while thus laboring under disability, and which laws were intended for his benefit.

The President states in his veto message that—

"The beneficiary named in this bill had fifteen years after the accruing of his claim, and before it is alleged that he was incapacitated, within which he might have filed his application and entitled himself to the back pension now applied for."

As a fact, during two of the fifteen years indicated by the President this applicant was in the condition of total mental and physical collapse hereinbefore stated in this report. During the thirteen years between his discharge from the Army and his sudden and total breaking down he was engaged in the practice of his profession, self-reliant and self-supporting; and that he refused during that time to apply for the Government aid to which he was by law entitled, should be a matter of commendation rather than reproach.

There is also a manifest error in the statement of the President that—

"If this bill should become a law it would entitle the claimant to about $9,000 of back pension."

Even were this estimate correct, it should not be allowed to override the equities of this case. But it is unquestionably an erroneous computation, based upon the supposition that his present degree of total disability extends back to the time of his discharge. In fact, during thirteen years of that period he was disabled only in a slight degree, and could receive during that time only a small rating, to be fixed by the Pension Office under its rules. His condition of total helplessness was not reached until the summer of 1878, and then came very suddenly. A careful and painstaking computation shows a mistake in the President's estimates of between $5,000 and $6,000.

This committee, adhering to their former judgment as to the merits of this case, recommend that the bill do pass, the objections of the President notwithstanding.

Mr. HAYNES. I yield whatever time I may have to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a very few minutes I think I can justify my action in bringing up a question like this at this late period in the session. I think I can satisfy the House that the President of the United States in compiling this veto message has been misled, has made errors of fact; that he has been misinformed; and if I satisfy the House of those facts I trust I may have the benefit of the unbiased judgment of every member on this floor.

I can best argue this matter by a simple statement of the facts connected with the case. Mr. Thomas S. Hopkins, the beneficiary under this bill, was a soldier in the Union Army during the late war. After coming out of the service he spent thirteen years as a practicing lawyer in the city of Washington—not in good health, but still capable of earning his living, and unwilling to ask the assistance of the Government in his support.

Prior to March 3, 1879, he was suddenly stricken down by a cerebral disease, which has been proved at the Pension Office to have been the result of disabilities contracted by him during his service in the Army.

Shortly after he was reduced to the unfortunate condition which I shall by and by describe, the bill known as the arrears of pensions act became a law. That bill became a law on March 3, 1879, and the limitation expired on the 30th June, 1880. During that whole period this man was absolutely helpless. He was mentally and physically incapacitated from making an application, and this fact is established not merely by the testimony of reputable physicians in the city of Washington, like Dr. W. W. Johnston and H. D. Frye, but by the solemn adjudication of a court, which removed him from a position as trustee because he was utterly incapable of exercising the trust which devolved upon him.

Now the object of that arrears-of-pension act was to allow to every soldier the interval between the 3d of March, 1879, and June 30, 1880, to file his application in the office for pension; but out of that limitation of time was excepted certain persons: those who were entirely incapable of making application, the language used being "cases of insanity and children under sixteen years of age." The case of this applicant was not a technical case of insanity, but it was a case where the man, by the very injury for which he claims pension, was deprived of the ability, both physical and mental, to make the application. In other words, he never had his day in court.

That is the fundamental fact upon which the case turns. That fact, and that alone, covers the whole ground; and yet it will surprise the House when I say that it is the one fact, of all, of which there is no mention whatever in the President's veto message, showing conclusively that the facts of the case were by some error or misinformation on the part of somebody never brought to his cognizance.

There is another fact stated in this veto message of the President, and that fact has had undoubtedly great weight in his mind. He states that if this bill passes, this man will receive $9,000 as arrears of pension. Now that is obviously a mistake, because it proceeds upon the assumption that he will receive $70 a month from the original date of his disablity up to the present time, while the bill itself simply proposes that this man shall be rated according to the rules of the Pension Office, and those rules rate him year by year on the basis of his disability. And the case shows that for thirteen years this man was here in Washington, was a practicing lawyer who was able to earn and did earn his living. So that it is manifest the President was mistaken or misinformed by the documents before him, and was induced to veto the bill on a statement of fact which really had no foundation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that is the simple statement of the case, and the question is——

Mr. EDEN. What amount of pension does he receive now?

Mr. REED. He is now receiving pension at the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. HEARD. What will the arrears amount to?

Mr. REED. Probably two or three thousand dollars; but nobody can tell that until the Pension Office has rated the disability for which the pension is to be allowed.

Whatever he gets for arrears will be in accordance with law. The sole effect of this law is to remove the limitation of the statute, a limitation which ought to be removed, because this man has never had his day in court.

Now I will be glad to answer any question from any gentleman, otherwise I will ask the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine this question: Does not this bill have the effect of increasing the rate of pension from $50 a month to $72 a month?

Mr. REED. It has that effect.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is another feature of the bill.

Mr. REED. But I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, inasmuch as the matter surprised me somewhat, that is the necessary effect of the removal of the statute of limitations, because every case of arrears of pension, whether there was insanity or not, was considered to be as of June 16, 1880. For this reason, because the pension dated back to the time of the disability, and that disability occurring during the war, it necessarily took in that date of June 16. That answers the only objection which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] urged at the time this case was originally before the House. I was not able to state to him that fact then because I did not know it myself.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it not a fact that the effect of the bill is changed by the peculiar phraseology providing that the rating shall be as though the case had been adjudicated prior to June 16, 1880; that if the bill had read that the pension should be rated as though the application had been filed prior to 1st July, 1880, he would then have received only $50; but that as the bill provides that his pension shall be rated as though his case had been adjudicated prior to 1st July, 1880, that appearing on the face of the bill, will increase his pension?

Mr. REED. With the facts as we knew them when the bill was before the House, the gentleman from Kentucky would be right; but under the rulings of the Pension Office if the objectionable phraseology were not there the result would still be the same.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it not the fact that the law increasing the pension from $50 to $72 a month for total helplessness only applied to the cases on the pension-roll on the 1st of July, 1880, and, therefore, if the bill had provided that the pension should be rated as if the application had been filed prior to July, 1880, it would be now only $50; whereas it provides his rating should be as though the case had been adjudicated prior to July, 1880, which will make the rate $72?

Mr. REED. I think both phraseologies would do it under the rulings of the Pension Office. The other night when the case was before the House I would have answered unhesitatingly in the way suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky. But with a knowledge of the rulings of the Pension Department, I think even if the language in the bill were not there it would make no difference, because the office requires the pension in every case to which arrears of pension apply to date back to the disability; and that goes back to June 16.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is not this the fact, that the law increasing the rate of pension for total helplessness is only made applicable to those on the pension-roll July 1, 1880? Now does it not follow that if this bill provided for exemption from the limitation as to arrears and made the law applicable to this case as if it had been filed and not admitted the law in this case would not then be applicable to the bill? But inasmuch as it does exempt the case as though it had been admitted, it therefore increases the rate; and is it not further the fact, that the pension laws provide that cases re-rated by the examining board in the Pension Office and found to be that grade of total helplessness are not admitted to the rolls at $72 per month, though they be filed prior, but not adjudicated prior, to July 1, 1880? Therefore, that being a fact (to which the gentleman from Maine assents)——

Mr. REED. No; I do not assent.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, I undertake to say that that is the law.

Mr. MORRILL. I think you are mistaken. I think it is cases "found to be entitled"——

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, "found to be entitled;" that does not change the theory.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] will permit me I will suggest to him that the question he is asking me is not a question of law; it is a question of fact. I say I am informed that the rulings of the Pension Office require me to answer his question in the way I have answered it. Now I may be right or I may be wrong, but I am so informed and, as I have said, it is not a question of law, but a question of fact.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, I regard it as a question of law.

Mr. REED. Well, I state it as a matter of fact upon information which I regard as credible, and I have given the reason for it, and it seems to me that it is not only the ruling of the Pension Office, but a correct ruling, and, being such, all we have to do is to conform to it. Now, I trust the gentleman will permit a vote.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? On this question the Constitution requires that the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 95, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—153.

So, two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the bill was not passed.

Mr. WAIT. I move that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. DUNN objected, but before the reading was completed withdrew his objection.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. WHITING.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. BLAND with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. SWINBURNE.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana.

The following were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 153 and the nays 95. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the noes have it, and the bill is not passed.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I made objection to concurring in the Senate amendments to the bill for the payment of claims filed under the act approved July 4, 1864. I desire now to withdraw my objection so as to let the amendments of the Senate be concurred in. They are informal or immaterial, except in regard to the issuing of the warrants directly to the claimants, and I am willing to withdraw my objection to the Senate amendment striking out that provision, for the reason that my attention has been called to an order issued by the Treasury Department and I have ascertained that it will apply to these cases. On the 14th of October last the Department issued the following circular:

CIRCULAR.—REGULATIONS GOVERNING ATTORNEYS AND AGENTS PRACTISING BEFORE THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

[1886, Department No. 142, Division of W., E., and A.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., October 14, 1886.

In view of the embarrassment to the public service growing out of the many contests which the Department is called upon to decide between different attorneys claiming recognition in the same case, and contests between claimants and their attorneys with reference to the proper measure of compensation to be allowed the latter, Rule IV of the regulations governing attorneys and agents practising before the Treasury Department, issued February 6, 1886, is hereby amended so as to read as follows, the same to take effect on and after December 1, 1886:

"The head of any bureau may require an attorney or agent to present satisfactory evidence that the claimant has authorized him to prosecute the claim, but in all cases of the allowance of a claim the draft or check for the payment of the same will be delivered to the claimant in person, or sent to him by mail at his actual post-office address."

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

To make the matter certain, I addressed a letter this morning to the Department, inquiring whether this circular would apply to claims under the 4th of July act, and in response to that letter I have just received the following telegram from Mr. Fairchild, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury:

Hon. W. M. SPRINGER:

Department circular of October 14, 1886, in relation to the delivery of Treasury drafts or checks in payment of claims to the claimant in person, or to be sent him by mail, is still in force, and will apply to claims under act of July 4, 1864, and to claims under appropriations made during the present session in pursuance of said act.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

The action of the Department having secured all that I desired to secure by these provisions in the original bill, I am willing to withdraw my objection to the Senate amendments. Had not the Department taken this position, I should have insisted upon retaining the provision in the bill which the Senate has stricken out. But in view of the circular and telegram from the Treasury Department, which have been read, there can be no doubt that claimants will be protected, as provided therein. The Department is entitled to the thanks of the country for the firm and just position it has taken in this matter. In view of all the facts, I regard the Department's circular as virtually incorporated in the bill, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is asked for, which will prevent the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I only asked for the regular order to take the gentleman from Illinois off the floor. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee on War Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and the House will concur in the amendments of the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the conference report made last evening upon the bill to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following, namely:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

"First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war and commonly known as 'war claims,' or to hear and determine other claims, which have heretofore been rejected, or reported on adversely, by any court, department, or commissioner authorized to hear and determine the same.

"Second. All set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States against any claimant against the Government in said court: Provided, That no suit against the Government of the United States shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

"SEC. 2. That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have such concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds $1,000 and does not exceed $10,000. All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without a jury.

"SEC. 3. That whenever any person shall present his petition to the Court of Claims alleging that he is or has been indebted to the United States as an officer or agent thereof, or by virtue of any contract therewith, or that he is the guarantor, or surety, or personal representative of any officer, or agent, or contractor so indebted, or that he, or the person for whom he is such surety, guarantor, or personal representative, has held any office or agency under the United States, or entered into any contract therewith, under which it may be or has been claimed that an indebtedness to the United States has arisen and exists, and that he or the person he represents has applied to the proper Department of the Government requesting that the account of such office, agency, or indebtedness may be adjusted and settled, and that three years have elapsed from the date of such application and said account still remains unsettled and unadjusted, and that no suit upon the same has been brought by the United States, said court shall, due notice first being given to the head of said Department and to the Attorney-General of the United States, proceed to hear the parties and to ascertain the amount, if any, due the United States on said account. The Attorney-General shall represent the United States at the hearing of said cause. The court may postpone the same from time to time whenever justice shall require. The judgment of said court or of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which an appeal shall lie, as in other cases, as to the amount due, shall be binding and conclusive upon the parties. The payment of such amount so found due by the court shall discharge such obligation. An action shall accrue to the United States against such principal, or surety, or representative to recover the amount so found due, which may be brought at any time within three years after the final judgment of said court. Unless suit shall be brought within said time, such claim and the claim on the original indebtedness shall be forever barred.

"SEC. 4. That the jurisdiction of the respective courts of the United States proceeding under this act, including the right of exception and appeal, shall be governed by the law now in force, in so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and the course of procedure shall be in accordance with the established rules of said respective courts, and of such additions and modifications thereof as said courts may adopt.

"SEC. 5. That the plaintiff in any suit brought under the provisions of the second section of this act shall file a petition, duly verified, with the clerk of the respective court having jurisdiction of the case, and in the district where the plaintiff resides. Such petition shall set forth the full name and residence of the plaintiff, the nature of his claim, and a succinct statement of the facts upon which the claim is based, the money or other thing claimed, or the damages sought to be recovered, and praying the court for a judgment or decree upon the facts and law.

"SEC. 6. That the plaintiff shall cause a copy of his petition filed under the preceding section to be served upon the district attorney of the United States in the district wherein suit is brought, and shall mail a copy of the same, by registered letter, to the Attorney-General of the United States, and shall thereupon cause to be filed with the clerk of the court wherein suit is instituted an affidavit of such service and the mailing of such letter. It shall be the duty of the district attorney upon whom service of petition is made as aforesaid to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of petition upon him, unless the time should be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counter-claim, set-off, claim for damages, or other demand or defense whatsoever of the Government in the premises: Provided, That should the district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the plaintiff shall not have judgment or decree for his claim, or any part thereof, unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the court.

"SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the court to cause a written opinion to be filed in the cause, setting forth the specific findings by the court of the facts therein and the conclusions of the court upon all questions of law involved in the case, and to render judgment thereon. If the suit be in equity or admiralty, the court shall proceed with the same according to the rules of such courts.

"SEC. 8. That in the trial of any suit brought under any of the provisions of this act, no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

"Section 1079 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed. The provisions of section 1080 of the Revised Statutes shall apply to cases under this act.

"SEC. 9. That the plaintiff or the United States, in any suit brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are now reserved in the statutes of the United States in that behalf made, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The modes of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, and as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing appeals and writs of error in like causes.

"SEC. 10. That when the findings of fact and the law applicable thereto have been filed in any case as provided in section 6 of this act, and the judgment or decree is adverse to the Government, it shall be the duty of the district attorney to transmit to the Attorney-General of the United States certified copies of all the papers filed in the cause, with a transcript of the testimony taken, the written findings of the court, and his written opinion as to the same; whereupon the Attorney-General shall determine and direct whether an appeal or writ of error shall be taken or not; and when so directed the district attorney shall cause an appeal or writ of error to be perfected in accordance with the terms of the statutes and rules of practice governing the same: Provided, That no appeal or writ of error shall be allowed after six months from the judgment or decree in such suit. From the date of such final judgment or decree interest shall be computed thereon, at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, until the time when an appropriation is made for the payment of the judgment or decree.

"SEC. 11. That the Attorney-General shall report to Congress, and at the beginning of each session of Congress, the suits under this act in which a final judgment or decree has been rendered, giving the date of each, with a statement of the costs taxed in each case.

"SEC. 12. That when any claim or matter may be pending in any of the Executive Departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such Department, with the consent of the claimant, may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said Court of Claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall report its findings to the Department by which it was transmitted.

"SEC. 13. That in every case which shall come before the Court of Claims or is now pending therein under the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' approved March 3, 1883, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon under existing laws or under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and report its proceedings therein to either House of Congress or to the Department by which the same was referred to said court.

"SEC. 14. That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the Court of Claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled 'An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed, or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.

"SEC. 15. If the Government of the United States shall put in issue the right of the plaintiff to recover, the court may, in its discretion, allow costs to the prevailing party from the time of joining such issue. Such costs, however, shall include only what is actually incurred for witnesses and for summoning the same and fees paid to the clerk of the court.

"SEC. 16. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. R. TUCKER,
GEORGE E. SENEY,
A. X. PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. TUCKER (before the reading of the report was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I understand the Clerk is reading the bill which is referred to in the report.

The SPEAKER. It is made a part of the report.

Mr. TUCKER. It is; but perhaps for the present it will be sufficient to read the explanatory statement of the House conferees, showing the changes which have been made from the original bill, and the reasons therefor.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the further reading of the report will be omitted for the present. If any gentleman, while the report is pending, desires the reading it must be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not object to dispensing with the reading if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] will clearly explain the differences between the proposition now recommended and the original bill.

The SPEAKER. This is not the proper time to make any explanation. The statement accompanying the conference report has not yet been read. As the Chair understands, the reading of the conference report is waived for the present. The Clerk will read the explanatory statement:

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT OF HOUSE CONFEREES—H. R. 6974.

The conferees on the part of the House present a statement of the effect of the substitute proposed by the committee of conference of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes on the bill H. R. 6974.

The first section as passed by the House is modified in the following respects:

1. Actions for torts are excluded.

2. By proviso, war claims and claims adjudicated by any court, department, or commission are excluded.

The second section is amended so as to try the cases by the court without a jury. It will still be in the power of the court to direct issues out of chancery when it is deemed proper.

The eighth section is modified so as to apply section 1080 to cases under this act instead of repealing it. That section gives power to the court, when the claimant refuses to testify when called upon to do so, to postpone the trial of his case until he shall do so by complying with the order of the court.

The tenth section is amended by giving the claimant 4 per cent. per annum from date of payment. The words "per annum" were omitted by inadvertence in the House bill.

The twelfth section of House bill is stricken out. The conferees thought it best not to allow an alien to sue on the basis of treaty or immaterial obligations at the will of the Secretary of State, and that the political power of the Government should be consulted.

The thirteenth section of the House bill, the twelfth of the proposed substitute, applies to all Departments and takes away the power of the Court of Claims to render judgment in cases to be referred to that court by one of the Departments, and gives it power only to send its findings of the facts and its conclusions of law to the Department.

The fourteenth section of the House bill, the thirteenth of the proposed substitute, gives power to the Court of Claims in cases referred to it under the "Bowman act," or now pending therein, to render judgment, when, under this act, the court is authorized to do so. The amendment, "or is now pending thereon," makes a pending case proper for the operation of this act, though the six years' limitation prescribed by it would otherwise apply.

The fourteenth section of this substitute is a new one, and gives power to either House of Congress to send any bill, except for pension, for a claim legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty, to the Court of Claims under the same procedure as prescribed by the Bowman act, with power to report the facts as to amount and validity of the claim, and as to laches, limitation in respect thereto, and whether the limitation should be removed. This does not authorize judgment in such cases.

Section 15 of the substitute changes section 16 of the House bill, giving discretion to the court to allow costs to the prevailing party where the Government contests it by making an issue, and limits costs to those incurred for summoning and attendance of witnesses and fees to the clerk of court.

Section 3 of the substitute is a new one. It gives to guarantors, sureties, and personal representatives the right to speed the adjustment by the Government of amounts claimed by it against a dead debtor or a principal debtor in any case of official obligation, agency, or other indebtedness. It gives the right to any such surety, guarantor, or personal representative, when three years have elapsed after application for settlement to the head of a Department, to litigate the liability and have it determined in the Court of Claims. Cases of loss of evidence and other danger of injustice to parties so situated have often occurred, and this section would avoid these perils to such parties without injustice to the Government.

It is proper to add that many propositions have been made from time to time during the progress of this bill through committee and the two Houses to bring within its provisions special classes of claims. The sense of the conferees of the House, with the concurrence of those of the Senate, was to pass this bill, whose general provisions will be salutary in doing justice to the claimants and the Government and in relief of Congress without encumbering it with such special cases. Let Congress under this enlarged jurisdiction hereby conferred hereafter determine whether such special cases should be brought within this jurisdiction upon their peculiar merits.

Respectfully,

J. R. TUCKER.
GEORGE E. SENEY.
A. X. PARKER.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is an unusually important bill, and we ought to have the opportunity fully to understand it.

Mr. TUCKER. I will ask the previous question, and then we will have thirty minutes for debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not in order to ask for the reading of the two sections as amended and the section which has been added?

The SPEAKER. That can be done in debate after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. But have I not the right to ask for the reading?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the right to ask for the reading of all that is included in the conference report. If he desires to have read any other paper than upon which the House is called to vote, and it is objected to, the question must be submitted to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is impossible to understand the changes which are proposed by this conference report without having them read in connection with the text.

Mr. TUCKER. I will say to my friend from Indiana that by an oral statement I can make what amendments are proposed clear to gentlemen without the necessity of having the whole bill read through.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the gentleman demand the previous question, and he can do that afterward.

Mr. TUCKER. I have already demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the report and fifteen minutes in opposition.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was originally passed by the House with great unanimity——

Mr. ROGERS. This bill is of too much importance not to understand it, and while the gentleman is making his explanation we should have order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appeals to gentlemen on the floor, in the interest of the public business, to take their seats and stop conversation. The Sergeant-at-Arms will request gentlemen to take their seats. This is an important bill, and gentlemen ought to be permitted to hear what is said.

Mr. TUCKER. As I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, this bill as it originally passed the House, on the 13th of January last, had been very carefully prepared by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, and was unanimously reported to the House by that committee. It is designed so to extend the jurisdiction of the judiciary of the United States to more claims than are now within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the Court of Claims act. And the purpose was to extend it to all claims in law, or equity, or admiralty, upon contracts express or implied, for damages liquidated or unliquidated, in every case in which, if the United States were suable as a party, suits could be brought in either one of these courts.

When the bill passed the House and went to the Senate the Senate, for convenience, struck out the whole bill of the House and inserted in lieu of it their own bill. But it is due to the House to say the insertion only operated a change in a few particulars in the bill passed by the House. And the conferees, imitating the same policy, have struck out the bill of the Senate and reported a substitute therefor which incorporates a large part of the House bill, and the Senate conferees agreed to it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Do the amendments of the Senate include claims for property taken by the Government of the United States?

Mr. TUCKER. During the war?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. Not a bit of it.

Now, let me go on. That was the language of the original act as it went to the Senate. The Senate doubted whether there should be full power given in case of tort against the United States and so they qualified it that a claim for pension and action of tort against the United States should not be within the provisions of the bill. The conferees on the part of the House, after full discussion, agreed to these two modifications of the original bill, and they are incorparated in the substitute we propose.

It was then proposed—in order to exclude the idea involved in the question of my friend from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON]—it was then proposed, although the original bill had intended to exclude war claims—and I will say we intended to exclude them because we knew there was a difference of opinion in this House as to the propriety of allowing those war claims to come before the courts—we wanted, and our whole purpose was, to leave off the Calendar of this House a large mass of private claims which were encumbering our business and preventing our discharging our duties to the great public interests of the country.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why not do justice at the same time?

Mr. TUCKER. It is impossible, as my friend from West Virginia knows, to do everything good in this world. If we can only do a part of the good and be saved from doing evil we ought to thank God and take courage. [Laughter.]

There was a proposition, I will explain to my friend, at one time in the course of this discussion to introduce claims for captured and abandoned property, for cotton claims, for swamp lands, for Indian claims, and we just said, do not load down a good bill with controverted questions, and defeat the whole. Therefore we have attempted in conference to present a clean bill as it went from the House, free from outside questions which would promote controversy and defeat the whole bill.

But there is a proviso which was presented by one of the House conferees in the conference that this jurisdiction should not extend to any matter called a war claim, or to any claim which was res adjudicata upon being heard and determined before any Department or any court or commission. So that we intended to say that where there was an adjudication of any of these claims, or where the claim was recognized as a war claim, it should not come before these courts.

Now, that explains the whole of the first section, except with reference to the one clause in regard to the statute of limitations, which, however, was in the original bill, and there is no change in the bill so far as it concerns the operation of that statute as applicable to any or all of these cases.

There was another question which was raised and considered, and that was as to whether this limitation of six years should apply to any claim now pending in the Court of Claims. We thought not; and in a subsequent amendment, which is noted among the reasons given in the report of the conference committee, it was provided that this should not apply, and the Court of Claims might act upon and pronounce judgment upon claims already pending in that court where under this act the power to render judgment was given.

Mr. EDEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia, does this bill affect in any manner the status of what are known as the French spoliation claims?

Mr. TUCKER. Not in the slightest degree; and for one very strong reason, which is, that the statute of limitations is six years and the French spoliation claims are nearly one hundred years old.

Now, in reference to the State demands for the swamp lands, it was a matter proposed in the original Senate amendment; but it was resisted, and I will say in all frankness to the House that I feel, in justice and fairness, we could not allow that to come in as a special matter, unless we allowed in all of these other matters which had the same right to demand admission as that. Why should that matter be permitted to come in and the Virginia claim for the loan of 1815 be excluded? My friend from Michigan would say exclude the Virginia claim under any circumstances.

Mr. CASWELL. Let me interrupt the gentleman to say that the subject of abandoned property, as I understand it, was not at all before the committee of conference.

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all.

Mr. CASWELL. Because it was not in either bill; but the subject of State claims for swamp lands was before the conference.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, unquestionably; but, as my friend will understand, when the whole matter was before us, whether we would accept the Senate substitute subject to the qualifications and conditions suggested, we might have said if you allow in this one class of claims, why you might just as well allow in the other.

My purpose was, as my friend is aware, to exclude war claims, cotton claims, and captured and abandoned property claims from this bill altogether.

Mr. CASWELL. Yes; but captured and abandoned property claims were not in either bill or in the substitute.

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly not.

Mr. CASWELL. And hence they were not before the committee of conference.

Mr. TUCKER. That is true. But we kept out the one which had been put upon the Senate amendment by the committee of conference, because we thought, or I thought, that it was unwise to put into this bill these claims, which were, say, thirty years old.

Mr. CASWELL. Why do you object to giving the States the right to bring suits for their claims any more than the citizens?

Mr. TUCKER. We do give to the States exactly the same right as that given to other people; that is, for all claims coming within the terms of the law, that is to say, within six years. But these claims were thirty years old, some of them, and if proper to put in a claim thirty years old on what ground could we exclude old Virginia's claim, which is sixty years old?

Mr. CASWELL. It has never been the policy to apply the statute of limitation upon the State of Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. It has been applied upon old Virginia's claim with a great deal of effect, however.

Mr. CASWELL. I hope that is not the grievance of my friend.

Mr. TUCKER. What we loaned for the defense of the country in 1815 has never yet been repaid, while your claim for swamp lands is to be paid with money the Government gave.

Mr. CASWELL. But because your claim has not been paid, is that any just reason for denying to other claimants the right to be paid?

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all. I think all should be paid. But in the preparation of a bill like this it was necessary to fix some limit, and in pursuance of that it was agreed by the conferees on both sides to recede from that Senate amendment and exclude from the bill those claims which have been in existence for the length of time I have mentioned.

Mr. HAMMOND. Are these claims that are left out of the bill put upon any worse ground by that omission than they were before the bill was passed?

Mr. TUCKER. Not a particle. We said, and I say now, that if any of these or other vested claims shall, in the opinion of Congress, be proper to be adjudicated by the terms of jurisdiction provided in this bill, that it is a proper subject for a future act of Congress extending the jurisdiction to cover such claims. But it was not deemed expedient to embarrass this bill in its effects by putting on it claims about which there would be any doubt.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to suggest that this bill excludes every private claim that ought to be settled.

Mr. TUCKER. Does my friend from Virginia mean that there are no private claims of people in this country besides war claims? I let the Committee on Claims and other committees of this House answer that question. Are there no other claims for indebtedness against the Government than war claims? The gentleman from West Virginia surely knows better than that.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are two thousand claims before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from West Virginia, do I understand you to exclude all actions based on torts?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Marine torts, such as in the case of the Tallapoosa?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; we agreed it was better not to let either in.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the Senate has receded from its amendments?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; and the conferees have agreed to this report as a substitute for both bills, embracing all the good features of both and excluding all that was objectionable to anybody.

There are one or two other provisions that the Senate proposed that we have incorporated in this substitute. One was of this nature. I suppose all gentlemen have seen cases of this kind before some of the committees. A man who is a surety on an official bond, or a guarantor, or who is a personal representative of a deceased obligator to the Government, says: "Nobody will sue me;" or, as the gentleman in Ireland said: "Nobody will tread on my coat tail." Meanwhile the principal obligator fails. The evidence of the extent of his liability is lost, and the Government sues the poor surety, or guarantor, or representative of the deceased obligator when the evidence is gone upon which he might have made his defense. We have seen cases of that kind, and we have seen men claiming that laches of the Government entitled them to relief. We had a case of that kind before us this year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the provision of the bill as it passed the House authorizing the circuit and district courts to enter final judgment against the Government is still preserved in the bill?

Mr. TUCKER. It is. In the case to which I was referring a moment ago we provide that the surety of the guarantor may go into the Court of Claims under the provisions incorporated by the Senate; that he may go into court, arraign the Government, and say "Now let this question be settled; all of us are here."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMILLIN). The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] give me a part of his time?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire a few minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may have five minutes more.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection, provided those five minutes do not come out of the time of the opposition.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman from Virginia will proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. MORRISON. I object unless the five minutes come out of the time allowed under the rule for debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 264) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 118) to print the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward Shakespeare concerning the nature, &c., of epidemic cholera; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, for a bill so far reaching in its effects and fraught with so much danger to the national Treasury, this has received less consideration in the House than any bill within my knowledge. This bill was passed in this House, I might say, without debate; for there were but a few words of explanation from the gentleman from Virginia when it first passed in this House. And now, to-day, the bill is proposed to be passed with only fifteen minutes debate pro and con.

I have no doubt the bill will be adopted because it is not understood, but having virtually received the approval of a majority of both Houses. If it was fully understood by a majority of this House I do not believe it could be enacted.

I find the principal objections of those who have in debate here opposed the bill complain it does not embrace so many classes of claimants as they think it should do. My objection is not on account of what is omitted from the bill, but on account of what is embraced in it. It revolutionizes the policy of the Government from its foundation to this day. The Government has never permitted itself to be made defendant in any district or circuit court in this country. If this bill should pass it will make the Government a defendant in nearly all cases where a private citizen could, under similar circumstances, if a party. Sir, this is contrary to the policy of every State in the Union, so far as my knowledge extends.

No State within my knowledge will permit itself to be sued in its own courts. It is not permitted in Illinois, it is not permitted in Indiana, or in any other State in the Union.

I have not time now to discuss in detail the features of this bill. I rise more for the purpose of entering my protest against its passage, for I believe, sir, that it will open wide the doors of the Treasury for an indefinite time in the future to many million dollars of claims in which there is no merit. It is said that the district attorney will guard the interests of the Government and see that no unjust judgments are obtained against it. We all know, sir, from our own experience, that what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and we all know, too, that when a suit is brought against the Government in any district the sympathies of the community will generally be with the claimant and against the Government, and the probability is that the district attorney's hands will be too full of other business to enable him to look up testimony to defend the Government properly.

Mr. TUCKER. Will my friend from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have but very little time.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman asked me a question when I had very little time. Does he mean to say that this Government has never allowed any claimant to bring suit against it?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This Government has never yet allowed itself to be made a defendant in any district or circuit court unless by a special act of Congress.

Mr. TUCKER. What about the Court of Claims?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Court of Claims has no final jurisdiction except in a limited class of cases; it has no jurisdiction to render final judgment except upon contract. We have at times given jurisdiction to investigate other claims, but its finding must come back for the final action of Congress.

Mr. TUCKER. The Court of Claims enters final judgment, but it can not enter execution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The power to enter final judgment is confined to a limited class of cases.

Mr. HAMMOND. It applies to all cases founded on statute or contract.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be diverted from the point which I have taken the floor to discuss. I want to call attention especially to the fact that this bill clothes every circuit and district court in the United States with power to enter final judgment against the Government of the United States. The great danger is that the bill puts a premium upon perjury, and places the money in the Treasury to some extent under the control of the courts. A man may present a claim, and every scintilla of the evidence may have been manufactured for the purpose of obtaining a judgment against the United States, yet the protection of the interests of the Government will depend almost entirely upon the vigilance, the energy, and the integrity of the district attorney. I say this is unwise legislation; it is dangerous legislation. This will do more in the future to deplete the Treasury than any law that has been passed since I have been a member of Congress.

Mr. RANNEY. If you can not trust the business to the courts where can you trust it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague is mistaken in regard to the jurisdiction now conferred upon the Court of Claims. That jurisdiction extends to all claims founded upon any law of Congress, upon any regulation of the Executive Departments, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, and to all claims which may be referred to that court by either House of Congress. By another provision it is required that suit must be brought within six years after the cause of action has accrued. This bill enlarges the general jurisdiction of the Court of Claims so as to include cases arising in equity and in admiralty. It also extends the provisions of the law so that in certain cases suit can be brought in the district where the parties reside instead of in the Court of Claims. Now, what I object to is that the bill does not give larger jurisdiction to the court to hear and determine the facts in other cases than those in which judgment can be rendered. There is a provision which has been cited by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], authorizing either House of Congress to send any case to the Court of Claims to have the facts judicially ascertained.

I would prefer that it should be provided that Congress should not consider any claim involving the questions of fact until the Court of Claims has first ascertained the facts.

Mr. HAMMOND. The difficulty about that was that we did not think we could repeal the constitutional right of petition.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am glad the gentleman has referred to the Constitution and to the right of petition. The bill which I reported required that in all cases the petition should be brought here and that claims should not be considered except upon petition. The petitions were to go into the petition-box and be referred to the Court of Claims; just as we refer them to the committees of this House. We have as much right to refer a claim to the Court of Claims as we have to refer it to the Judiciary Committee of this House, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will not say that it is depriving a claimant of his constitutional right to send him to that committee, or to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or to the Committee on Claims.

It is the right of this House to say to any claimant that we will consider his case only when he has established the facts in a judicial manner before a tribunal where testimony can be heard and witnesses cross-examined. My friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] says that this bill will relieve the Calendar of the House of a large portion of its business. I wish to say to the gentleman that as the Calendar is now constituted, this bill will not relieve it of 5 per cent. of its business. There are fifteen thousand bills pending in Congress to-day, most of them private, and not five hundred of them will be taken off the Calendar by this bill.

So that this bill, while it does some good, does not reach the evil which has been confronting Congress for the last twelve years—a Calendar overburdened with private claims, and the two Houses having no time to consider them.

Mr. RANNEY. This measure cuts down that Calendar pretty well.

Mr. SPRINGER. About 1 per cent.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not concur in the idea expressed by some gentlemen that this bill is going to make a raid upon the Treasury. In fact, if the bill be carefully studied, it will be found that it amounts to nothing. The great desire of the country has been to get a certain class of claims away from Congress and before the Court of Claims. This bill excludes from consideration by the court almost every claim the judicial hearing of which is not already provided for by law. It excludes specially claims for bounties and pensions. Why should a bill be passed here in Congress to pay a claim for cutting timber in the service of the Government, while we refuse to make similar provision for a man who furnished his cattle for the use of the Government? That is just what this bill does. In my own State and my own district there are hundreds of people who furnished cattle, who furnished fodder, who furnished corn, who furnished subsistence in various forms, to assist in carrying on the war. They can not get their claims recognized here in Congress, and this bill excludes every one of them from a hearing before a court.

There is nothing in this bill. It is a mere "tub to the whale." The gentleman who prepared this bill purporting to provide for private claims ought to have the courage to take up all these questions. Under this bill one whole section of the country is absolutely excluded; and though a man in the South during the war may have been, under extraordinary and adverse circumstances, loyal to the Government, he cannot under this bill go into court to prosecute his claim and obtain redress for his losses.

If we are to have a bill of this character, let us have a bill that gives to all sections equal justice. Let us have a bill that will provide compensation for one class of property as well as for another. Let us not play here with legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield, according to promise, one minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN].

Mr. GILFILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion to give some attention to the present provisions of our statutes governing the Court of Claims as well as the decisions of the courts thereunder. Whatever may be the proper construction of this bill—and there seems to be a great deal of controversy among members participating in this discussion as to what it means—this fact is manifest, that its provisions embrace matters of too much importance and are fraught with too much danger to the Government, and its possible consequences are of too important and serious a character to permit us to properly and carefully consider and dispose of the bill at this late day in the session. I hope, therefore, the House will vote to reject this report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield further. I think the House has seldom had occasion to consider a bill of the importance of the one now pending. Not only are its provisions wide-reaching, but it is a departure from what has been the settled policy of our Government. For half a century the Government did not permit itself to be sued at all. Then it provided a court for the single purpose of ascertaining facts connected with claims against the Government. That law remained in force until within the last twenty-six years. Then, and not till then, it was thought prudent that the court for the ascertainment of the facts in cases against the Government located at the capital should have conferred upon it a wider and more final jurisdiction. Until within a few years no one suggested even that greater facilities should be granted to claimants. I am not aware that any State of the Union authorizes itself to be sued.

Mr. TUCKER. Virginia does; and I would say that every Commonwealth which is awake——

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must excuse me; I can not yield.

Mr. RANNEY. Every well-regulated government does it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ours is a "well-regulated government," and I am not ashamed of it, if my friend from Massachusetts is. No member except the members of the Judiciary Committee have even examined or had an opportunity to examine it except at this moment.

On examining this bill I find it has been deemed necessary, as one of the consequences of reference of demands against the Government to the Federal courts in the different States, to incorporate in the bill this extraordinary provision:

Provided, That should the district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the plaintiff shall not have judgment or decree for his claim or any part thereof unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the court.

This bill upon its face naturally mistrusts the various district attorneys who alone will stand between the Government and the claimants. Experience here at the capital has demonstrated how feeble this barrier will be between dishonest claims and the Treasury. The Government is left completely at the mercy of those officers. By this measure you throw open, in my judgment, the widest door for an improper and unjust invasion of your Treasury that has yet been devised.

This measure to confer the jurisdiction on the Federal courts in the several States in the manner proposed is a new measure. So far as I know it was only broached within the last year.

This measure being now formulated for the first time, I submit that its consideration should go over until Congress, at some future time, may have better opportunity for understanding the provisions of the proposed measure. I appeal to the House not to permit a bill of this importance to go through without opportunity for proper consideration. The measure has not been, up to this time, the subject of deliberation and debate which it demands more than any other class of legislation that ever came into this Hall.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman says there is a great difference of opinion as to the meaning and effect of the bill, but I desire to say that the difference of opinion to which he refers is not between members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has now three minutes remaining.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman allow me to say in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN]——

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. I believe my time is exhausted?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for a vote.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent to be heard for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill ought to pass. It is criticised by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] because it does not take in particular claims. It is criticised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] because it takes in all the claims against the Government. The fact is that it is going to relieve the Congress of the embarrassment of receiving claim after claim and give the people of the United States what every civilized nation of the world has already done—the right to go into the courts to seek redress against the Government for their grievances. That is all there is of it, and the bill ought to pass.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that we will have the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is a waste of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 33.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum, and I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 187, nays 55, not voting 77; as follows:

So the conference report was adopted.

During the roll-call, on motion of Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. COOPER, until further notice.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. EVANS, on this vote.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. EVANS, for this day.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TUCKER. In view of the importance of the question and the anxiety of some gentlemen for opportunity to express their views in the RECORD, I ask, by unanimous consent, gentlemen may have leave to print remarks in the RECORD on this report.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the House:

Mr. WHEELER, Mr. ERMENTROUT, and Mr. CUTCHEON on the bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley.

Mr. WHEELER, Mr. VIELE, and Mr. NEGLEY on the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor.

Mr. WHEELER, Mr. WOLFORD, and Mr. STEELE on the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London.

Mr. WHEELER, Mr. DARGAN, and Mr. LAIRD on the bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4476) for the relief of Alexander Worrall;

A bill (H. R. 6663) for the relief of Thomas P. Westmoreland;

A bill (H. R. 8593) for the repair and preservation of the road, heretofore constructed by the Government, leading from Vicksburg to the national cemetery adjacent thereto;

A bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10093) for the relief of Elizabeth Glassbrener and Mary Glassbrener.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I rise to move a suspension of the rules——

Mr. SWOPE. I submit the following privileged report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to bill of the Senate 2159, granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to said bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the word "twelve" the word "twenty;" and that the House agree to the same.

JOHN A. SWOPE,
W. H. NEECE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.
PHILETUS SAWYER,
J. F. WILSON,
O. H. PLATT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 2159 report that this bill placed Louisa Ambler, army nurse, on the pension-roll at $25 per month. The House reduced this amount to $12, and the committee of conference agreed on $20 per month. The services of this nurse appear to have been peculiarly valuable, and in addition she paid a considerable amount of her own money for the relief of sick soldiers. For these and other reasons the House committee agreed that the pension should be placed at the amount specified.

Mr. SWOPE demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. SWOPE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee;

A bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail-messengers in the postal service;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 130) to distribute copies of special memoirs and reports of the United States Geological Survey; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, William H. Cole, and Austin F. Pike.

MODIFICATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I submit the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended and that the following bill be passed: A bill to modify the internal-revenue system of legislation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to modify the internal-revenue system of legislation, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proviso contained in subdivision 6 of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from a special tax any farmer or planter who, by peddling or otherwise, sells leaf-tobacco at retail directly to consumers, or who sells or assigns, consigns, transfers, or disposes of to persons other than those who have paid a special tax as leaf-dealers or manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or to persons purchasing leaf-tobacco for export," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That section 3361 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all laws and parts of laws which impose restrictions upon the sale of leaf-tobacco by the producers thereof, or by guardians, executors, or trustees having the control of the land on which the same was produced, or by owners of land who have received tobacco as rent from their tenants, and all laws and parts of laws imposing penalties therefor, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and none of the persons or classes of persons above mentioned shall be deemed dealers in leaf-tobacco or retail dealers in leaf-tobacco, or be subject to any special or other tax as such.

SEC. 3. That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes shall be amended by adding at the end of said section the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall exempt all distilleries which mash five bushels of grain or less per day from the operations of the provisions of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the payment of the tax, which said tax shall be levied and collected on the capacity of said distilleries; and said distilleries shall be run and operated without storekeepers or 'storekeepers and gaugers.' And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of said Secretary, may exempt any distillery or all distilleries which mash over five and not more than twenty-five bushels of grain per day from the operations of the provisions of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the payment of the tax, which said tax shall be assessed and collected upon the capacity of the distillery so exempted, as hereinbefore provided. And the said Commissioner, with the approval of said Secretary, may establish special warehouses, in which he may authorize to be deposited the product of any number of said distilleries to be designated by him, and in which any distiller operating any such distillery may deposit his product, which when so deposited shall be subject to all the laws and regulations as to bonds, tax, removals, and otherwise as other warehouses. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section: Provided, That such regulations shall be adopted as will require that all the spirits manufactured shall be subject to the payment of the tax as required by law."

SEC. 4. That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out all after said number and substituting therefor the following:

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, or other fruits from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so."

SEC. 5. That the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to the production of fruit-brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same," approved March 3, 1877, be extended and made applicable to brandy distilled from apples or peaches, or from any other fruit the brandy distilled from which is not now required, or hereafter shall not be required, to be deposited in a distillery warehouse: Provided, That each of the warehouses established under said act, or which may hereafter be established, shall be in charge either of a storekeeper or a storekeeper and gauger, at the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 6. That section 3332 of the Revised Statutes, and the supplement thereto, shall be amended so that said section shall read as follows:

"When a judgment of forfeiture, in any case of seizure, is recovered against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits, because no bond has been given, or against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of spirits, having a registered producing capacity of less than 150 gallons a day, every still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, mash-tub, and fermenting-tub therein shall be sold, as in case of other forfeited property, without being mutilated or destroyed. And in case of seizure of a still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, fermenting-tub, mash-tub, or other distilling apparatus of any kind whatsoever, for any offense involving forfeiture of the same, it shall be the duty of the seizing officer to remove the same from the place where seized to a place of safe storage; and said property so seized shall be sold as provided by law, but without being mutilated or destroyed."

SEC. 7. That whenever in any statute denouncing any violation of the internal-revenue laws as a crime or misdemeanor, there is prescribed in such statute a minimum punishment, less than which minimum no fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment is authorized to be imposed, every such minimum punishment is hereby abolished; and the court or judge in every such case shall have discretion to impose any fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment not exceeding the limit authorized by such statute, whether such fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment be less or greater than the said minimum so prescribed.

SEC. 8. That no warrant, in any case under the internal-revenue laws, shall be issued upon an affidavit making charges upon information and belief, unless such affidavit is made by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by a revenue agent, nor unless such affidavit is first approved by the district attorney and written instructions given by him for the issuing of the warrant; and with the exception aforesaid every such warrant shall be issued upon a sworn complaint, setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant; and no warrant shall be issued upon the affidavit of a person other than such collector, deputy collector, or revenue agent, unless the commissioner or other officer having jurisdiction shall indorse upon the warrant and shall enter upon his docket an express adjudication that the examination on oath of the affiant shows that there is probable cause for charging the person prosecuted with the offense.

SEC. 9. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the United States court or judge having jurisdiction that the health or life of any person imprisoned for any offense, in a county jail or elsewhere, for a period of one year or less, is endangered by close confinement, the said court or judge is hereby authorized to make such order and provision for the comfort and well-being of the person so imprisoned as shall be deemed reasonable and proper.

SEC. 10. That the circuit courts of the United States and the district courts of the Territories are authorized to remove from office any commissioner appointed or authorized to be appointed by said courts under sections 627 and 1983 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 11. That all clauses of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws amendatory thereof, and all other laws which impose any special taxes upon manufacturers of stills, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. All laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 13. This act shall be in force from and after the 1st day of April, in the year 1887.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a second, and the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILKINS. I do not rise to oppose this bill, but simply to ask an explanation of its provisions.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object to a second being considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 126, noes 38.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of and fifteen minutes in opposition to the motion. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] in support of the motion and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in opposition to it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the internal-revenue taxes are war taxes and ought to be abolished. Such a system of taxation could never have been imposed upon the people of the United States in a time of peace. The system is tyrannical, unjust, undemocratic, and unrepublican.

This Congress has lost the opportunity of repealing any portion of these taxes; the agitation of that question has been postponed until another Congress shall assemble. But the whole system is doomed and can not stand many years longer. The internal-revenue laws were never intended as police regulations to secure the peace, good order, well-being, and advancement of society; but their purpose has always been to obtain money due as taxes from the people to the Government. The Government does not now need the money. Its Treasury is filled to overflowing. The annual surplus is estimated to be $120,000,000. This being the case, no necessity can possibly exist for using harsh, vindictive, and extreme measures for the collection of taxes.

The internal-revenue system has been a prolific source of frauds and perjuries. The American people—all people who love and enjoy liberty—have a great horror and detestation for hired spies and informers, who make a business of telling on their neighbors, so that they may obtain from the Government bribes and fees or money in devious ways unknown to the public, or may gratify feelings of envy, hatred, malice, and revenge. The laws should not tolerate the employment by the Government of such shameless and treacherous midnight hirelings. If the courts had the power to tax all such informers with the costs of prosecutions, and to imprison them if the costs were not paid, this evil would be soon abated. The judges in many districts have adopted rules of court to prevent, as far as possible, under the law, oppression of the people on the part of the officers, but the courts can not prevent petty, frivolous, and malicious prosecutions, unless the law confers upon them the power of taxing costs and imprisoning the originators of such prosecutions, or unless the existing law shall be altered in many of its harshest provisions.

As a rule the circuit courts appoint good men as United States commissioners, but sometimes the desire to make and multiply fees induce some of these commissioners to issue warrants unnecessarily if not corruptly in hundreds of petty cases. And there are numbers of such commissioners in office whom the judges believe to be corrupt men; and yet there seems to be no effectual or speedy way to have them removed from office.

To give this House and the country an idea of what devices are resorted to by corrupt or covetous commissioners and officials to make fees, I insert here a letter from a United States commissioner to a deputy collector of internal revenue:

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
DEPUTY COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
SIXTH DISTRICT NORTH CAROLINA,
Hendersonville, June 17, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: I send you some affidavits. Please sign and return to me immediately, and greatly oblige me. I have seen some of the witnesses in the cases. There is no doubt about any of them. I will not issue a warrant in any case that I do not know is a good one. Any case I send you to give me a warrant for I will always be sure of conviction. I was at Asheville the other day, but did not get to see you.

I am, as ever, your friend,

W. G. B. MORRIS.

WILLIAM YOUNG,
Deputy Collector, Asheville, N. C.

The following is the form of the affidavit referred to:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western District of North Carolina:

This day personally appeared before me —— ——, a United States commissioner, —— ——, and maketh oath that he is informed and believes that Walker Hathby did on or about the 1st day of June, 188–, as well before as since this date, engage in the business of illicit distilling, removing, and retailing spirituous liquors without having complied with the law of the United States.

—— ——, Deponent.

Sworn to before me this — day of ——, 188–.

—— ——, United States Commissioner.

The affidavit is to be signed and sworn to in blank in unlimited numbers by the deputy collector, and the commissioner guarantees, in advance of a knowledge of any of the evidence, without having examined a witness, and without having heard a word of explanation from the defendant or his counsel, that the person to be prosecuted shall be "surely convicted." The prisoner is to be convicted first and tried afterwards. I have heard of courts-martial organized to convict. United States commissioners who act in the manner above indicated do much worse. They guarantee to convict before the persons to be charged with violations of the law are arrested or even known or identified. What a mockery of law, of liberty, and of justice!

I send to the Clerk's desk to be read two letters showing some of the evils of the internal-revenue laws as they are enforced in the western district of North Carolina:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 29, 1886.

SIR: Referring you to rule 3 of "Rules of court to apply in revenue cases," western district North Carolina, I would respectfully ask of you if you consider the practice now followed in your district in issuing warrants for the arrest of violators of internal-revenue laws by United States commissioners to be in compliance with the spirit and letter of the said rule.

That your attention may be called more particularly to the practice referred to, I will cite the matter of the commissioner whose account I have before me, namely, J. W. Shook, United States commissioner, Pigeon Valley, N. C. Commissioner Shook has affixed to each fee-bill in his account a copy of the affidavit setting forth the offense with which the accused is charged, and upon which, I presume, warrant was issued. The said affidavits bear the following indorsements, to wit: "After examining the complaint, I am of the opinion that this case should be prosecuted" (signed by commissioner); also, "The commissioner will issue a warrant upon this affidavit if in his opinion there is reasonable grounds to believe the accused guilty" (signed by yourself as United States attorney).

As you are well aware, there is in the Treasury Department a bureau whose especial duty it is to see that the laws of the United States pertaining to the internal-revenue service are enforced, and to see that violators of the said laws are brought before the proper tribunal for trial. The court, I assume, appreciating the peculiar functions of this bureau and its various officials, has seen fit to promulgate the rule, above referred to, that its (the courts) officials might not trench upon duties clearly incumbent upon another (an executive) branch of the Government by acting as detectives, spying out violations and violators of the said laws.

Your rights, however, as a representative of the Department of Justice, have, in said rule, been respected in that you are therein "authorized to institute prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws."

By this proviso I understand you, and you alone of the judicial officers, have the authority to institute such prosecutions, and that you have not the right to delegate this power to any other judicial officer, however much you may value "his opinion" or discretion.

You would appreciate more fully the necessity for a strict compliance with an enforment of this rule, I have no doubt, if you have more time at your disposal to devote to the examination of accounts rendered against the Government by the United States commissioners and deputy marshals—thereby noticing the number of warrants returned "not found;" the number of defendants "discharged" or found "not guilty;" and the number, which having been held for court, you are constrained to nolle prosequi, or the court, they pleading guilty, to impose only a nominal punishment. In either of these events the United States fails to be benefited, or the evil sought to be abated in any way remedied.

Heretofore this office has had occasion, in several instances, to call the attention of district attorneys to abuses existing in their several districts, and has invariably received hearty support and co-operation in suppressing the same.

The abuses of authority by court officials, to which your attention is herein called, are of a most grievous nature; and, though not criminal in their bearing, mulct the Government in an enormity of costs for prosecutions that are on their face worthless.

I beg to suggest, therefore, that it is in your power to materially assist this office in the correction of flagrant abuses. Into your hands has been intrusted the attorneyship of a district that has been a great burden to the Government.

Many abuses having existed therein, I feel assured that your especial attention needs but to be called to the matter to elicit from you a most hearty co-operation.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

H. C. JONES, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Western District North Carolina, Charlotte, N. C.

---

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1887.

SIR: Replying to yours of the 13th instant, also of the 17th, I inclose you a copy of a letter addressed to the Attorney-General, also one to Hon. THOMAS D. JOHNSTON, M. C., and refer you to them as expressing the view and holding of this office on the matter concerning which you write.

In addition I would cite you the following figures, as shown by vouchers now on file in the Department, and your official report, as it appears in abstract in the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for fiscal year 1886, pages 142–146.

First. From the vouchers filed by the United States commissioners it appears that fees are claimed in 2,337 cases in which warrants issued during the fiscal year 1886, the aggregate of fees claimed being $22,101.69. There was paid by the United States marshal to witnesses on orders of commissioners, during fiscal year, $10,873.45. If to this amount ($32,975.14) be added the fees and expenses of the United States marshal for serving the warrants, expenses endeavoring to arrest, attendance before commissioners, &c., an approximate may be arrived at as to the cost of prosecutions before commissioners' courts. These prosecutions, as you well know, are, with few exceptions, against persons charged with violations of the internal-revenue laws.

Second. From the abstract of your official report, above referred to, it appears that you reported 587 criminal suits commenced during the fiscal year 1885–'86; none of these cases being on information or indictment in the first instance, but all against persons held to court by commissioners. These figures would indicate that about 75 per cent. of the complaints filed before commissioners are for some reason never prosecuted any further. Either they are dismissed, the warrants are returned "not found," or some disposition is made of the case indicating that it is too trivial to be prosecuted further.

Third. From the abstract, and from your letter of the 13th instant, it appears that 465 criminal suits were terminated during the fiscal year 1886; 357 decided in favor of the United States; 67 against the United States; and 41 were dismissed, abandoned, or consolidated. Of the 357 suits decided in favor of the United States, fines and costs were paid in 37; the amounts paid to collectors (per page 146, Report Commissioner Internal Revenue) being, fines, $265; costs, $1,897.41. In 163 of these 357 cases sentence was suspended. (Page 145, Report Commissioner Internal Revenue.)

With these facts before me, I am driven to the necessity of concluding that a very small per cent. of the prosecutions begun before the commissioner are such as would be instituted were the cases first examined into by yourself or an official of the internal revenue.

To the end that these trivial prosecutions may be abated and this enormous drain on the Treasury (without any adequate results) may be stopped, I ask that you assist me in the rigid enforcement of the law (Rule 3).

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

H. C. JONES, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Charlotte, N. C.

Judge Durham, the First Comptroller of the Treasury, is entitled to the thanks of the country for the common-sense view he has taken of the matter and for his efforts to protect the citizen from oppression, tyranny, and injustice, and the Treasury from paying extravagant, improper, and unnecessary costs and fees.

Col. Hamilton C. Jones, the district attorney, to whom these letters are addressed, is an able and distinguished lawyer and an honorable gentleman. He is an excellent officer and is doing what he can, under the existing law, to put a stop to the frivolous and petty prosecutions referred to by Judge Durham. But there can be no certain cure for the evils of the internal-revenue system except by substantial amendments of the internal-revenue laws. The bill under consideration—although it does not go far enough—is a step in the right direction, and should pass this House without opposition or objection. It proposes such beneficial modifications of the internal-revenue system as will relieve the people from some of the most odious and irritating features thereof. Sections 7, 8, 9, and 10 have been favorably reported to this House by the Judiciary Committee, and the whole bill has received the favorable report and approval of the Committee on Ways and Means.

In deference to that committee many provisions which I considered important have been eliminated from the bill, which has been framed with a view to avoid every reasonable objection to its passage.

It is expressly directed in the proviso to the third section that such regulations shall be adopted by the Treasury Department as will require that all the spirits manufactured shall be subject to the payment of the tax imposed by law, so that the members of this House who are opposed to a repeal or reduction of these taxes need not have any fears on that score. A few clauses of the bill have been inserted on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. These are:

1. That portion of section 3 which authorizes the Treasury Department to establish special warehouses, in which may be deposited the product of any number of distilleries, to be designated for that purpose.

2. The fourth section, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the benefit of section 3255 of the Revised Statutes not only to those who distill brandy made from apples, peaches, and grapes, but also to distillers of brandy made from any "other fruits."

3. Section 5, which extends the provisions of the act of March 3, 1877, "relating to the production of fruit brandy," &c., to brandy distilled from "any fruit." The Commissioner says that the law, as it stands, practically excludes all fruit from distillation except apples, peaches, and grapes, and works a hardship in this respect which is entirely unnecessary and prevents the collection of a tax which is desired to be paid.

Sections 9 and 10 have been inserted at the suggestion of the district judge for the western district of North Carolina, and these sections authorize the judges to make reasonable provision for the comfort of persons imprisoned in a county jail where their health or life may be endangered by close confinement. Such power is conferred upon the courts of the several States, and the United States ought to be as merciful as the States. Necessity and humanity both frequently require the exercise of such power. There are a great many prisoners, especially those from the mountains, who break down under close confinement, and their health is thereby seriously impaired. The courts should certainly be clothed with power to prevent and to relieve such suffering. These two sections also give the circuit courts express power to remove from office any commissioner appointed by said courts. The power of removal should be ample and summary. United States commissioners are usually good men, but the power of a bad and corrupt commissioner is incalculable.

The sections of the bill I will now proceed to explain are the ones which propose a real reform and modification of the internal-revenue system. Sections 1 and 2 remove all restrictions upon the sale of leaf-tobacco by farmers, and permit them to sell to any persons, whether licensed dealers or not. Under the existing law they can sell to none but licensed dealers. This is a great hardship. As a rule the tobacco farmers are men of limited means; they raise small crops, and they lose much time and no little money in getting their crops to a good and lawful market.

The nearest licensed dealer may have his place of business 30 or 40 miles away, and he may not have any competition; so that after reaching his destination the farmer frequently finds that he has carried his crop to a bad market. His profits being exhausted by his trip he loses heart and does not seek to better his fortunes by going to another market, but returns home a sadder if not a wiser man, and certainly with not any too good an opinion of a Government which imposes such burdensome, embarrassing, and unjust restrictions upon the sale of his tobacco—to say nothing of the tax—while every other agricultural product may not only be sold without any restrictions, but is free from any tax whatever.

There is no justice in this and no government and no party can retain for any length of time the good will of the people who are needlessly compelled to submit to such a vexatious and burdensome law. The tobacco tax is not needed and should be abolished; but the tax might be borne, unnecessary as it is, if the irritating and odious burdens imposed by the laws regulating the sale of the unmanufactured article were removed.

Section 3 abolishes storekeepers at distilleries which mash 5 bushels of grain or less per day, and requires the tax on spirits manufactured there to be levied and collected on the capacity of said distilleries. As a matter of fact, and the records show it, these distilleries have never paid a greater tax than upon the minimum capacity of said distilleries. The storekeepers, therefore, have never been of any real service to the Government in collecting its revenues. Section 6 prohibits the destruction or mutilation of stills; and, in the same connection, section 11 repeals the special taxes upon the manufacturers of stills. There are no features of the internal-revenue system more outrageous and detestable than the wanton "cutting up" or mutilation of stills, and pouring the poor man's "mash" upon the ground. Such property is seized and destroyed by the revenue officers, in a spirit of vindictive animosity, without apparent authority of law, under rules promulgated by the Treasury Department. And there has never been any necessity to justify such harsh measures. No good reason can be given why such wanton and summary destruction and waste of property should not be forbidden for the future.

Section 7 abolishes what are known as minimum punishments, and gives a discretion to the courts to impose any punishment for the violation of the internal-revenue laws not exceeding the limit authorized by the statute, whether such punishment be less or greater than the minimum mentioned in the law. There are many cases where the judge might properly impose a less sentence than the minimum punishment allowed by law, and would do so if he had the power. This section is intended to put an end to frivolous and malicious prosecutions, and to authorize the judges to be merciful and generous as well as just in the sentences they pass upon offenders, according to the circumstances surrounding each individual case. There is a harshness and severity about the internal-revenue laws, which the judiciary have long abhorred and revolted against. In proof of this, I ask the Clerk to read an extract from an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Miller, in the case of the United States vs. Ulrici, decided in the eastern district of Missouri, in the year 1875, and published in 3 Dillon, 532:

It is very well understood, both by the courts and by the profession, as well as by every one interested in the matter, that the collection of the internal-revenue tax in this country has required a system of legislation for its enforcement harsh beyond everything known in our history. And it is equally well understood that, harsh as these measures are, they have been far from successful. Notwithstanding the heavy penalties denounced against crimes which go to defraud the Government of its revenue from internal taxes, and notwithstanding the minuteness and particularity in the description of these crimes, and notwithstanding all the aids which Congress has given by legislation to the enforcement of the revenue laws, they have been very imperfectly executed, and that the Government is cheated out of perhaps one-half of its revenue, especially from the tax on whisky and tobacco.

Section 8 is the remaining provision to be considered. No warrant is allowed to be issued upon an affidavit making charges upon "information and belief" alone, unless the affidavit is made by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by a revenue agent; and before the warrant is issued the affidavit must be approved by the district attorney and written instructions given by him for the issuing of the warrant.

Every other warrant must be issued upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant; and in such cases the United States commissioner is required to indorse upon the warrant and to enter upon his docket an adjudication that the examination, on oath, of the affiant shows that there is probable cause for charging the person prosecuted with the offense. The precautions required by these sections are not only necessary for the protection of the citizens from vexatious, petty, and frivolous prosecutions, but also to protect the Treasury of the United States from being compelled to audit and pay improper and fraudulent claims, fees, and costs.

The country is demanding a reduction of taxation and a reduction of the revenues. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation; and to exact from the people taxes beyond the requirements of the Government economically administered is robbery under the forms of law. I have favored in this body a reduction and revision of tariff duties. Both the great parties are equally pledged to such revision. I have also favored a reduction of internal-revenue taxation. But I am not willing to refuse a reduction in one case because I can not get a reduction in the other. I am always ready to vote for separate propositions looking towards a reduction either of the tariff or of the internal revenue. If I can not have all the reduction I want, I am willing to take such as I can get. An annual reduction of $12,000,000 on the tariff and of $28,000,000 on internal revenue would have been better than no reduction of the revenues.

Parties and factions are so constituted that I do not believe it possible to secure a reduction of an equal amount of taxation from the tariff and the internal-revenues at the same time. My opinion is, and I believe the people agree with me, that a revision of the tariff and of the internal-revenue laws can be attained from time to time by reforming the obvious and greater grievances of the two systems; and no man and no party should refuse to make such reforms because all the changes desired have not been attainable. I shall be glad to vote to "untax the clothing of sixty millions of people" at every opportunity which may be afforded me. I shall also feel it to be my duty to relieve these same people from the grievous burdens and oppressions of the internal-revenue system of taxation. The people demand relief from the exactions and oppressions of both systems.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to simply correct one statement in his remarks? He said that under the present law the grower of tobacco could only sell it to a licensed dealer. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the Forty-seventh Congress an amendment to a bill which was considered in the House went over to the Senate with a proviso giving the farmer the privilege of selling his tobacco to the extent of $100 per annum, but no more.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir; I was aware of that. But the provision to which the gentleman refers has always been inoperative and is practically a dead letter. It is at the end of section 2 of the act of March 3, 1883, and reads as follows:

Provided, That farmers and producers of tobacco may sell, at the place of production, tobacco of their own growth and raising at retail, directly to consumers, to an amount not exceeding $100 annually.

Mr. HATCH. And I want to say in this connection the paragraph in this bill removing all restrictions on the sale of leaf tobacco is sufficient to command my approval and my active and earnest support for the bill, and I hope every gentleman on this side of the House will vote for it and every gentleman on the other side also.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. On that one point I will agree with the gentleman, and if you will strike out all of the rest of the bill we will all join you in voting for it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this is much more important than the time chosen for its consideration would seem to indicate. I think that it would produce very marked changes in the revenue collections of the Government, and the bill ought to be entitled "a bill for the relief of moonshiners." The purpose of it and the main purpose in my judgment is to remove all restrictions upon their illegal traffic.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ought not the title be amended still further by adding "and to carry out the pledges of the Democratic party made in 1884 to the moonshiners of the mountain districts of the South?" [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the main purpose in my judgment of the promoters of this bill is to remove the watchful eye of the Government from the smaller distilleries of the country. He would be willing, I take it, the gentleman who is now urging the passage of this bill, to strike out every other clause if he could only secure that one that removes the watchfulness of the storekeeper from these country distilleries, the four hundred of them that are, or were a little while ago, in the State of North Carolina alone. It looks to me as if that ought not to be done. What possible protection is there for the Government in the collection of the revenue if you remove the watchfulness of the storekeeper?

As to the provision with regard to leaf tobacco, I do not know that that is very important; although there seems to be no necessity for it. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] tells us that it is to permit the small raiser of tobacco to dispose of his crop conveniently. The law permits him now to sell to the extent of one hundred dollars' worth.

Mr. BRADY. In a year.

Mr. HEPBURN. The complaint was made in the Forty-seventh Congress that neighbors could not exchange a single roll of tobacco without making themselves liable to the penalties of the law; and in their interest and at the earnest solicitation of gentlemen representing tobacco-growing districts the modification I have spoken of was made; so that now to the extent of one hundred dollars' worth there is no restraint on them as to the sale of their product.

Mr. SKINNER. One hundred dollars for a whole year.

Mr. HEPBURN. Of course, for a year.

Mr. BRADY. And there is a monopoly now on the purchase of tobacco.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, we heard the changes rung on that six years ago about the monopoly there was. There is no monopoly. Any man can secure the right to buy and sell if he chooses to. There is no restraint on any individual, and whatever there is in the way of requiring these sales to be made to licensed dealers is in the interest of the Government. How are you going to protect the interests of the Government or collect the taxes if there is not some one who must have knowledge of the quantity raised?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Does the gentleman from Iowa not know that this tax is never collected till the tobacco comes to the hands of the manufacturer and is manufactured?

Mr. HEPBURN. That, in my judgment, ought not to be changed. I believe it is wise to leave that as it is.

I will only say further at present that this bill in its entirety has never been considered by any committee. It is a sort of patchwork; a little taken from one committee and a little from another, and a great deal that has never had consideration by any committee.

I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not particularly in love with the provisions of our internal-revenue system born of the necessities of the war. I am one of those who believe that when the exigency is passed which gave occasion for its existence, it also should have passed away. Our internal-revenue taxes are in fact the only remaining war taxes that we have.

As regards the first portion of the bill, it seems to me that it is not subject to any serious objection. It does seem to me that when a farmer raises tobacco he should be allowed to dispose of it without any tax being imposed on that particular product. And had the bill stopped at that point I should have given my voice and vote heartily in favor of it.

But unfortunately the bill does not stop at that point. It seeks by indirection to repeal the internal-revenue system as applied to the product of distilled spirits. I say by indirection, because, while it leaves the tax on the distiller, it so removes the safeguards which the statute of to-day has placed around the production of that article as to practically make that statute valueless. It provides, in the first place, that all distilleries mashing five bushels and less per day would be exempt from the internal-revenue tax. I ask you if there is not there a door wide open for fraud. It also provides that distilled spirits made of certain articles shall be exempt from taxation. There is another door wide open for fraud. In certain cases it removes the supervision of the Government storekeeper. That opens another door wide for fraud. And so you go on through the bill, and you find that those provisions that from time to time have been enacted, recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as absolutely necessary to the due and perfect carrying out of the law taxing distilled spirits, are either removed or so essentially modified as to be of no earthly use whatever.

Mr. COWLES. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have only three minutes. The gentleman can make his speech in the time of the other side. If I had ample time I would yield amply.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HEPBURN. I reserve that time.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] yield?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will claim the attention of the House for a short time in advocacy of the pending bill. It has only to be read for its importance to be appreciated. At an early date in this Congress I introduced a bill to repeal so much of the internal-revenue law as restricts the farmer in the sale of the tobacco he has produced. The Committee on Ways and Means has reported back to this House the substance of that bill, with other sections modifying other features of the internal-revenue laws. The first and second sections of the bill under consideration are as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proviso contained in subdivision 6 of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from a special tax any farmer or planter who, by peddling or otherwise, sells leaf-tobacco at retail directly to consumers, or who sells or assigns, consigns, transfers, or disposes of to persons other than those who have paid a special tax as leaf-dealers or manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or to persons purchasing leaf-tobacco for export," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That section 3361 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all laws and parts of laws which impose restrictions upon the sale of leaf-tobacco by the producers thereof, or by guardians, executors, or trustees having the control of the land on which the same was produced, or by owners of land who have received tobacco as rent from their tenants, and all laws and parts of laws imposing penalties therefor, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and none of the persons or classes of persons above mentioned shall be deemed dealers in leaf-tobacco or retail dealers in leaf-tobacco, or be subject to any special or other tax as such.

It will be observed from this, Mr. Speaker, that it is the purpose of those who advocate the passage of this bill to enable the producer of tobacco or the owner of land who receives it for rents, or the guardian of those upon whose land it is raised so receiving it for rent, to be unhampered in its sale. It is the purpose to put this agricultural product in its unmanufactured state on an equal footing with every other product of the soil before it is manufactured, and allow the producer to sell without danger of indictment and prosecution, and without the trouble of hunting up some man who has bought a license to deal in it. I confess I have never been able to see any just grounds for hampering the sale of this product of the soil. Hundreds and thousands of citizens of the United States are engaged in its production, and yet the Government places restrictions upon its sale before it is manufactured. The result of that restriction is to make it more difficult for the producer to sell and more easy for purchasers to combine and control its price.

What excuse is there for any such restriction? The licenses paid by these tobacco dealers afford very little revenue to the Government—not a sufficient amount to pay for the execution of that branch of the law. The only effect that it has is to harass, annoy, and restrict. If the Congress of the United States were to place such a restriction around the sale of corn, of oats, of cattle, of horses, of coal banks or iron beds, a complaining shriek would go up from an outraged public that would be heard from one end of the land to the other. Yet we see this product of a large number of States singled out and hampered as no other is. If the restriction were removed it would enable the producer to sell to his neighbors whatever they needed in an unmanufactured state for their own consumption. It would enable those who produced it and who had remnants left after prizing for the wholesale market to dispose of it without subjecting themselves to Federal prosecutions and without the danger of looking out from the bars of a jail or a penitentiary.

This tax was imposed during the war, when the Government was compelled to have immense revenues. More than three-fourths of the internal taxes imposed for the same purpose have been repealed. The tax on incomes—one of the most just of all internal taxes—was repealed soon after the close of the war. The tax on tobacco was reduced from 24 cents to 16 cents years ago. The tax on cosmetics, the tax on conveyances—such as deeds, wills, deeds of trust, &c.—have been taken from the statute-books; and yet, twenty-two years after the war closed, when a large part of the indebtedness which grew out of it and was the cause of the taxation has been paid, and when the interest on much of the balance has been reduced, we have lingering on our statutes the very tax that ought never to have been imposed, and the very penalties which ought never to have been created, by which the farmer is prevented from selling the labor of his hands and the sweat of his brow without having to go around and hunt up a licensed dealer.

What excuse is there for the retention of this tax? The Government does not need the little revenue that is derived from it, because all the public debt that can be paid prior to 1891 will be paid before the close of the next fiscal year, and the revenues that are derived from other sources are ample to meet the interest on the debt that is not due. No public policy makes its retention essential, and no principle of justice demands it. I therefore earnestly appeal to this House to repeal the law and place this product of the farm on an equality with the others.

DISPENSING WITH STOREKEEPERS AND GAUGERS AT SMALL DISTILLERIES.

Section 3 of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes shall be amended by adding at the end of said section the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall exempt all distilleries which mash 5 bushels of grain or less per day from the operations of the provisions of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the payment of the tax, which said tax shall be levied and collected on the capacity of said distilleries; and said distilleries shall be run and operated without storekeepers or 'storekeepers and gaugers.' And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of said Secretary, may exempt any distillery or all distilleries which mash over 5 and not more than 25 bushels of grain per day from the operations of the provisions of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the payment of the tax, which said tax shall be assessed and collected upon the capacity of the distillery so exempted, as hereinbefore provided. And the said Commissioner, with the approval of said Secretary, may establish special warehouses, in which he may authorize to be deposited the product of any number of said distilleries to be designated by him, and in which any distiller operating any such distillery may deposit his product, which when so deposited shall be subject to all the laws and regulations as to bonds, tax, removals, and otherwise as other warehouses. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section: Provided, That such regulations shall be adopted as will require that all the spirits manufactured shall be subject to the payment of the tax as required by law."

One of the advantages that is derived from changing the law as proposed is that it will tax the capacity of the stills instead of putting the Government to the expense and the citizens to the annoyance of having a storekeeper and gauger stationed at the small still-houses, whose salary consumes from one-third to one-fifth of the revenue that is collected from the stills.

Why is it that this can not be done? When every fruit distillery pays upon what it makes, why can not the small-grain distillers do the same, and get rid of four or five hundred storekeepers and gaugers who are now constantly stationed round small distilleries. It would be to the advantage of the Government, because it would save the $2 to $4 a day expense for each storekeeper and gauger who is kept at these small distilleries. It would be to the advantage of the manufacturer, because he would know exactly what he had to do. As the capacity of his still would be taxed, it would be his own fault if he failed to run it to the capacity. If it became disabled, proper provisions of law or regulations of the Department would be enforced, allowing him to give notice of its disability and thereby suspend its taxation.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY BY INTERNAL-REVENUE OFFICERS.

Mr. Speaker, one very important feature of this bill is that which prevents wanton and unnecessary destruction of property seized by officers of the United States for alleged violation of the internal-revenue laws. It is embodied in section 6, which is as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 3332 of the Revised Statutes, and the supplement thereto, shall be amended so that said section shall read as follows:

"When a judgment of forfeiture, in any case of seizure, is recovered against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits, because no bond has been given, or against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of spirits, having a registered producing capacity of less than 150 gallons a day, every still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, mash-tub, and fermenting-tub therein shall be sold, as in case of other forfeited property, without being mutilated or destroyed. And in case of seizure of a still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, fermenting-tub, mash-tub, or other distilling apparatus of any kind whatsoever, for any offense involving forfeiture of the same, it shall be the duty of the seizing officer to remove the same from the place where seized to a place of safe storage; and said property so seized shall be sold as provided by law, but without being mutilated or destroyed."

I have always doubted the constitutional right of the Government to destroy property without its condemnation in the way contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. So much have I been impressed with this idea that I have ever deprecated that law which pretends to authorize it. If a citizen has been guilty of a violation of the law punish him, if need be, by fine and imprisonment and the cost of the prosecution. Where is the impropriety of requiring the sale of the property that has been illegally used and the application of the funds received from the sale to the discharge of the costs, which must come out of his pocket if he is able to pay, but which more frequently have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and consequently by the law-abiding citizens thereof.

By the use of the axe and other implements in the destruction of property used in illicit distilling there is an appearance of recklessness, if not of lawlessness, which has a bad effect upon the citizen. Every man who has a reverence for law will justify the Government in the application of the proceeds of the sale of the property to a debt that the lawbreaker has incurred by his violation. But there is no principle of justice upon which you can destroy the property of the criminal too poor to pay costs and then require the costs of the prosecution to be paid by those who have not offended.

If property is to be destroyed it should be the result of a judicial proceeding, and not merely upon the whim and caprice of an executive officer who has been called upon simply to arrest a citizen and bring him before a tribunal to determine whether or not he is guilty of making whisky in violation of law. They have and should have the authority to arrest a criminal; but judicial functions have not by the Constitution been rested with them.

I do not recall any other instance except that pertaining to the internal-revenue laws where the officer arresting an alleged criminal in advance of a trial, and in advance of any judicial proceeding or ascertainment, destroys property involved in a legal prosecution. Excessive harshness neither increases the citizen's reverence for law nor makes more certain the enforcement of its penalties. The severity of these provisions has been commented upon by Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court, in the case of the United States vs. Ulrica, in 1875, published in 3 Dillon, page 532. He said:

It is very well understood, both by the courts and by the profession, as well as by every one interested in the matter, that the collection of the internal-revenue tax in this country has required a system of legislation for its enforcement harsh beyond everything known in our history. And it is equally well understood that, harsh as these measures are, they have been far from successful. Notwithstanding the heavy penalties denounced against crimes which go to defraud the Government of its revenue from internal taxes, and notwithstanding the minuteness and particularity in the description of these crimes, and notwithstanding all the aids which Congress has given by legislation to the enforcement of the revenue laws, they have been very imperfectly executed, and that the Government is cheated out of perhaps one-half of its revenue, especially from the tax on whisky and tobacco.

JUDGES MAY IMPOSE A LESS PENALTY THAN IS NOW REQUIRED.

The seventh section of the bill repeals the clause of the law which fixes the minimum penalty for violating certain internal-revenue laws.

I favor that also, for the effect, as the law now stands, is to force the judge under some circumstances either to order the discharge of a criminal or fix the penalty above what the merits of the case demand. If amended as proposed, the judge could not impose a greater penalty than that now fixed by law, but he might impose a less. It would meet that numerous class of cases where, whilst there is guilt, there is not that degree of guilt which requires the severe penalties now imposed by law.

The eighth section is in the following words:

SEC. 8. That no warrant, in any case under the internal-revenue laws, shall be issued upon an affidavit making charges upon information and belief, unless such affidavit is made by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by a revenue agent, nor unless such affidavit is first approved by the district attorney and written instructions given by him for the issuing of the warrant; and with the exception aforesaid every such warrant shall be issued upon a sworn complaint, setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant; and no warrant shall be issued upon the affidavit of a person other than such collector, deputy collector, or revenue agent, unless the commissioner or other officer having jurisdiction shall indorse upon the warrant and shall enter upon his docket an express adjudication that the examination on oath of the affiant shows that there is probable cause for charging the person prosecuted with the offense.

For years the custom prevailed of allowing the deputy marshals to take round with them some commissioner, upon whose suggestion or upon whose authority arrests were made without previous order from the district attorney, collector, or any internal revenue agent. It will be observed that this section requires that a warrant must issue under the direction of one of these three officials or upon the affidavit of some one acquainted with the facts. It is intended to throw around the citizen those safeguards and protections from arrest which were guaranteed to him by Article IV of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and which should ever be held his most sacred heritage. That article is in this language:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

I am happy to say that the committee and this House have the hearty approval of the Treasury Department in the effort to prevent unlawful arrests and the institution of frivolous prosecutions. In support of what I say I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read two communications from Hon. M. J. Durham, First Comptroller of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 29, 1886.

SIR: Referring you to rule 3 of "Rules of court to apply in revenue cases," western district North Carolina, I would respectfully ask of you if you consider the practice now followed in your district in issuing warrants for the arrest of violators of internal-revenue laws by United States commissioners to be in compliance with the spirit and letter of the said rule.

That your attention may be called more particularly to the practice referred to, I will cite the matter of the commissioner whose account I have before me, namely, J. W. Shook, United States commissioner, Pigeon Valley, N. C. Commissioner Shook has affixed to each fee-bill in his account a copy of the affidavit setting forth the offense with which the accused is charged, and upon which, I presume, warrant was issued. The said affidavits bear the following indorsements, to wit: "After examining the complaint I am of the opinion that this case should be prosecuted" (signed by commissioner); also, "The commissioner will issue a warrant upon this affidavit if in his opinion there is reasonable ground to believe the accused guilty" (signed by yourself as United States attorney).

As you are well aware, there is in the Treasury Department a bureau whose especial duty it is to see that the laws of the United States pertaining to the internal-revenue service are enforced, and to see that violators of the said laws are brought before the proper tribunal for trial. The court, I assume, appreciating the peculiar functions of this bureau and its various officials, has seen fit to promulgate the rule, above referred to, that its (the court's) officials might not trench upon duties clearly incumbent upon another (an executive) branch of the Government by acting as detectives, spying out violations and violators of the said laws.

Your rights, however, as a representative of the Department of Justice, have, in said rule, been respected in that you are therein "authorized to institute prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws."

By this proviso I understand you, and you alone of the judicial officers, have the authority to institute such prosecutions, and that you have not the right to delegate this power to any other judicial officer, however much you may value "his opinion" or discretion.

You would appreciate more fully the necessity for a strict compliance with and enforcement of this rule, I have no doubt, if you had more time at your disposal to devote to the examination of accounts rendered against the Government by the United States commissioners and deputy marshals—thereby noticing the number of warrants returned "not found;" the number of defendants "discharged" or found "not guilty;" and the number which, having been held for court, you are constrained to nolle prosequi, or the court, they pleading guilty, to impose only a nominal punishment. In either of these events the United States fails to be benefited or the evil sought to be abated in any way remedied.

Heretofore this office has had occasion, in several instances, to call the attention of district attorneys to abuses exising in their several districts, and has invariably received hearty support and co-operation in suppressing the same.

The abuses of authority by court officials, to which your attention is herein called, are of a most grievous nature; and, though not criminal in their bearing, mulct the Government in an enormity of costs for prosecutions that are on their face worthless.

I beg to suggest, therefore, that it is in your power to materially assist this office in the correction of flagrant abuses. Into your hands has been intrusted the attorneyship of a district that has been a great burden to the Government.

Many abuses having existed therein, I feel assured that your especial attention needs but to be called to the matter to elicit from you a most hearty co-operation.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

H. C. JONES, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Western District North Carolina, Charlotte, N. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1887.

SIR: Replying to yours of the 13th instant, also of the 17th, I inclose you a copy of a letter addressed to the Attorney-General, also one to Hon. THOMAS D. JOHNSTON, M. C., and refer you to them as expressing the view and holding of this office on the matter concerning which you write.

In addition I would cite you the following figures, as shown by vouchers now on file in the Department, and your official report, as it appears in abstract in the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for fiscal year 1886, pages 142–146.

First. From the vouchers filed by the United States commissioner it appears that fees are claimed in 2,337 cases in which warrants issued during the fiscal year 1886, the aggregate of fees claimed being $22,101.69. There was paid by the United States marshal to witnesses on orders of commissioners, during fiscal year, $10,873.45. If to this amount ($32,975.14) be added the fees and expenses of the United States marshal for serving the warrants, expenses endeavoring to arrest, attendance before commissioners, &c., an approximate may be arrived at as to the cost of prosecutions before commissioners' courts. These prosecutions, as you well know, are, with few exceptions, against persons charged with violations of the internal-revenue laws.

Second. From the abstract of your official report, above referred to, it appears that you reported 587 criminal suits commenced during the fiscal year 1885–'86; none of these cases being on information or indictment in the first instance, but all against persons held to court by commissioners. These figures would indicate that about 75 per cent. of the complaints filed before commissioners are for some reason never prosecuted any further. Either they are dismissed, the warrants are returned "not found," or some disposition is made of the case indicating that it is too trivial to be prosecuted further.

Third. From the abstract, and from your letter of the 13th instant, it appears that 465 criminal suits were terminated during the fiscal year 1886; 357 decided in favor of the United States; 67 against the United States; and 41 were dismissed, abandoned, or consolidated. Of the 357 suits decided in favor of the United States, fines and costs were paid in 37; the amounts paid to collectors (per page 146, Report Commissioner Internal Revenue) being, fines, $265; costs, $1,897.41. In 163 of these 357 cases sentence was suspended. (Page 145, Report Commissioner Internal Revenue.)

With these facts before me, I am driven to the necessity of concluding that a very small per cent. of the prosecutions begun before the commissioner are such as would be instituted were the cases first examined into by yourself or an official of the internal revenue.

To the end that these trivial prosecutions may be abated and this enormous drain on the Treasury (without any adequate results) may be stopped, I ask that you assist me in the rigid enforcement of the law (Rule 3).

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

H. C. JONES, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Charlotte, N. C.

The instances there commented upon occurred in the State of North Carolina, but I dare say a duplicate can be found in almost every State of the Union. There are few things that have brought more reproach upon the internal-revenue system than the tendency toward frivolous and worthless prosections. The enactment of this section will go far to prevent the institution of such, and tend to a more thorough reconciliation of the people to the enforcement of these laws.

Endless oppression has grown out of their enforcement. It is a notorious fact that for years it was not infrequent that an unscrupulous party, taking a barrel of whisky, would travel through the country twenty, thirty, fifty, or a hundred miles, selling it on the roadside to every youth or old man that he could inveigle into a purchase; and as soon as the barrel was emptied and the money pocketed this same illegal vendor would become a Government informer, going to a United States commissioner or to the Federal court and making the affidavits necessary for the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of parties who had bought the vile stuff, charging them with illegal removal of spirits, and that, too, after having been the principal participator in the crime of illegally selling and becoming responsible for all the illicit drinking done in the whole community, deriving the still further benefit of large fees and mileage as a witness against the poor, oftentimes pauper, old men or unfortunate youths whom he had duped into a purchase.

It is a most crying and unmitigated outrage. Such an informer ought to be spurned from a court of justice, and the old maxim in minimis lex non curat should be applied. If anybody is dealt with it ought to be the unprincipled creature who hauled the barrel and hunted up all the wild boys of the community and decoyed them into buying his medicated stuff. If any man goes to the penitentiary he is the one that ought to go, and if any man is fined he ought to be, because he is the greatest culprit of the whole gang. I have time and again been urged to try to relieve the dupes who had been inveigled into buying from these itinerant grog-shops, and upon investigation have found out that whilst the fellow who bought a half pint, even for medicinal purposes, had been imprisoned, the intelligent and heartless law-breaker who did the illegal removing and selling not only went unpunished, but was an informer for the Government, and made money out of witness fees as he had made money out of the original crime. The single purchaser punished, whilst the law-breaker who made one hundred illegal sales went unwhipped of justice! The people of this country, if whisky is to be made, do not care if it has to pay a part of the taxes necessary to support the Government, but they insist, as every citizen should insist, that in the enforcement of law all unnecessary fees should be abolished, all unnecessary rigor should cease, all unnecessary prosecution should be desisted from, or, if actually begun, abandoned.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States are a law-abiding people. They do not support their Government grudgingly, but with their whole heart. They pay their taxes with more cheerfulness than any other people in the world. Their submission so long to enormous taxation of everything they wear and many things they eat by war tariff proves this. And their long submission to the very oppressions of the law to which I have been addressing myself confirms what I say. It is not the amount of the tax on whisky and manufactured tobacco of which they complain. If they had it in their power to say whether they should cheapen whisky or cheapen clothes, they would unhesitatingly reduce the cost of clothing and the other essentials and comforts of life. But our people do demand, as they have a right to demand, that all laws shall be framed in strict accordance with the Constitution and justice; that they shall have all the power behind them when so framed that is necessary to their enforcement; and that no unnecessary rigor or cruelty shall attend the enforcement. With unjust laws, harshly administered, the people grow restless, complain, and cease to revere "the powers that be," but with just laws, justly administered, they are prosperous in their homes, and contented with their Government.

I urge the House to do itself the justice to pass this bill, and give them the relief they have long deserved.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this bill is composed of sections all of which except one have been in substance reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on the Judiciary. The first sections of the bill have no other purpose than to widen the market of the producer of leaf-tobacco by taking off the limitation which now exists and which prevents him from selling any larger amount than $100 per annum, except to a person who has taken out a license as a retail dealer in leaf-tobacco, or to a manufacturer, or for exportation. So that the first part of this bill gives to the producer of tobacco, to his executor or administrator, if he dies before the crop is ready for sale, or to the guardian, if the producer be a minor, the right to sell his leaf-tobacco to whomsoever he pleases. The other sections of the bill are taken in ipsissimis verbis from a bill reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary (H. R. 7894), and they provide substantially that the warrants for violations of the internal-revenue law shall be obtained at the request of the collectors or deputy collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. REED. Was not that voted down by the House?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That has never been voted down.

Mr. REED. Or a similar proposition made by you?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No. The bill provides that the judge of the court in which a prisoner is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for a period of less than one year shall, upon its being shown that the prisoner is in bad health, provide for his imprisonment; and it also provides that the courts which have the power to appoint commissioners shall have power to remove them.

The next provision of the bill is taken from House bill 8327, reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means, and is, in substance, that all distilleries which mash 5 bushels of grain per day, or less, shall be taxed upon their capacity, and that all under a capacity of 25 bushels per day may be so taxed in the discretion of the Treasury Department. The object is this: Brandy distilleries of certain sizes are now taxed in that way, and it is supposed that the change will relieve the Government of some five hundred officers and some $300,000 of expenses. It is to be done under regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury ——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CABELL. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am much obliged to the gentleman. I say, Mr. Speaker, this is proposed to be done upon the idea that it will not only not diminish, but that it will increase the internal revenue, because it will introduce into the system the plan now adopted exclusively in foreign countries by which the taxation is based upon the capacity of the still. Whether the still runs or not, it is taxed upon its capacity. It can make so much; it can make only so much; it has to pay on that capacity.

The fourth provision embraced in this bill is that the stills which are now, under the law, destroyed by the officers who seize them, shall not be destroyed but shall be sold by a judgment of the court. That is, that the person who is held to be an offender shall, before his property is destroyed, have his day in court. That is the whole bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I shall heartily support this measure; and I am glad that the Committee on Ways and Means appears disposed to support the bill in its present shape, for I regard it as tantamount to a confession that the system of collecting internal-revenue taxes is iniquitous. This bill will remove from that system many of the most odious features of the espionage now exercised and give to the growers of tobacco and the small distillers of the country the freedom to which they are entitled as American citizens.

Mr. Speaker, this bill brings before the House and the country the whole question as to the wisdom of continuing internal-revenue war taxes in time of profound peace. Without stopping here to state my views as to these taxes, I want to briefly notice the most specious objection made to their removal. Those who favor a substantial measure of free trade with other countries and those who are protected in liquor and tobacco monopolies immediately cry out as against the abolition of these taxes that we should tax home-made luxuries instead of foreign-made necessities; American alcohol instead of English flannel, American tobacco in place of Spanish pig-iron. This cry is intentionally unfair, and exposes the aims of those who give vent to it in press and forum. Demand for the repeal of the internal revenue rests primarily on the fact that the whole system is un-American and utterly unsuited to republican government. A tax law that has to be enforced in the homes of our own people at the muzzle of breech-loading rifles can not be defended in this country. It is, and has been in all our history, a constant source of irritation and annoyance. No law, even in England, is so detested as the internal-tax system. There, in past years, open revolt and bold frauds have followed its execution. Therefore, whence this rather mildewed and somewhat tiresome cry of opposition? Principally, as I have said, from free-traders and monopolists. The free-traders assume to fear that morals will suffer if the tax is taken off tobacco and whisky by the cheapening of these articles. In this they differ somewhat from the great manufacturers of these articles, who, presuming that the cheapening of these stimulants is the object sought, immediately tell us that taking off the tax will not benefit the consumer so far as price is concerned. It would, however, improve the quality of the liquor ordinarily sold, but this, I suppose, would be a great crime to free-trade morality. Quite singular, too, the professed and radical temperance people oppose the tax, because, in their opinion, it strengthens the traffic in stimulants. Now, leaving out the question of whether these stimulants are a necessity to many people, or whether taking off these taxes would lessen their price and increase their use, we can not get away from the main objection to them, which is that in our country direct or internal taxation is unpopular, and that indirect custom-house taxation has been, is, and always will be the American system. As far as the morale of the question is concerned I am certain no more tobacco would be smoked or liquor drank than is now, and that a great many millions of dollars would remain with the people and a heavy burden and oppression be removed from our farmers and people generally.

The next phase of the objection is the cry to take the tax off necessaries. The necessaries here meant are those made abroad. We successfully manufacture all kinds of necessaries, including cloth and pig-iron, in this country, but there is no internal tax upon them. They are free all over this great continent called the United States of America. Our people who make and use them live better and higher and in an entirely different social and political state than those who make and use them in Europe. If the tariff tax represents the difference in cost of production between the two countries it protects American labor. If below it fails to protect; if above it cheats labor for capital; hence the necessity betimes of careful revision.

Take the tax off necessaries of foreign make? Let us see. Champagne is a luxury—except, perhaps, at the gorgeous free-trade dinners given by the rich importers of New York, Chicago, and Boston—and we as yet make little of it in this country. American labor has little interest in its taxation or freedom. Now a coat is something we manufacture here and all use. Here is a foreign-made coat, and, by the way, not a very neat-looking product, and here is one of American manufacture. Now, you propose to cheapen the foreign coat in our home market, and compel the American to compete as to price, and you say you can do this and undersell the foreigner, and yet pay your American workmen the highest wages in the world. "Go, hie thee to a nunnery," or to the Patent Office, and take out letters on this most extraordinary discovery. High wages and low prices? Ninety-five per cent. of human labor in the coat, and you propose to pay for it the highest price in the world, and then undersell the cheapest price given anywhere. Millions of our people are engaged in making articles of necessity. The protective features of the tariff are retained because they make these articles, not because they use them.

This the working people thoroughly understand. Iteration of catch words in the press and oracular utterances of selfish foreign agents and speculative theorists do not mislead them. What you really mean to do is to reduce wages; to reduce unfair profits I am always ready, but to pull down labor, and finally, with ruined manufactures, leave ourselves undefended against the combinations of English and other foreign capitalists I am opposed now and forever. This is not a political issue. Men in both political parties differ on this question. In some States both parties entirely agree from local and business causes. Many of the leading and staunchest Republican newspapers and men in the Northwest favor free-trade. Many of the New England manufacturers and people, jealous of the tremendous growth of Southern industries, are foolishly for free-trade. But the American people taken as a whole are overwhelmingly in favor of a judiciously-levied tariff as the sole source of national income. Can the Democratic party now in power formulate a correct measure of revenue revision? Undoubtedly. It has no hobbies. It is a broad, unsectional party. The extremists, whether protectionists or free-traders, must no longer consider this question personal property, for purposes of political agitation and personal aggrandizement, but must give way to conservative, patriotic men who are neither hobbyists nor lobbyists, but broad-minded American men in hearty sympathy with all the people of the whole country.

I only notice now this threadbare, factional objection to honest revenue reform. When this question comes more directly before the House, as it will, I will avail myself of the opportunity to consider the whole subject from what to me is a loyal American and common sense view; pausing only to say that a country which could not be enticed or deluded into the arms of the free-trade Delilah can meet the open bluster of a mock Sampson threatening ruin and panic unless the Treasury is unloaded in the interest of foreigners and their American agents. The dropsical Treasury will be relieved without stampeding the people or harming the humblest farmer, artisan, or laborer in our country.

In connection with this question, I will put before the House and the country these letters, which speak for themselves:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with the understanding between us yesterday afternoon, I have to-day consulted with the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not some measure for the reduction of taxation can be agreed upon which will receive the support of all our political friends in the House, and I am directed to request you to submit at your earliest convenience for our consideration some definite proposition.

There is pending upon the Calendar of the House a bill (No. 9702) introduced during the last session by Mr. RANDALL, which proposes legislation upon the subjects of the tariff and the internal revenue, and within the last few days we have been furnished with a copy of a bill which appears to be intended as a substitute to the one now pending, which also relates to both the subjects mentioned above. Whether you desire to make one or both of these bills or some other measure the basis of our action we are not advised, and being anxious to make every effort in our power to secure harmony and concert of action upon these important subjects, we respectfully submit the foregoing.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN G. CARLISLE.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Hon. GEORGE C. CABELL, and others.

MR. RANDALL WILLING.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of January 31, in pursuance of a previous understanding respecting an effort to reach a concurrence on some measure for the reduction of revenue, is now received.

The bill you refer to as a modification of or substitute for House bill 9702 of last session, embracing both tariff and internal-revenue tax reductions, is the measure which the friends with whom we are acting submit for consideration. These gentlemen are prepared to consider in a friendly spirit, and with a view of uniting the party on a revenue-reduction measure, any modification of the proposed bill which the friends of other measures may have to present.

I inclose copy of bill referred to.

Yours, very respectfully,

SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
GEORGE C. CABELL,
For selves and others.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor submitting for our consideration the bill recently prepared as a modification of our substitute for House bill 9702, introduced by Mr. RANDALL at the last session of Congress, was received by me late in the afternoon day before yesterday, and was at once submitted to the gentlemen mentioned in my first communication.

We have considered the measure as carefully as its comprehensive character and the limited time at our disposal would permit, and herewith submit it, together with the modifications and changes which, in our opinion, are necessary in order to do it acceptably, as a compromise measure to those who desire to secure material reductions in tariff taxes.

You will observe that we propose to add several articles to the free-list and to strike out of the bill every provision which increases the rates of duty now imposed by law upon imported goods. These increases are numerous and in some cases very material, as will be seen by the memorandum hereto appended. In our opinion the existing financial condition of the Government and the people does not demand, and would not even excuse, an increase in the rates of taxation upon any article embraced in our tariff or internal-revenue laws, and we can not, therefore, agree to support any measure which has that effect.

We propose also to strike out of the bill all provisions abolishing the internal-revenue tax on manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, weiss beer, fruit brandies, and reducing the tax on distilled spirits from 90 cents per gallon to 60 cents, and the provision abolishing the tax on alcohol for use in the arts and manufactures. In lieu of these repeals and reductions we propose to repeal all statutes and parts of statutes imposing restrictions upon the sale of leaf tobacco by planters and farmers, and to so amend the internal-revenue laws as to dispense with the employment of gaugers and storekeepers at distilleries which mash 5 bushels of grain or less per day, and to permit such distilleries to pay tax only upon their surveyed capacity.

We also propose to so amend the internal-revenue laws as to prevent the destruction of stills and other apparatus seized for alleged violations of the internal-revenue laws, and so as to prevent the issuing of any warrant for alleged violation of those laws unless the affidavit therefor is first approved by the district attorney and written instructions given by him for the issuance of the warrant.

In lieu of the administrative part of the bill submitted to we propose to substitute the bill introduced by Mr. Hewitt, as finally revised and corrected at the Treasury Department and heretofore agreed upon by the Committee on Ways and Means, but not yet reported.

We find, upon examination, that the substitute which we recommend relates alone to the administrative features of the law, while that part of the measure submitted to you by us increases the rates of taxation. While we submit the accompanying modifications of the bill referred to us in the sincere hope that it will meet the approval and secure the united support of our political friends, yet in case it should not be agreed to by you and the gentlemen with whom you are acting, we respectfully submit the following alternative propositions:

First. If the reduction of internal-revenue tax upon distilled spirits is to be made a condition upon which you and the gentlemen acting with you will consent to the reduction of tariff taxes, then we shall insist that the rate of taxation shall be the same upon all kinds of distilled spirits.

Second. If the repeal of the internal-revenue tax upon manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, in whole or in part, is to be made a condition upon which you and the gentlemen with whom you are acting will be willing to agree to a reduction of tariff taxation, then we shall insist that in the same bill an equal amount of reduction shall be made in the revenue derived from customs, and that this reduction shall be made upon such articles as those with whom we are acting shall indicate.

Third. We are willing to submit the measure which you have referred to us to a caucus of our political friends for its consideration, all parties to be bound by such action as it may take upon the subjects to which this bill relates.

Fourth. In case none of the suggestions hereinbefore made are accepted by you and the gentlemen with whom you are acting, we are willing at any time, upon reasonable notice, to support a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 9702, introduced by Mr. RANDALL at the last session of Congress and now on the Calendar.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. CARLISLE.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Hon. GEORGE C. CABELL, and others.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, February 5.

DEAR SIR: At the instance of many Democratic members of the House, we appeal to you most earnestly to recognize, on Monday next, some Democrat who will move to suspend the rules for the purpose of giving the House an opportunity of considering the question of the total repeal of the internal-revenue taxes on tobacco. Many Republican members, we have reason to believe, are anxious to make such a motion. We believe the country is ready for the repeal of these taxes, and that a large majority of the House will so vote when an opportunity occurs. For a Republican to make the motion would give the Republican party all the credit accruing therefrom, and would almost certainly cause the loss to the Democracy of not less than two Southern States at the general election in the year 1888. This is an isolated proposition, and we believe will command more votes than any other measure pending before the House looking toward a reduction in taxation; and favorable action on this proposition will not interfere with other efforts that are being made to reduce the burdens of the people.

Yours, respectfully,

GEORGE D. WISE.
JOHN S. HENDERSON.
SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MR. CARLISLE'S REPLY.

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, February 7, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of the 5th instant requesting me to recognize some Democrat "who will move to suspend the rules for the purpose of giving the House an opportunity of considering the question of the total repeal of the internal-revenue tax on tobacco," was duly received and has been carefully considered.

A week ago, in compliance with the request made by you and other gentlemen, I consulted fully with the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means for the purpose of endeavoring to formulate some measure for the reduction of taxation which would meet the approval of our political friends, and enable us to accomplish something practical in that direction during the present session of Congress. The bill which you then submitted for their consideration proposed legislation upon both branches of our revenue laws, and on the 3d instant it was returned to you with such modifications and changes as were necessary in order to make it acceptable to the gentlemen to whom it had been submitted.

In order, however, that our efforts to secure reduction of taxation might not fail on account of our inability to agree upon a measure in advance, we at the same time submitted certain alternative propositions, some one or more of which we hoped might be acceptable to you. Among other things we proposed to submit the entire subject to a caucus of our political friends, with the understanding that all parties would abide by the results of its action; and in case that course was not satisfactory to you, we informed you that we would at any time, upon a reasonable notice, support a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill 9702, introduced by Mr. RANDALL at the last session. That bill relates to internal revenue, as well as tariff taxes, and proposes to repeal the entire internal-revenue tax on manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars. We have received no response to that communication, and I consider that it would not be proper, under the circumstances, for me to agree to a course of action which would present for the consideration of the House a simple proposition for the repeal of the internal-revenue tax on tobacco, snuff, and cigars, to the exclusion of all other measures for the reduction of taxation.

Sincerely hoping that some plan may yet be devised which will enable the House to consider the whole subject of revenue reduction,

I am, very truly, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE.

Hon. GEORGE D. WISE, Hon. JOHN S. HENDERSON, Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

WASHINGTON, February 8, 1887.

DEAR SIR: We regret exceedingly that you could not see your way clear to give recognition on yesterday to some Democrat to enable him "to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of giving the House an opportunity of considering the question of the total repeal of the internal-revenue tax on tobacco." Your refusal to give this recognition, together with your letter of the 7th instant, deserves more than a passing notice. If two-thirds or more of the House are in favor of such repeal it was a grave responsibility for you to oppose such a large majority of the Representatives of the people. Assuming, however, for the sake of the argument, that the friends of the proposition constitute a less number than two-thirds, their strength is certainly such that they ought to have been permitted to test the sense of the House upon the question, especially since the country is watching with intense interest the action of the House in respect thereto, and the constituents of a large number of the members of the House have been urging them to obtain, if possible, a consideration of this subject.

We do not wish to be misunderstood. We earnestly desire from a party standpoint that recognition should have been given to a Democrat to make the motion, but we would vote cheerfully for the proposition whether made by a Democrat or by a Republican.

You assume in your letter to us that we ignored your communication of the 3d instant, and had deliberately failed to make a response thereto. Our friends did not have an opportunity of considering that communication until Friday evening, the 4th instant. It was of such a character as to require more than a formal reply. We called at your hotel the next day, Saturday, but, through no fault of yours or ours, we did not succeed in obtaining an interview until the day after.

We believed that the friends of the repeal of the tobacco tax were so strong in the House that we would save to the oppressed tax-payers of this country an annual reduction of taxation to the extent of $28,000,000 if the motion for repeal could be made in the House on Monday of this week, the latest day when such a motion, to be effective under the rules, would be in order during the Forty-ninth Congress. The motion, if made during the last six days of the session, would almost certainly be too late to secure favorable consideration for the question in the Senate.

We did not anticipate refusal of recognition for the purpose intended. We understood you to say to us verbally that if you gave to any one of our friends the desired recognition, fair play all round would require you to give other Democrats an opportunity to make a like motion to pass some distinct proposition having a relation to a reduction of the tariff duties. To this we assented. You instanced as one such proposition the putting of salt on the free-list. We think that a revision of the tariff and of the internal-revenue laws can be attained from time to time by reforming the obvious and greater grievances of the two systems, and that we should not refuse to make such reforms because sweeping changes have not been practicable.

The country is expecting to obtain from this Congress relief from the grievous burdens of taxation. If some of us can not get all we want we should take what we can get. Our single proposition for the repeal of the tax on tobacco was not intended and can not fairly be construed as intending to exclude from the consideration of the House "all other measures for the reduction of taxation." We wished to obtain consideration for that proposition, but we were not pressing for the reduction of the internal-revenue taxes to the exclusion of other measures for the revision and reduction of the tariff.

A Democratic caucus can not successfully deal with "the whole subject of revenue reduction" at this late stage of the session. That suggestion comes too late. If the caucus could have controlled the legislation of the Forty-ninth Congress from the beginning the country might have been much better off. If the House was considered competent to deal with the silver question, with the pension question, and with the oleomargarine question, free from the dictation of a Democratic caucus, we think it ought to be competent to deal with the question of a reduction of taxation. The caucus ought not now to be invoked to justify a policy of delay and non-action on this subject.

We sincerely hope "some plan may yet be devised which will enable the House to consider the whole subject of revenue reduction" and revision "in a spirit of fairness to all interests," and in accordance with the letter and spirit of the platform of the national Democratic party adopted at the convention held at Chicago in 1884; and we assure you that we are ready to meet any of our Democratic associates who are prepared to treat with us on such basis.

JOHN S. HENDERSON.
GEORGE D. WISE.
SAM. J. RANDALL.

Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: Your communication returning substitute for House bill 9702, which was submitted for the consideration of yourself and those holding similar views respecting tariff revision, as a basis of compromise, with a view to the passage of some measure to reduce the revenues, has been received, accompanied with various proposed additions and modifications, and, after consultation upon the matters and suggestions therein contained, we respectfully submit the following in reply:

The gentlemen present at our recent conference, representing States South, West, and North, were led to hope that the way had finally been opened for an agreement on a measure that could be generally supported by our political friends, and we sincerely regret, in view of the importance of the adoption by this Congress of some measure that would materially reduce the revenues and prevent the further accumulation of a Treasury surplus, that differences so wide as appear in your communication should still exist.

It was hoped that a basis of compromise could be reached without requiring of any one a sacrifice of principle or of convictions entertained on the subject of tariff and internal taxes. To do this it is evident that those things respecting which radical differences exist in the minds of men must be excluded from a bill intended as a compromise measure. It was believed there could be found room inside of these limits for an agreement on a list of articles to be remitted to the free-list as well as upon many on which the tariff could be reduced, thereby effecting a material reduction of the revenues without injuring or endangering any important industries or impairing the earnings of labor in this country. It is believed yet that such a measure ought to be agreed upon and carried through the House at this session.

As to the items in the proposed bill on which it is claimed that an increase in the tariff would result, we have to say that the apparent increase arises in most instances from a change from ad valorem to specific duties, made in accordance with recommendations from the Treasury Department. The principal object in making duties specific where they are now ad valorem is to prevent the deception and dishonesty practiced by undervaluation; and while, in fixing what is deemed to be fair specific equivalents, and apparent increase may arise, it is believed to be apparent only and not real, as shown in the following references to the several articles referred to in your letter.

However, on all these matters, inasmuch as the proposed bill is not intended to be a revision of the tariff, but a bill for the reduction of revenues and the correction of certain inequalities only, we think there will be no difficulty in agreeing either to strike out of the bill such articles, or to reduce the proposed rates so as to insure no increase in the actual duties in any case. A careful examination of the list referred to shows, we think, that except as to a very few articles you are in error in the statement that the duty is increased.

1. Coal-tar dyes. The proposed rate is no more than the equivalent of the existing rate based upon actual tests of importations as entered at the custom-house. As it is well understood that these articles are generally undervalued, the rates proposed are really a considerable reduction of the present rate if the same was honestly collected.

2. Insect powder. By reference to the reports of the Bureau of Statistics you will see that two rates of duty are not collected on this article (which is not enumerated in the tariff) namely, 10 per cent. and 20 per cent.; whereas the rate we propose is substantially the equivalent of 10 per cent. only, and is therefore a reduction.

3. Logwood and other extracts. These include logwood now paying 10 per cent. and sumac, hemlock, and other extracts now dutiable at 20 per cent. The specific rate per pound proposed in the bill is the equivalent of about 14 per cent. of the aggregate entered value of all these articles.

4. Antimony. The specific rate is substantially the equivalent of the existing rate.

5. Castile soap. While the rate proposed according to the values reported by the Bureau of Statistics is about 1 per cent. only above existing rate, it is considerably less than that rate upon the article when correctly appraised.

6. Horses, cattle, hogs, and sheep. The rates proposed on horses, cattle, and hogs equal 12 per cent., 20 per cent., and 5 per cent. respectively, on the entered value of these animals free and dutiable, and are, therefore, less than the existing rate imposed on those which now pay duty. The rate on sheep is 3 per cent. higher than that now imposed. The average rates proposed on all live animals are less than the present rate.

It is understood, however, that your objection is made chiefly against our proposition to make all these animals dutiable; and yet there is incorporated in the administrative measure you propose to us a provision limiting the exemption on such animals to those only of superior race or blood designed to improve the stock of the United States. This, if properly enforced, would impose a duty on nearly all the animals now imported free, and at a higher rate than we propose.

7. Beans and peas, green or dried. The rate proposed is equal to only about 14 per cent. of the entered value, while these articles not being provided for by name, it is a question of dispute whether they are dutiable at 20 per cent. as garden seeds, or at 10 per cent. as vegetables, both rates being collected at the various custom-houses. In any event the rate proposed is not in excess of 10 per cent. of the true average value during the past year.

8. Beans and peas preserved. The specific rate proposed is less than the existing rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem honestly collected.

9. Ginger and ginger root, and citron candied, &c. The rate proposed on these articles is considerably less than the existing ad valorem rates, even at the entered value of the merchandise.

10. Olive oil. With respect to this article it is to be said that while the proposed rate on salad oil is apparently somewhat higher than the existing rate, it is well known that the entered value does not represent the true value on account of under-invoicing and large reduction for charges, &c.; so that the rate we propose is not in reality above 25 per cent., and is believed to be less. At the same time the rate we propose on the oil for manufacturing purposes is only about 11 per cent. of the value as entered last year.

11 Oranges, lemons, and limes. The proposed rate on oranges in whole or half boxes is the same as at present. This scale of rates is, however, extended so as to include all the sized packages in which this fruit is usually imported, with an additional rate of $1.75 per 1,000, instead of $1.60 in one case, and 20 per cent. in another. There is no substantial increase in the duty, but the rates are made uniform so as to prevent evasions now so common and vexatious. The rates proposed on lemons are a considerable reduction from existing rates, except as to those imported in bulk, which it is well known are brought in in fraud of the revenue. The rate on limes is not increased.

12. Grapes. The rate proposed is not more, but is really less than the existing rate, if fairly collected on the true purchase price of the article.

13. Cherry juice, prune juice, &c. The rate we propose on this merchandise is for the purpose of excluding the importation. This is also the manifest purpose of the provision on page 11 of your administrative bill.

14. Cement. The rate proposed on cement is based on the value of the article in barrels as it is bought and sold, and on that basis is less than the existing rate.

15. Fish glue and isinglass. On this article the rate we propose is less by 2 per cent. than the existing rate upon the entered value, as shown by the statistical reports.

16. Hamburg edgings, &c. While you have accepted the provision for silk and leather gloves which we have adopted as recommended by Assistant Secretary Fairchild you reject his proposition incorporated in our bill for Hamburg edgings, embroideries, &c., the rates on which, as stated by him to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, are now greater than now imposed; but are, according to the statements of experts, considerably less.

17. Jute, hackled. It can not be contended that the rate proposed on hackled jute is an increase, when it is proposed at the same time to make raw jute free, and to impose this duty, equal to less than 10 per cent., upon the article in an advanced condition, simply for the protection of American labor. You are aware that the present rate on raw jute is 20 per cent.

18. Jute yarns. The proposed rate of 1 cent per pound on jute yarns is less than the existing rate of 35 per cent., even upon the entered values of last year, which are known to be abnormally low and less than the foreign market value.

19. Wool of class 3. The equivalents of the existing rates of 2½ cents and 5 cents upon wool of class 3, based upon the entered quantities and values for the last fiscal year, and 26.76 per cent. and 29.14 per cent. respectively. While the equivalent of 3 cents per pound as proposed upon the aggregate entered value of the importations is 23.66 per cent. The question whether wool entered at 2½ cents is not properly dutiable at 5 cents is a constant subject of contention, and many advances are made by the appraisers to the higher rate. If these advances are taken into consideration, it will be found that the rate now collected exceeds that proposed.

With respect to taggers iron, steel, wire rods under No. 5 wire gauge, glucose, cod-liver oil, and seal oil there is an apparent increase of rate based on the entered values. We assert, however, that this results from the fact that the merchandise is enormously undervalued in the invoice, a fact which is proven as to taggers iron and wire rods by a comparison of the reported values of these articles with the value of merchandise of the same general class subject to specific rates. For instance, iron and steel wire rods not lighter than No. 5 pay sixtenths per cent. per pound, equal to 36 per cent. ad valorem. Steel wire rods lighter than No. 5, which cost more to produce and are more valuable, should pay a duty as proposed of eight-tenths per cent. per pound, which is relatively a no higher rate than that imposed on the coarser quality. These wire rods are now nominally dutiable at 45 per cent., and the specific rate provided would be a reduction of the present duty honestly collected.

As to glucose, cod-liver oil and seal oil, duties are now imposed only on part of the value, owing to large reductions for packing, &c., which form a large proportion of the cost of the merchandise. If duties were collected on the full value paid, the apparent increase of rates would disappear.

Bronze powder, clay pipes, cotton and woolen clothing, corsets and worsted cloths. The increased rates proposed on these articles are for the purpose of correcting glaring inequalities in the present law, seriously hurtful to domestic industries engaged in their production.

As to bronze powder, the present duty is only 15 per cent., while the duty on the copper from which it is made is equal to about 47 per cent., which is 17 per cent. more than the ad valorem equivalent of the specific rate proposed.

The rate proposed on clay pipes is considerably less than that imposed on other pipes and smokers' articles. This is an unreasonable discrimination. While you object to the proposed correction of this inequality, you propose, in the administrative bill you have adopted, to extend to certain manufacturers of paper (the existing rate of which is 15 per cent.), used as smokers' articles, the high rate of 70 per cent. now provided for other pipes and smokers' articles.

As to worsted cloths, you are aware of the inequality of the rates imposed by existing law as between such manufactures and woolen cloths. You are doubtless also aware of the injustice to the domestic manufacturers of levying a higher rate of duty upon the wool from which worsted cloths are made than is levied upon that same wool in the manufactured article. The specific rate on these cloths valued at less than 80 cents per pound ranges from 10 cents to 24 cents per pound, and the ad valorem rate is 35 per cent., the latter being intended to cover the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad.

Those in the trade inform us that it requires upon an average fully 3 pounds of raw wool to make a pound of cloth. This wool is subject to a duty of 10 cents per pound, and there is therefore exacted from the domestic manufacturer 30 cents per pound upon his raw materials, which when imported in the form of finished cloth is subject to a duty of only 10 to 24 cents per pound. The result has been the gradual destruction of the worsted manufacturing industry in this country, and enormous and constantly increasing importations of worsted cloths.

We can not comprehend the process of reasoning by which you accept the existing rate of 40 per cent. ad valorem as a proper duty upon common cotton laces, insertings, window curtains, damasks, &c., used by the masses, and insist upon retaining a rate of 10 per cent. lower upon the fine linen laces used by the wealthy, and upon ladies' corsets of all qualities, including those made of silk.

But, we repeat, that differences can be adjusted by reducing further specific equivalents, or by striking them out of the bill and leaving them as they are now.

Second. Certain of the things which you ask to be placed on the free-list, as proposed in the Morrison bill, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means at the last session, including lumber partly worked, all wools, unwashed, washed, and scoured, fish, salt, &c., raise at once those vital questions which have heretofore prevented harmonious action on the tariff question. As many of us believe that such a step, if carried to its logical conclusion, would be destructive of very many of our most important agricultural as well as mechanical industries, and in this matter, representing not only our own convictions but the interests of the people we represent, we could not, of course, make this concession, and we did not expect to be asked to make it.

The importation of wool, even under the existing rates of duties, has increased by nearly $5,000,000 during the last year and manufactures of wool by over $8,000,000, showing that the duty on these articles is rather below than above the competing line.

As to fish, we think it an unhappy time, since this has now become an international question between Canada and the United States, to forestall negotiations by admitting Canadian fish free to the markets of the United States.

With a view to saving our forests we have proposed to admit logs, timber, and lumber unworked free, but in order to secure to labor the same advantages in the lumber industry as in other industries we have proposed to retain a duty on lumber when advanced to any stage of manufacture.

Third. With respect to the proposition to adopt a modification of the Hewitt bill, in place of the administrative sections of the bill proposed by us, it may be stated that the latter contains all of the administrative sections of House bill 7652 (with certain verbal modifications) favorably reported by the Ways and Means Committee at the first session of the present Congress, except the section extending the warehousing period, &c., which we did not adopt. Certain of the provisions since recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury have been added also, together with certain additional provisions which we have decreed needful and think ought to be adopted.

You say that the substitute which you recommend relates alone to the administrative features of the law, while that part of the measure submitted by us increases the rates of taxation. A careful comparison and analysis of the two measures does not, we think, sustain this statement. On the contrary, the administrative measures proposed by us make certain distinct reductions of rates which the bill presented by you does not, and in some instances it increases the rates.

In section 12, page 3, of your measure is a provision including certain coal-tar products, namely: toludine, xylidine, &c., at 20 per cent. ad valorem, which articles are included on the free-list of our bill.

On page 6, in the same section, there are certain provisions for earthenware, tiles, and small glass mirrors by which the present rates are retained on the articles mentioned, whereas on pages 25, 26, and 28 of our bill there are provisions of the same substantial purport, but reducing the rates of duty by 5 per cent. on the several groups of articles, which effects a reduction in the revenue approximating $250,000.

In the same section (page 7) of your bill there is a provision modifying tariff paragraph 216 of the metal schedule by which the present rate of 45 per cent. on manufactures of various metals is retained, while on page 29 of our bill there is a provision modifying the same paragraph in important and needful particulars, and reducing the rate on the same manufactures 5 per cent. ad valorem, thus decreasing the revenue by nearly $200,000 annually.

In the proposed modification of tariff, paragraph 269 of your bill, relating to starch, you retain existing rates of 2 cents and 2½ cents per pound on the articles, while on page 9 of our bill there is a provision, which you accept, reducing the rate on the different kinds of starch to 1 cent and 2 cents per pound respectively. You also propose in the same provision to include as dutiable as starch "all substances produced from the Jatropha manihot." Is it not obvious that it would be impossible for the custom officers to determine whether an article in the form of starch is produced from the Jatropha manihot or from some other source? May not the article on the free-list commercially known as "Tapioca" be in fact the product of the root of the plant referred to?

On page 13 of your bill there is a provision modifying paragraph 790, which limits the free admission of "soap stock" to such as is fit only for use as such. On pages 39 and 40 of our bill there is a provision on the same subject which enlarges the exception to "grease and oils" not only used in soap making, but also to grease and oils used in wire drawing and for stuffing and dressing leather, which will effect a considerable reduction in taxation and revenue.

On pages 33 and 34 of our measure there is a provision relating to cotton goods, the effect of which would be to reduce the rate of duty on certain cotton cloths from the equivalent of from 75 per cent. to 200 per cent. ad valorem to 35 per cent., which provision is not found in your measure.

On page 34 of our bill there is a provision modifying paragraph 336, whereby the rate of duty on certain manufactures of flax, not specially enumerated, is reduced from 40 per cent. to 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The only provisions embraced in our administrative sections, not hereinbefore referred to, by which rates are advanced at all, which are not identical with provisions in your bill, are those relating to "brittannia ware," &c. (page 30), and to sugar drainings and sweepings (page 31), which are unimportant and will have no material effect upon the revenues.

The most important difference between the administrative features of the two measures is the section relating to coverings (section 4 of our bill), which, although embodied in the bill favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means at the last session, is now omitted from your bill. This section provides for the correction of the unfortunate phraseology of section 7 of the tariff act of March 3, 1883. As is well known, that section was intended to exempt from duty charges for the packing-cases used for the transportation of merchandise, but under the rulings and opinions of the Supreme Court and the Attorney-General a large part of the value of the merchandise as purchased by the importer, or as shipped by the consignor, is held to be non-dutiable under that section.

The correction of this legislative blunder was regarded by the Treasury Department as the most important and essential feature of the bill proposed by Mr. Hewitt, and the section adopted in the bill H. R. 7052, before mentioned, was the result of correspondence between Mr. Hewitt and the distinguished Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. C. S. Fairchild, then Acting Secretary, and who has the immediate direction of custom matters. In his letter to Mr. Hewitt discussing the various administrative sections of the "Hewitt bill," Mr. Fairchild says, with reference to the section under consideration:

"Section 4. This section I regard as the most important of the administrative features of the bill so far as relates to the revenue, and as essential to the fair and orderly administration of the tariff. Its purpose is to secure the assessment of duties upon substantially the same basis as it is believed was intended to be established by the section that it repeals, and upon which the Government had levied duties prior to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Obertauffer case. I believe that if it shall become a law it will accomplish this result, and will afford a just, safe, and uniform rule for the assessment of duties on all 'packed' merchandise, save vast trouble to all concerned, prevent litigation, and secure the revenue from immense loss consequent upon the decision mentioned."

In his late report on the "collection of duties," Secretary Manning commends to Congress a consideration of the suggestions made in reports to him on this subject by Assistant Secretary Fairchild and other officers. These reports are appended to the Secretary's report, and contain such facts with regard to the practical operation of the law as it is now construed as to demand an immediate remedy by Congress.

Mr. Fairchild in his report, after citing the many difficulties growing out of the interpretation of the seventh section of the tariff act of 1883, says:

"But the law requiring as it now does the appraising officers to find the market value of articles at the time and place of exportation, and at the same time directing them to find such value in a condition in which the articles are not sold at that time and place, or at any time or place, presents difficulties which call for an amendment of the law. At present every advantage is offered to the unscrupulous and every disadvantage to the conscientious importer."

The testimony of the other officers referred to by Secretary Manning is to the same effect, and shows the impracticability of administering the tariff uniformly and equitably under the existing law, and such is the view held by the chief customs officers and experts at the principal ports.

The Secretary of the Treasury has repeatedly, urgently, and recently recommended to Congress the adoption of specific rates of duty whenever practicable, not only on account of the troubles growing out of the interpretation of the sections of the law above referred to, but generally in the interest alike of orderly administration and of honest traders.

In this view we have, in our proposed bill, changed the rates on a number of articles from ad valorem to specific. This has been done after the most careful and painstaking inquiry, the articles being among those particularly affected by the operation of the section in question. The adoption of these rates would remove the articles from the operation of that section, so that as to them the enactment of the proposed remedial section would in no sense affect the rate of taxation.

It is believed, therefore, that upon careful comparison of the two bills the differences ought not to prevent an agreement on the administrative features of our bill.

4. In striking from the proposed compromise measure the repeal of the tobacco tax, the tax on fruit brandies, alcohol used in the arts, Weiss beer, and the alternative proposition to reduce the tax on all distilled spirits from 90 cents to 60 cents a gallon, you eliminate from the bill all propositions to reduce internal-revenue taxes, except the retail license proposition, and this you do not in terms agree to. The repeal of the tobacco tax, now so urgently demanded, would take off, in round numbers, $28,000,000; the fruit-brandy tax—on the basis of the receipts of last year—$1,400,000. Free alcohol in the arts will also materially reduce the receipts from this source. If the proposition to reduce the tax on all distilled spirits to 60 cents be adopted, a reduction of revenues from this source alone, if proportionate to the reduction of the tax, would amount to over $20,000,000.

In lieu of these provisions in our bill you propose to repeal all statutes imposing restrictions upon the sale of leaf-tobacco by farmers, and to modify the laws relating to storekeepers and gaugers at small distilleries, and the destruction of stills; also to modify the administrative features of the law relating to the issue of warrants, &c. While to all these proposed modifications of the present law we readily assent, we do not see in them alone how the revenue is to be reduced.

Our object, in the matter of internal taxes, is twofold: first, to reduce the revenues, and, second, to relieve the people of vexatious and inquisitorial methods of taxation, and to do this without offering temptations to frauds or to evasions of the law. Furthermore, in proposing the abolition or reduction of internal-revenue taxes, we believe we are acting in harmony with the principles and declarations of the Democratic national platform. The internal-revenue tax in that platform is declared to be a war tax, and the repeal of crushing war taxes is demanded. It has, moreover, been the policy of our Government after each war to abandon this form of taxation first, as evidenced under the administrations of Jefferson and Jackson; and a tax that requires an armed force to execute it can never be popular in a free country.

Fifth. Your demand, that if the repeal of the tobacco tax, or other internal taxes, in whole or in part, are insisted upon by us, then you and those acting with you will insist that "in the same bill an equal amount of reduction in revenue derived from customs" shall be made, if it presented otherwise debatable ground for a compromise, seems to us to forestall such action by your further demand that the reduction in the tariff shall be made upon such articles only as those with whom you are acting shall indicate.

This is equivalent to saying, at the outset, that those holding different views from your own and the views of those acting with you shall be precluded from having any voice in determining what things duties shall be reduced on. But, in the first place, internal taxes and customs have never stood on equal ground in our system of taxation. Tariff taxes have been always our chief reliance for revenues; internal taxes have been the exceptional taxes. As stated in the last national party platform, "from the foundation of this Government taxes collected from custom-houses have been the chief sources of Federal revenue; such then must continue to be."

In the next place we hold it next to impossible to so adjust tariff rates as to secure a definite reduction of revenues such as the repeal or reduction of an internal-revenue tax will produce. When a direct tax is repealed we know what the loss to the revenue will be. So when dutiable articles are placed on the free-list; but a reduction of the rate of duty may be followed by an increase in revenue, and not a decrease.

Between the two extremes of free trade on the one hand and a prohibitory tariff, or no trade on the other, there are three principles and only three, one of the other of which must govern when duties are intelligently laid. These may be represented by three lines, first, a horizontal line, representing an even rate laid upon all imports for the purpose of revenue only; next, an irregular line representing maximum revenue, and the third, the line representing the difference in the cost of production arising out of the different conditions under which production is carried on in this and other countries. This line is always and necessarily above the line of maximum revenue.

Now it is clear that a reduction of duties from the prohibitory line or from the competing, or difference in cost line, to the line of maximum revenue, will necessarily result in an increase of the revenues. A reduction in the tariff below the line of maximum revenue will decrease revenues; but in what proportion it is impossible beforehand to tell; on the contrary, an increase in the tariff rate above the line of maximum revenue will diminish revenues, until the prohibitory line is reached.

We are ready to join in reducing the tariff on all articles that are above the line of difference in cost of production, and on those things on which the rate of duty is now above that line, thus permitting monopolies to be formed to arbitrarily raise prices to the consumer, without benefiting labor. We think it the imperative duty of Congress to reduce the tariff so as to prevent the possibility of monopoly combinations to put up prices above the competing point.

Labor has no interest above the competing line, or line that marks the difference in cost of production; but up to this point wage-earners are vitally concerned, and we believe that only by maintaining duties up to this line on importations in the production of which there is no competition between this and other countries, can labor continue to receive the larger share of what it produces, which our industrial system affords as compared with the industrial systems of other countries. The continued importation of any competing product, notwithstanding the tariff, is proof that the duty is not above the line of difference in cost.

Our national party platform, recognizing this controlling principle, declares that "the necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successively with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages existing in this country."

In the face of this declaration, and in the light of political events which have transpired since the last national convention sustaining this principle, we would not feel justified in departing from it in any revision of our tariff laws, and we certainly do not think, as a political measure, it can properly be asked of us. There is, however, ample reason for a reduction of tariff and a corresponding reduction of the revenues without contravening this important principle. All that is needed, in our opinion, is a disposition to meet the question fairly and deal with it as a matter of business and not of politics.

Sixth. Respecting your proposition to submit the measure proposed by us to a caucus of our political friends, "all parties to be bound by such action as it may take upon the subjects to which the bill relates," is one, it seems to us, that ought not to be asked. The question is not a political question; it is not a party question, for Republicans differ on it as do Democrats; the differences between us are not political differences, but differences on important economic and industrial questions, and we submit that it is not usual in either party, nor right, to attempt to bind men by caucus action on such action, and thereby not only to take from them their right and duty to act in accordance with their own convictions, but compel them to act contrary to their obligations as faithful representatives of the people who have sent them here.

These, too, are the very matters respecting which we are attempting to effect a compromise. In lieu, therefore, of a caucus, we suggest that a committee composed of members representing different phases of the questions involved in the two measures under discussion should be appointed to take up these differences in a spirit of fairness, with a view of coming together on a measure all can support, without either side being called upon to surrender convictions or to prove derelict in their duty to their constituents. We urge the suggestion of a conference the more because many of the gentlemen acting with us in the matter of internal taxes do not agree on all matters pertaining to the tariff.

Seventh. In accordance with your fourth suggestion, that in case no other arrangement is arrived at, that upon reasonable notice a motion be made to go into the Committee of the Whole on House bill 9702, introduced by Mr. RANDALL at the last session of Congress, we have to say that due notice will be given of the time when it is proposed to make such a motion, so that it may be generally known. We can not, however, close this communication without expressing again the hope that an agreement on a measure which out political friends can generally support is not yet impossible.

Respectfully submitted.

Committee.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE and others.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I reserve the residue of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has two minutes remaining. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CABELL. As the House seems to desire a vote on this question, I will content myself with asking the privilege to print some remarks.

Mr. COWLES, Mr. WISE, Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. O'FERRALL made similar requests.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that permission to print remarks in the RECORD on this bill be given to all members desiring to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE]? The Chair hears none; and general leave to print remarks on this bill is granted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. I find, Mr. Speaker, that during the present Congress this House has passed and the President has signed public-building bills for San Antonio, Tex.; El Paso, Tex.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Savannah, Ga.; Huntsville, Ala.; Augusta, Ga.; Owensborough, Ky., and Houston, Tex., while this House has passed and the President has vetoed public-building bills for Duluth, Minn.; Zanesville, Ohio; Sioux City, Iowa; Dayton, Ohio; Portsmouth, Ohio, and Lynn, Mass.

I find furthermore that the State of Ohio, which has had three public-building bills vetoed in this Congress, pays to the Government annually over $12,000,000 of taxes, while the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee, and Texas, fourteen States in all, pay $10,000,000 in taxes, less by $2,000,000 than the amount paid by the single State of Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that under this administration the Democratic States of the South are being very well cared for, and I think their "moonshiners" had better continue to pay taxes on their whisky. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, this bill embraces a good proposition weighted down by one which is objectionable. For the fruit-brandies and certain other distillations I would have consideration; but so far as can here be seen this bill will make it too easy to evade the taxes, too easy to get rid of the burden; and when the clamor has gone by for a revision of the internal-revenue laws with reference to distilled spirits I fear that it will be found that in our hasty legislation on the dying day of a dying Congress we did not know what we did, so that the "moonshiner" crept through in the early daylight.

I think tobacco should be divorced in this case from whisky. Take away the whisky, and I am ready to vote for the tobacco grown from the soil and now burdened by unjust taxation in fifteen States and sixteen hundred counties.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen who advocate this bill have said very little about the interest of the "moonshiner." One of the provisions of this bill proposes to repeal the law which authorizes the destruction of the still and other machinery used by the illicit manufacturer of distilled spirits. I would like to have gentlemen give some reason why the implements of trade of a man engaged in an illegal business ought not to be destroyed. In the case of the counterfeiter, as well as the man who engages in gaming, the implements of his trade are destroyed. Why should not the same rule be applied in the case of the man engaged in the illicit manufacture of whisky?

Mr. COWLES. I might say to the gentleman from Iowa that the implements of the counterfeiter can not be put to a lawful use, whereas the implements of an illicit distillery are equally serviceable in licensed Government distilleries, and can be sold for such use.

Mr. HEPBURN. The destruction of their stills and machinery is one of the most burdensome and effective of all the punishments now inflicted upon these mountain gentlemen. With juries chosen from among their neighbors they can always be assured of the most lenient consideration when personally arraigned. But when the officers of the Government destroy their stills, there is inflicted a punishment which is felt. If such destruction is in any case unjust and without due process of law; if, in fact, the person whose still is destroyed is not engaged in the illicit manufacture of liquor, he has his action against the sureties of the officer and his action against the officer himself for his illegal proceedings.

They now propose these distilleries shall not be destroyed, but that they shall be offered for sale. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, in his district with its scores, possibly hundreds, may be, of illicit manufactories, what man would dare to buy in competition with the owner for this machinery? Under the cunning processes which the gentleman proposes to inaugurate here is the still of an individual which has been confiscated by the law, put up for sale, knocked down to whom and for a nominal sum.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Speaker, we had hoped for a measure of much greater relief from this Congress, but as it has come to this I advocate this bill and trust that it may be passed. It is not the design of the bill to take one cent of tax from any article or subject, nor to deprive the Government of one farthing of revenue. The simple purport and intention of this bill is to rid the internal-revenue system of much of its complexity, smooth its asperities, and relieve it of a part of that unnecessary harshness which is so distasteful and oppressive to the people, as also to lessen the expenses of the Government by the dismissal of useless officials.

The main features of the bill are as follows: To make free the sale of leaf tobacco by farmers, producers, and others; to tax stills which mash 5 bushels or less per day upon their capacity rather than by the gallon system; to abolish storekeepers at such distilleries; to give the benefits of the bonded-warehouse system to fruit distillers; to abolish minimum fines and punishments; to permit the courts to look to the health of prisoners; to prevent the destruction of stills and stilling property by revenue officers; to regulate the issue of warrants in revenue cases, and to repeal the law imposing a tax upon the manufacture of stills.

The propriety of the enactment of these several propositions into law is so evident that it would be a waste of time to discuss it at length. As a matter of fact, the whole internal-revenue system should be abolished. It was inaugurated as a war measure—unwholesome and unsavory in every respect—and should have disappeared along with that unhappy event. The tax upon tobacco and the restrictions thrown around the trade, burdens the product in such way that producers, manufacturers, traders, and consumers alike demand the repeal of the law. The extent and weight of the tax has driven the cultivation of tobacco into States and Territories unsuited to its cultivation, until now immense quantities of inferior tobacco overstock the market, depress the trade, and reduce the price below the cost of production.

This very session of Congress we expected that this tax, if no other, would be abolished. It seemed to many of us who have labored unceasingly to that end that a large majority of the House would vote for a repeal of the tax; but the Ways and Means Committee refused to report a bill favoring the project, and at the opportune moment we were refused the opportunity to secure a vote upon the question. It is, however, only a question of time. The people demand a repeal of the law. The condition of the Treasury warrants the diminution of the revenues to the extent of this tax, and Congress will be forced to take action.

Now in regard to other features of the bill. The proposition to tax small distillers upon the capacity of their several stills is a good one. It will prevent much annoyance to the people, and enable the Government to dismiss many storekeepers and other officials whose salaries and cost more than eat up the amount of tax secured. No frauds can be practiced upon the revenue by this change, for when the Government gets the tax upon every gallon of spirits which a still is capable of producing, it surely gets all to which it is entitled. The sections in the bill giving the benefits of the bonded warehouse system to fruit distillers, abolishing minimum fines and punishments, and allowing the courts to make provision for the comfort and health of prisoners are so evidently just that I will not stop to discuss them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is only one other provision of this bill of which I need to particularly speak—that in regard to the destruction of stills and distilling property. Under the law as it now stands a distiller may be arrested and his property seized for a violation or fancied violation of the law. If in the opinion of the officer making the arrest and seizure the still and stilling property are worth less than $500, he may, and generally does at once, proceed in the most arbitrary manner to dispose of his entire capture. In actual practice in many parts of the country the officer does not pretend to carry the property seized to a place of safety to await proceedings of forfeiture by a court, but takes upon himself the functions of court, jury and sheriff, decides that his prisoner is guilty and starts him to jail, adjudges that the property is of less value than $500, and forthwith proceeds to cut up and destroy the still and other property, except spirits on hand, which last is borne off in triumph if not in profit to the Government. Frequently in my country it has been shown by judicial investigation that notwithstanding the capture of the distiller and the destruction of his property, the man was not guilty of any violation of law nor his property liable to forfeiture.

Mr. Speaker, this is the most irritating and outrageous law perhaps upon our statute-books. It is clearly against right, if not unconstitutional, and wholly opposed to the genius and spirit of our laws and institutions. To seize a man's property, to confiscate and destroy it oftentimes in his sight, before any judicial determination as to his guilt, or judgment of forfeiture in a proper court, is a high-handed abuse of power which ought never to be tolerated in a law and liberty loving country. It is time enough to punish a citizen after his guilt is shown, and to destroy or confiscate his property after fair judicial proceedings. This bill presents a remedy for the great abuse complained of, and should receive a hearty support upon that ground, if no other.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this country have borne enough and suffered enough of the evils of this internal-revenue system. Since 1862, when the law was enacted, the Government has wrung largely over two thousand million dollars out of the people through the workings of this bad system.

My own poor old State of Virginia, notwithstanding her desolation, poverty, and distress, has paid into the Federal Treasury not less than $113,000,000 of internal taxes, and yet the proposition is to still continue these harassing exactions in their full extent and vigor. I deny that this bill is in the interest of "moonshiners," as some gentlemen have unjustly charged. It is in the interest of law, humanity, and justice. The arguments of several gentlemen on the other side of the House—and I am glad that every speech in opposition to the passage of this measure has come from the Republican side of the House—are neither just, logical, nor in good taste.

Especially is this so in the case of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], when he charged that "under this administration the Democratic States of the South are being well cared for, and I think that their 'moonshiners' had better continue to pay taxes on their whisky." I hardly wonder that the gentleman should entertain such ideas. So long as the great burden of taxation is kept upon the "Democratic States of the South," so long will his section profit by it. The justice and inconsistency of the gentleman's position will be appreciated when it is remembered that his own State paid last year only $378,787.72 of internal taxes. My State paid about $3,000,000. In fact the records will show that the State of Virginia paid last year nearly three times as much of these taxes as five of the New England States together—the gentleman's State included—and year by year for many years has done the same thing. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this bill will pass.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 139, nays 112, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—139.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended, and the bill was not passed.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For this day:

Mr. FISHER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. WAIT.

On this vote:

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. FELTON.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

SALLIE ANN BRADLEY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I call up for consideration the veto message of the President on the bill (H. R. 5394) granting a pension to Sallie Ann Bradley; and pending that motion I will yield for a few moments to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] who wishes to submit a motion, if I may be permitted afterwards to resume the floor.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. A conference report?

Mr. McKINLEY. I wish to submit an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKINLEY. The House having now, under a recognition to suspend the rules, spent nearly an hour in the consideration of a bill to encourage distilling, I desire to know if I can be recognized at this time to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 194) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools—what is known as the Blair bill. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from California, as the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair understands, yielded the floor to him; but the gentleman from Maryland rises, as he states, to submit a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. A report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman; that is not privileged over the matter called up by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I had been recognized and yielded the floor temporarily. I hold it for the purpose of pressing the consideration of this bill, and therefore I deny the right of the gentleman to take me off the floor to submit a report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that the matter called up by the gentleman from Maryland is not privileged over that called up by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, now I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, which is a privileged matter.

Mr. COWLES. I want to move to suspend the rules to pass a bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. COWLES. Then I ask unanimous consent to submit a motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has called up a privileged matter.

Mr. PARKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER. I understand that recognitions outside of preferred or privileged matters are in the discretion of the Speaker. Now, I wish to know whether that distinction will be observed by merely recognizing gentlemen who succeed in getting in first by attracting the attention of the Chair, or whether the Speaker will recognize the subject-matter of legislation to be presented, and thus exercise his discretion in the matter of recognitions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PARKER. It is a matter which affects, if the Speaker pleases, the right of every member on the floor with reference to getting recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is utterly impossible, as the gentleman from New York must know, for the Chair to recognize all gentlemen at once. All the Chair can do is to recognize one gentleman at a time. The gentleman from Ohio has been recognized, he having called up a privileged matter, and the regular order is demanded on all sides of the House. There is no other matter before the House.

Mr. PARKER. But the right of recognition remains with the Speaker.

Mr. LONG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MORROW. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have yielded the floor to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONG. During the last days of the session are not motions to suspend the rules the regular order?

The SPEAKER. Except as to privileged matters.

Mr. LONG. Then the gentleman from Ohio yielded the floor to the gentleman from California, who wishes to submit a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Ohio stated distinctly that he did not yield the floor except temporarily, and that he would resume the floor again and press the measure he has called up. He yielded the floor temporarily to the gentleman from California. But the regular order is now demanded.

Mr. LONG. But he yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to distinctly state that he yielded the floor to allow the gentleman from California to submit a motion, but would retain it himself for the purpose of pressing the privileged matter he has called up. The regular order has been demanded, which of course would prevent the Chair from recognizing the gentleman from California; for if the right were given to any gentleman to call up a privileged matter, and on that take the floor and yield to another gentleman to bring in other matters not privileged, it is evident that that could be carried on to the exclusion of all other business. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed in the regular way if gentlemen will preserve order upon the floor.

Mr. MORROW. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORROW. I learn that the gentleman from Ohio is willing to allow me to proceed with the matter I have in hand, provided after that is disposed of he will be permitted to resume the consideration of the bill he has called up.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman can not yield the floor in that way.

The SPEAKER. The matter the gentleman from Ohio has indicated is privileged, and can be called up at any time, except there be conference reports pending or presented, which, under the rule of the House, are privileged to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to dispose of this question, and my purpose is this: I ask leave to place in the RECORD a true statement from the official documents relating to the veto of the private pension bill of Sallie Ann Bradley. I do not desire now to take up the time of the House by argument, either to make a speech or read these documents; nor do I desire in this connection, if the privilege is given me to print in the RECORD the remarks I wish to submit on this subject, to insert or publish anything that relates to anything else other than the bill under consideration and that alone, independent of everything else.

If I can have unanimous consent to extend my remarks within that compass in the RECORD I will now ask for a vote on the passage of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill under the terms stated by the gentleman. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MATSON. I only wish to say that this bill was first vetoed by a Senator, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress, who placed his objections on precisely the same grounds stated by the President in his veto.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, few instances of cold-blooded cruelty of one human being against another will compare with the wrong done to the beneficiary under this bill by the veto of the President. I do not desire to detain the House in the closing hour of its session by any lengthy statement. The condition of the poor woman as given by herself, and the undisputed facts from the records of the Government make a speech more eloquent and more appealing to the sensibilities of the American people than any which I can utter. The bill of the House is very simple. It was introduced into the House on the 15th day of March, 1886, and it is in the following words:

An act granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally Ann Bradley, widow of Thomas J. Bradley, late a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers.

Passed the House of Representatives March 12, 1886.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions which accompanied the bill was the unanimous report of that committee, and was made by my colleague [Mr. ELLSBERRY], who had personal knowledge of all the facts in the case of this poor woman, he being a resident of her own county, and being acquainted with her family history. The report written by him and agreed to by every member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is as follows:

Sally Ann Bradley is the widow of Thomas J. Bradley, who served as a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, from June 13, 1861, to October 9, 1865. He was pensioned on account of shell wound of back received at Murfreesborough, Tenn., January 2, 1863, and died October 21, 1882. His death is not entirely chargeable to his military service, and consequently his widow has no title before the Pension Office.

A petition signed by nearly three hundred of the best citizens of the county in which she resides, some of whom have known her and her deceased husband for many years before the late war, sets forth that she is seventy years of age, is as helpless as an infant, and left without means of support or friends able to assist her.

Having been left destitute by the death of her husband, who served faithfully for more than four years in defense of his country, and who while in such service contracted a disability which necessarily impaired his ability to provide for himself and wife a comfortable support in their declining years, your committee are clearly of opinion that she should not now be abandoned to the charity of the world, but be, in a measure at least, provided for in her old days, and therefor report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill having been passed unanimously in this House, the Senate Committee on Pensions made a unanimous report in favor of the passage of the bill, and used the following language in addition to setting out the report of the House committee:

An examination of the papers in the case verifies the foregoing statements, and the claim is strengthened, in the opinion of the committee, by the fact that four of the claimant's sons followed their father in the war for the Union, two dying on the field of battle, and the other two returning home cripples for life through wounds received.

The committee, believing this to be a very worthy case, recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate passed the bill by a unanimous vote, and thereupon Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, returned the bill to the House of Representatives on the 6th day of July, just as the roar of the cannon and the sound of the music that celebrated the birth of the liberties of this country were dying away, with the following cold-blooded, illogical, and unreasoning message:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill 5394, entitled "An act granting a pension to Sallie Ann Bradley."

The husband of this proposed beneficiary was discharged from the military service in 1865, after a long service, and was afterwards pensioned for gunshot wound.

He died in 1882. The widow appears to have never filed a claim for pension in her own right.

No cause is given of the soldier's death, but it is not claimed that it resulted from his military service, her pension being asked for entirely because of her needs and the faithful service of her husband and her sons.

This presents the question whether a gift in such a case is a proper disposition of money appropriated for the purpose of paying pensions.

The passage of this law would in my opinion establish a precedent so far-reaching, and open the door to such a vast multitude of claims not on principle within our present pension laws, that I am constrained to disapprove the bill under consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July, 6, 1886.

The object of the present motion, Mr. Speaker, is to pass this bill, this statement to the contrary notwithstanding. I desire that this old lady shall be heard in her own behalf by the American people, and so I take the liberty of introducing here a letter which she wrote to me upon the receipt by her of the news that her bill had been vetoed. It is in almost as good language as the President's veto message, and contains an appeal to the American people stronger and better put than the cold-blooded atrocity of his message. This is her letter:

BENTONVILLE, OHIO, July 12, 1886.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: I see in the Daily Gazette of the 7th, also Enquirer and Gazette of the 10th, of the President vetoing my claim along with a good many there. I am truly sorry that he has done this when I need it so bad, and especially am I sorry in the Enquirer such a piece as this I send with letter. Speaking of unworthy beneficiaries getting on the pension-rolls, I had no chance before the Pension Office and sent in a petition with two hundred and eighty-six names of our citizens, and all of our very best citizens were on it and think I ought to have it. I also sent ten or twelve sworn names some three months ago showing that I was in needy circumstances and ought to draw a pension. I have not sent in any unworthy testimony. What I have written to you is true, and I do not know of any one here that is opposed to me getting a pension but four or five stay-at-home men that should have went out.

Is this the way they are going to treat an old gray-headed woman who is near seventy years of age and not able to be up but very-little more than half of the time, and furnished five of my family to go to the army? Husband and four sons gave them seventeen years' service; there is but very few families that have done more for the Government in time of their trouble than mine did, and now in my declining years and feeble health, when I have not friends able to help me along, and ask the Government for a little support to sustain life a little while, they refuse me. If Mr. Cleveland had been out in front during the war he likely would have a little feeling for soldiers, and especially for their poor widows. The Enquirer also states that at the Forty-seventh Congress a Republican committee of the Senate said I ought not to have a pension, and this is the reason the President said the same. I would just say that the House passed it the week before they adjourned to go to the convention at Chicago and it did not go to the Senate then, for I wrote to Mr. SHERMAN right away and he wrote me that they would not have time as they would adjourn, and that he seen the committee and that they had promised to act on it early in the next session, but I don't think there was anything said or done until this last Congress and Senate, and they have both of them passed it like men.

I do not know what to do if you can not pass it over his head. I do not want to go to the poor-house after doing so much for the Government, as I have not friends that are able to keep me, and I need assistance bad. I am nearly destitute of clothing and scarce of provisions. It looks like there might be enough good men in the House and Senate to pass these vetoes over his head. He is faring sumptuous with his fine living from the Government, and his $50,000 a year, and thousands of poor soldiers and widows and children suffering for something to eat and clothes to keep them warm and to hide their nakedness. Should you not be able to get it passed what would be the proper way for me to pursue—try it again, or not? Could you not have that section of the law changed, through the members, before you adjourn, so the widow women can come in if their husbands should happen not to die with the disease they draw on, that they could still draw; you know that it is taking it from them when they need it worse than any other time, when their support is gone. Please try to get it changed, and these bills passed over his head, and may the Lord bless you for your kindness.

SALLY ANN BRADLEY.

General CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Washington, D. C.

Shortly after the happening of this unfortunate veto a Democratic newspaper in Ohio assailed the old lady and made charges against her, and it was those publications which called out the letter of Mrs. Bradley.

The following I quote from a newspaper published in Hillsboro', Ohio, the editor of which was personally acquainted with Thomas J. Bradley, and knew of his service in the army:

Among the pension bills voted was one granting $8 per month to Sally Ann Bradley. Her husband and four of her boys were Union soldiers. Two of the boys were shot dead on the battlefield, another had his arm torn off by a shell, and the fourth lost an eye. Her husband was in the Twenty-fourth Ohio—a fighting regiment, as Burch Foraker's friends can tell you, and afterwards was in the ranks of the Eighteenth Ohio, and fell terribly wounded in "Pap" Thomas's fight before Nashville. He lived, however, and drew a pension until 1880 of $4 a month, when worn out with wounds and premature old age he went to camp upon the other shore. His wife, Sally Ann, was poor; her boys were disabled and could not support her, and she was sent to the infirmary. She applied for a pension, but the law would not allow it as it could not be proven that the old soldier's death was caused solely by his wounds.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions upon this veto message of the President is as follows, and it is to uphold this report that I now address the House:

The message correctly states that the claimant has not applied to the Pension Office for a pension. As her husband's death is not directly chargeable to his military service, she could not be benefited by making such an application, as it would meet there with a prompt rejection under the provisions of the general pension laws.

Congress has taken favorable action on this woman's application, not because her husband's death is directly chargeable to his military service, but because by his death she is left in her old age to depend upon the charity of others not legally bound to aid in her support. Her husband served long and faithfully in defense of his country, and at date of his death was a sufferer from a wound received in line of battle. But it was not only the husband who responded to the call of his country. Four sons likewise entered its service. Two died while in service; the others returned home disabled for life, and, in consequence thereof, unable to assist claimant.

It is for these sacrifices that Congress deemed it proper to go outside of the general pension laws and relieve this old and helpless woman by placing her upon the pension-rolls during the last few days of her life.

Believing that the action of the House in favorably considering the bill was eminently just and proper, your committee recommend its passage, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Speaker, this is a meritorious woman, and I have the honor to permit her to be heard still further in her own behalf, and to that end I append her affidavit made on the 4th of December last. It is as follows:

THE STATE OF OHIO, Adams County, ss:

Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Sally Ann Bradley, who, being by me first duly sworn, says:

That she is the identical person she represents herself to be; that she is the widow of Thomas J. Bradley, who enlisted in the United States service in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on the 27th day of May, A. D. 1861; that he served with said company and regiment until discharged by reason of re-enlistment as veteran; that he was wounded at the battle of Stone River on the 31st day of December, 1862; that after serving a time as veteran his company (D) was transferred to the Eighteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, commanded by Col. C. H. Grosvenor; that he served through the entire war, and before he died (October 21, 1882, at home) he was a pensioner at the rate of $6 per month.

Robert J. Bradley, son of Thomas J. and Sally Ann Bradley, enlisted in Company I, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on the 4th day of July, 1861, and was discharged on the 26th day of December, 1863, by reason of re-enlistment as veteran, and was discharged by reason of orders from the War Department June 22, 1865, having served through the war. He was twice wounded in the battles before Atlanta. He died in New Orleans a few years ago with yellow fever. Robert J. Bradley served three years in the regular Army after the war was over in Company G, Fifth United States Regiment of Infantry. Enlisted the 19th day of May, 1866. Discharged at Fort Hays, Kans., 19th day of May, 1869.

James W. Bradley, son of Thomas J. and Sally Ann Bradley, enlisted when very young in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on March 7, 1864, was afterwards transferred with his company to the Eighteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, was wounded and permanently disabled in left forearm at the battle of Nashville, Tenn., December 15, 1864, and was discharged on account of wounds at Camp Dennison, Ohio, on the 15th of June, 1865.

Casey B. Bradley, son as above stated, enlisted in Company H, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, August 13, 1864, was discharged June 26, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn. He had also served, prior to above enlistment, six months in the Tod Scouts, and was discharged therefrom at Camp Dennison, Ohio. He died at home December 26, 1872.

John G. Bradley, son as above stated, enlisted September 20, 1864, in Company I, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry and was discharged July 7, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn., the war being over.

Sworn to before me and signed in my presence, and I further certify that the affiant is to me well known and entitled to credit.

This 4th day of December, A. D. 1886.

WILLIAM W. BAIRD,
Notary Public.

In forwarding to me the foregoing affidavits, David Thomas, one of the officials of Adams County, Ohio, forwarded the following letter:

WEST UNION, OHIO, December 4, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have drawn statement of Sally A. Bradley. Most of the facts are personally known to myself, especially as to Thomas J. and James W., as they were members of my company (D) of the Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. If I can be of any service to you in aiding the wife and mother in her dependent condition you may feel at liberty to command me. They were all loyal and true soldiers, and the Government had the benefit of their services, and it would only be an act of justice to provide for the old lady who gave four of her boys and a husband for its preservation.

Yours truly,

DAVID THOMAS.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, M. C.

While on the subject, and lest there may be some member of this House who doubts the allegation as to the service of this family, I have been at the pains to procure the record of each one of these soldiers in the War Department, and here they are:

First, Thomas J. Bradley.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1887.

Respectfully returned. Thomas J. Bradley was enrolled on the 13th day of June, 1861, at Camp Jackson, in Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, to serve three years or during the war, and mustered into service as a private on the 16th day of June, 1861, at Camp Jackson, in Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, to serve three years or during the war. On the muster-roll of Company D of that regiment dated August 31, 1861, he is reported present; same to June 30, 1862, July and August, 1862; absent, sick at Murfreesboro', Tenn., since August 1, 1862; September and October, 1862, present; November and December, 1862 (dated January 14, 1863), absent in hospital, wounded before Murfreesboro', Tenn., January 2, 1863, January and February, 1863; absent wounded since January 2, 1863; March and April, 1863, present; same to December 31, 1863; January and February, 1864, not on file. Return January, 1864, does not report him absent. February, 1864, does not account for Company D. Roll, March and April, 1864, present. Re-enlisted as veteran volunteer January 1, 1864, Whiteside, Tenn., detachment roll of men attached to the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, dated June 30, 1864, present; July and August, 1864, not on file; roll of Company D, Eighteenth Ohio Volunteers (to which transferred) for September and October, 1864, present; same to June 30, 1865, July and August, 1865; absent, sick in hospital, Chattanooga, Tenn., since July 7, 1865. Mustered out with company, October 9, 1865, at Augusta, Ga.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General,
By H. CLAY WOOD.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1887.

Respectfully returned. Robert Bradley was enlisted on the 19th day of May, 1866, at Cincinnati, Ohio, and was assigned to Company G, Fifth Regiment of Infantry; discharged May 19, 1869, by expiration of service at Fort Hays, Kans.; a private; record clear.

John G. Bradley.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1887.

John G. Bradley was enrolled on the 20th day of September, 1864, at Manchester, Ohio, in Company I, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, to serve one year or during the war, and mustered into service as a private on the 21st day of September, 1864, at Cincinnati, Ohio, in Company I, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, to serve one year or during the war. On the muster-roll of Company I of that regiment for the months of November and December, 1864, he is reported present. January and February, 1865, present. Appointed regimental wagon-master by R. S. O. No. 12, December 26, 1864. March and April, 1865, present. Regimental returns for May and June, 1865, do not report him absent. Mustered out a private with company July 7, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General,
By H. CLAY WOOD.

These are the official records of what this family has done to save the country.

The President of the United States signed a bill this year to give pensions which will amount to more than $4,000,000 per annum to men who fought to destroy this Union, many of whom are rich and independent, but he refuses to give this mother of four Union soldiers, the widow of a dead soldier who died of his wounds received in battle in part, a pension of $144 a year.

Read the record of this family. I admit that it appears that one of them was tried by court-martial and sentenced to be punished, but it also appears that the general commanding, who knew of the service of this man, refused to permit him to suffer the penalty of the sentence and remitted it.

I have felt a great interest in this case. Thomas J. Bradley served in my own regiment, and his son was wounded in my presence at the battle of Nashville. That this woman should be consigned to the poor-house and die the death of a pauper because the President of the United States knows of no law to give her a pension is, to my mind, an outrage so shocking that I have no language to describe it.

This is her only remedy, for under the existing statute she can not prove that her husband died of the disease for which he was pensioned. This is her only remedy, for the President has vetoed the dependent parents bill which Congress passed at this session, and under the crack of his whip enough Democrats turned around and voted to uphold the veto to defeat the passage of the bill. It is no wonder, Mr. Chairman, that the soldiers of the Northwest arose in revolt against such tyranny as this last year has manifested. It is no wonder that seat after seat now occupied by Democrats on the other side of this House are to be occupied by Republicans in the next Congress. The bill and the veto, and the report of the committee, and the few imperfect remarks made at the time, were circulated among the soldiers of the Northwest, and upon the tongue of every man discussing this administration and its relation to the soldiers of the country was the name of poor old Sally Ann Bradley.

Democratic newspapers sought to sneer at me during the campaign for my advocacy of this woman's claim. It was used as a term of reproach, and hurled at me as I traveled about my district. The answer came in the form of a majority 500 greater than any Republican has received in that district since 1866.

Mr. Chairman, while I live I will be found championing the cause of the widow and orphan and disabled soldier of the war. I would rather be rated as the champion of them than as the champion of the bondholders of Wall street. I would rather stand in my place here and protest against the wrongs that are done them than to be a favorite at the White House. I would rather discharge my duty to the men who have placed their confidence in me than to be called a "good fellow" and a dispenser of patronage by an administration that can crush helpless women of this country under circumstances like these.

Her remedy, Mr. Chairman, lies in the action of this House. Give it to her by the passage of this bill over the veto, and her declining years will be cheered and brightened and made hopeful. Refuse it, and she goes down under the dark impenetrable wave of poverty and despair. She will die in a poor-house, and up from the ruin and filth and degradation of a county infirmary will go up to God the soul of the mother of four brave men; the wife of a dead Union soldier, whose country in the hour of her distress repudiated its obligation, scorned her appeal for charity, and threw her out upon a cold, bitter, and heartless world.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5394) granting a pension to Sallie Ann Bradley.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally Ann Bradley, widow of Thomas J. Bradley, late a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill? On this question the Constitution requires the yeas and nays to be taken.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to have the message of the President read.

Objection was made.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to have the message printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The message is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill 5394, entitled "An act granting a pension to Sallie Ann Bradley."

The husband of this proposed beneficiary was discharged from the military service in 1865, after a long service, and was afterwards pensioned for gunshot wound.

He died in 1882. The widow appears to have never filed a claim for pension in her own right.

No cause is given of the soldier's death, but it is not claimed that it resulted from his military service, her pension being asked for entirely because of her needs and the faithful service of her husband and her sons.

This presents the question whether a gift in such a case is a proper disposition of money appropriated for the purpose of paying pensions.

The passage of this law would in my opinion establish a precedent, so far-reaching, and open the door to such a vast multitude of claims not on principle within our present pension laws, that I am constrained to disapprove the bill under consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 6, 1886.

VISITORS TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Hon. JOSEPH WHEELER, Hon. C. M. ANDERSON, and Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH on the part of the House of Representatives as visitors to the United States Military Academy, to attend the next annual examination of cadets at said academy.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Hon. HILARY A. HERBERT, Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS, and Hon. NATHAN GOFF, jr., on the part of the House of Representatives as Visitors to the United States Naval Academy to attend the next annual examination of cadets at said Academy.

SALLIE ANN BRADLEY.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 122, not voting 74; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

SITE FOR PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1255) to authorize the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., and to pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to appoint three competent citizens to act as commissioners on behalf of the United States to select and purchase a piece of ground in the city of San Francisco upon which shall be erected a suitable building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices.

SEC. 2. That immediately after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall notify each person selected as aforesaid of his appointment under this act, requesting prompt notice of his acceptance or non-acceptance thereof, and in the latter case shall appoint some other prominent, disinterested citizen in his place, and upon their consent to act shall give notice to the commissioners to proceed as soon as practicable to examine such pieces of ground as shall be judged most suitable for the site of said building, in said examination having due regard to the present needs and future accommodation of the inhabitants, to security against accidents, and the convenience of the public service at all times. They shall negotiate an option of purchase for each site so examined, at the lowest practicable price, decide upon and recommend for purchase said sites in the order of their relative merits, and submit a report thereof, with a proper description of each, to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, in conjunction with the Postmaster-General and Attorney-General, shall immediately decide which site is to be preferred, if any is to be preferred; and if the Secretary of the Treasury, Postmaster-General, and Attorney-General shall approve of any such site and the title thereto, then the commissioners shall be notified thereof, who shall then complete the purchase of the site so chosen: Provided, That the site so selected shall be of such dimensions as to leave an open space of not less than 40 feet in width, including streets and alleys, around the building to be constructed thereon: Provided, further, That the sum to be paid therefor shall not exceed $350,000.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for making said purchase: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to said site shall be vested in the United States and the State of California shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STORM. I ask for a second.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MORROW. I reserve my time.

Mr. STORM. I ask to have the report read in my time.

The report [by Mr. HENLEY] was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred House bill No. 174, beg leave to submit the following report:

For ten years the people of San Francisco have been petitioning Congress for the erection of a public building in a convenient place in that city for the purpose of accommodating the large postal business of the place, the United States courts, and other Federal offices.

These requests have been made by means of urgent petitions from leading business men, resolutions of the chamber of commerce and board of trade of the city, the municipal government of San Francisco, and the State Legislature of California. The matter has been thoroughly investigated by several committees of Congress, and the erection of the building always recommended, but the bills introduced for that purpose have failed to pass both Houses, not for want of merit, but because they were not reached on any of the calendars in time to obtain final Congressional approval.

It appears that the building now used for the post-office is 134 feet long, 66 feet wide, and three stories high. It was erected thirty years ago on piles driven into the soft ground on the margin of the bay. This insecure foundation has naturally caused the building to settle and crack, and on two occasions, first in 1865 and again in 1868, it was so badly shaken by earthquakes as to have become dangerous to life and property. Through the economy of the Government these defects were partially remedied by securing the shattered walls with connecting iron rods, and the unsightly cracks were concealed with plaster and paint, but after twenty years of natural deterioration in the materials these temporary expedients no longer afford even an apparent security to those who occupy or frequent the building.

If these objections were all that pertained to the structure, they might be remedied in a measure by further repairs, but that portion of the building devoted to post-office business is badly lighted and ventilated, and so contracted in space and inconvenient in every way as to be unfit for the transaction of the rapidly increasing postal business of the city.

The location is in an out-of-the-way corner of the city, far removed from the business center, and so distant from the general lines of travel that but few people pass it daily, except those engaged in the shipping interests of that particular locality. So manifest had this inconvenience become, that as long ago as 1878 the Postmaster-General called the attention of Congress to the necessity for a new post-office building. In his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, he says:

"The building used in San Francisco for post-office purposes I found from personal inspection to be entirely inadequate to the necessities of the service. San Francisco is the great commercial city of the Pacific coast. Its business and population are constantly increasing, thus adding to the embarrassments inflicted upon the postal service by its present insufficient accommodations. As several years are usually required for the erection of such buildings, and the necessity of the case is urgent, I feel constrained to call the attention of Congress to the subject for such inquiry and action as it may deem proper."

A year later the Postmaster-General, in a letter written upon the subject, again strongly urged the immediate action of Congress in affording relief to the increased postal business of that city. In the year 1878 the gross postal receipts of the San Fancisco post-office were $412,349.31. For the year ending June 30, 1885, the gross receipts were $502,303.06, showing a steady increase in business, which must necessarily be transacted in contracted and inconvenient quarters.

In money-order business the San Francisco post-office ranks as the fourth office in importance in the United States.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, the following money-order transactions are reported by the Post-Office Department: Number of money-orders and postal-notes issued, 60,928; amount of money-orders and postal-notes issued, $1,082,745.88; number of money-orders and postal-notes paid 201,389; amount of money-orders and postal notes paid, $3,432,504.99; fees received, $9,598.25; number of deposits received from other offices, 17,441; amount of deposits received from other offices, $3,786,410.54.

In the upper stories of this same building is conducted the customs-revenne business of one of the largest and most important seaports of the United States.

The customs receipts at San Francisco for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, were $6,542,243.69; the internal-revenue receipts were $1,983,280; the exports were $38,115,624, and the imports were $35,040,350.

San Francisco ranks as the third city in the Union in the value of her imports, sixth in the value of her exports, fifth in her total trade, and fourth in the amount of customs revenue paid to the General Government.

The clearing-house operations at San Francisco for the year ending October, 1885, amounted to the enormous sum of $562,640,183.

The committee find further that on the same lot belonging to the United States there is a brick building called the "Appraisers' store," in which are located the appraisers' offices, the United States internal-revenue offices, the United States district and circuit courts, the United States Coast Survey, and other officers of the Federal Government.

Like the post-office, the location of the United States courts in this building is inconvenient and out of the way. The other courts of the city, and the State courts, located in San Francisco, are over a mile distant in the direction in which the city is being extended.

These facts respecting the volume and value of the United States postal and other Government business, and the prospective magnitude of the public interest centering in this growing metropolis of our trade on the Pacific Ocean, convince your committee that ample and immediate provision of grounds and buildings for the accommodation of the post-office and the Federal courts should be made at San Francisco for the following reasons:

1. The building in use is both unsuitable and inadequate to the present needs of the postal service.

2. The location is nearly a mile out of the proper place for a post-office building. When a city like San Francisco pays the Government over a half a million of dollars annually for postage it has a right to expect that in the location of the post-office the Government will consult somewhat the convenience of its citizens.

3. The ground on which the present building stands, while quite out of the way for a post-office site, is well enough adapted for the customs-revenue service, and that portion of the building into which the post-office is now cramped is needed for that service.

4. That portion of the appraisers' store in which the United States courts are now located is required for the accommodation of the officers connected with the revenue service.

Your committee therefore have no doubt of the propriety of making immediate provision for procuring a suitable site in San Francisco upon which to erect a building for the accommodation of the post-office and United States courts, and they recommend the passage of Senate bill 1255 for that purpose as a substitute for House bill 174.

Mr. STORM. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. STORM. I yield that time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

I call the attention of the Chair to whom it is the gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded, so that the Speaker may recognize me when he sees me again, because I want recognition. [Laughter.]

If the House should suspect for a moment that I violate that rule which requires a speaker to speak to the question at issue, I ask members to remain quiet and I will come to the point before I get through with my remarks.

I just wish to call attention of the House to the fact that I have here a small bill appropriating only $10,000 to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss. This is a matter, sir, that is demanded by every Grand Army post throughout the Union; and any man who stands in the way when I get up here to ask the House for unanimous consent, any man who says "Regular order, Mr. Speaker," or "I object," that man, sir, takes the risk of branding himself and his offspring and his children's children throughout all future generations in the estimation of the Grand Army of the Republic. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know there are a great many gentlemen here wanting to be recognized, but I do claim that as this is the only bill local to my district which has been presented in this Congress, and as this is the first time I have ever asked unanimous, magnanimous consent to do anything in this House, and also in view of the fact that I have displayed unexampled patriotism here for the last week or ten days when the galleries have been crowded with people and there have been so many favorable opportunities for the display of my eloquence, yet I have suppressed it all in order to avoid an extra session [laughter]—in view of all this, I do think, sir, that I am entitled to some little consideration at the hands of this House. [Great laughter.] And now, sir, I am going to make a proposition to the House. When the House gets through with the bill under consideration I want unanimous consent for the Speaker to recognize me next, to put my little bill through [laughter], and I want to see if there is any one who will object. I know there are some pretty low-down men in this House [laughter], but I want to see if there is one so low, one who has so far forgotten what is due to himself, who has so little respect for his own reputation, as to say "no." [Renewed laughter.] Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. [Great laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, that I have unanimous consent, I think I will sit down.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. 117) to authorize the use of hot water off the Government reservation at Hot Springs; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, also reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; and

A bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

SITE FOR PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want the attention of the House and the Chair for a moment. The pending bill, as I understand it, is a proposition to provide for the construction of a great interest of the country. I approve of that bill. Mr. Speaker, there are many bills pressing for consideration which propose to take money out of the Treasury. Now, I would be very glad if, by unanimous consent or by recognition of the Chair, I could have an opportunity to call up and pass a bill to allow gentlemen to spend $2,000,000 out of their own pockets in constructing here in the city of Washington a hotel like unto the Grand Pacific of Chicago. The Senate has passed such a bill, incorporating a company of gentlemen who, as I am credibly informed, desire to do that thing. I am further credibly informed that, under the rules of this House, captious objections, coming originally from the owners of old rattle-trap hotels in this city, kept the bill from passing on "District day."

Now, sir, I am interested in this proposition—not pecuniarily, but as every gentleman here is interested in having one decent hotel in the city of Washington for the accommodation of the public—and I trust that the Speaker will recognize me either to ask unanimous consent or to move to suspend the rules—not to take two millions out of the Treasury, but to let the gentlemen composing this company spend two millions out of their own pockets; and, if we give them that authority, inside of two years we shall have this hotel.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] to suspend the rules and pass the bill indicated by him.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote.

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it. More than two-thirds, in the opinion of the Chair, having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended, and the bill is passed.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to take from the House Calendar the bill of the Senate (S. 512) for the repeal of the tenure-of-office act, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BAYNE. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a second. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Objection was made.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 134, noes 29.

A MEMBER. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum. The ayes have it, and there is a second. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

The Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in the closing hours of the Forty-ninth Congress I am gratified to present to this House a measure which should not excite political antagonism. It is one which appeals to the calm judgment and patriotic aspirations of intelligent statesmen. It is one which especially should address itself to the favorable consideration of this body, as the following remarks will demonstrate.

The proposition is to repeal what is known as the "tenure-of-office act." This is a Senate bill which was introduced by the junior member from Massachusetts, the honorable Mr. HOAR, and which passed that body by a handsome majority.

The object of this bill is to remove from the statute-book an obnoxious restriction on the constitutional prerogatives of the President, and leave the law as it stood from the foundation of this Government up to 1867. When amidst the stormy and bitter contest then existing between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, the latter sought to literally confine the President in a strait-jacket.

I know not how better to present this matter intelligently to this House in the brief time allowed than by giving a historical outline of it. From the annals of Congress I find that in the very first Congress which met under the Constitution this very subject was elaborately and exhaustively considered and discussed. The debate occurred on a proposition to establish a department of foreign affairs.

In this Congress there was a large proportion of those who had been delegates to the constitutional convention. The discussion which took place on the power of the President to remove from office is recognized as one of the ablest that has ever occurred in this country. Without dwelling longer upon the proceedings of that day, it is sufficient to say that the views I am now advocating were sustained by a large majority. One of the ablest and most active participators in this debate was Mr. Madison, who is justly esteemed as the Father of the Constitution, and it is almost needless to add he was on the side of the majority.

The views of Mr. Madison were supported and upheld by that great constitutional lawyer, John Marshall, the distinguished Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

For seventy-eight years the construction then placed upon the power of the President in regard to removals from office was recognized as the well-established law of the land. The circumstances which led to the present unconstitutional enactment are familiar to this body.

Mr. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, states that during the administration of President Johnson, when feeling ran high between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, serious fears were entertained by leading Republicans in the Senate and House that during the recess of Congress the President, taking advantage of the absence of the members, would remove leading members of their party to make place for his personal supporters.

This measure was hastily brought forward and unadvisedly enacted in order to accomplish a temporary purpose.

Indeed, the House in its impatience, as might be then expected, went even beyond the Senate in the harshness of its propositions. In the conference committee between the two Houses the extreme measure of the House, to wit, to deprive the President of the power to remove a member of his cabinet (even though a spy in his political family), was denied—a thing unprecedented or even suggested prior to that time.

Now comes the singular part of this history. But the hottest wrath is soonest cooled. Another election was held. The sober second thought returned, and though the Republican majority was increased in this Congress a bill was introduced and passed for the repeal of this very law by an overwhelming majority—138 to 16. The Senate did not concur. In the ensuing year a like bill passed by 159 for the repeal to 25 against it. In 1870 a similar bill passed the House without a division.

So that we have seen that no such enactment as the one we are now seeking to repeal ever marred the statute-books of this country prior to the bitter and acrimonious controversy which existed between President Johnson and the American Congress. It was literally a measure arising out of the suspicions and mistrust of an internecine war. It was war legislation, which should now be repealed.

Every President who has been elected since this law has been on our statute-book has recommended its repeal, and this House, I repeat, has time and again passed bills for this purpose. The law to-day has literally no virtue; it is a dead letter, for it does not prevent removals from office. Now the President removes until Congress meets. The officer is suspended and another is placed in his stead. Congress meets, refuses to confirm the successor. What then? Is the officer suspended restored? Not at all. What then? Has any one ever heard of a President reappointing one whom he has once suspended? No. The only effect, therefore, of this law is to keep up an irritating conflict, such as we witnessed at the beginning of this Congress between the President and the Senate, which proved to be sound and fury, signifying nothing. Was it of any practical advantage? None.

The law is simply embarrassing to the President, whose duties in appointing and removing are already onerous enough without the menace of such an enactment. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when the Senate has not only met us half way, but gone in advance and presented this bill for our concurrence, I can not understand why we should be tossed about by any fears or doubts. More especially when we have so often given them occasion to know it was acting only in response to our declared wishes. Why hesitate longer? What good reason is there for it? I fail to see any. It is a time of profound political peace and an appropriate season to wipe out the war legislation, born of passion and resentment. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution authorizes the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, various officers of the Federal Government. Provision is made by existing law under the Constitution for the appointment of various other officers of the Government, not supposed to hold the responsible position of those whose appointments must be confirmed by the Senate.

While the Constitution authorizes the President to appoint, there is not in the instrument one line or word that authorizes him to remove a public official who has been confirmed by the Senate. There was at an early day acquiescence in the view that the President might remove a man from a public position; but in the early history of the Government that acquiescence was based upon the ground that removals arose ex necessitate rei—from the necessity of the case, and not from any authority conferred by the Constitution.

Congress has seen fit to prescribe terms of certain duration for most of the officers of the Federal Government. There are a few officers, collectors of internal revenue and some others, in the executive branch of the Government, whose tenure is unlimited. But the great mass of the officials confirmed by the Senate hold their offices for a fixed period, that term being in most cases, and I believe in all, four years. The President is authorized by the Constitution to appoint and the Senate to confirm the appointment. If these facts mean anything, they mean that when an officer is appointed for the term of four years and confirmed by the Senate, under the Constitution he should hold his office till the expiration of that term, unless in the mean time he should become incapacitated for the performance of his duties; and then, ex necessitate rei, he is removable by the President.

The distinction between this view of the constitutional power of the President and the view which maintains that he can remove any Federal official at his pleasure is, it strikes me, the distinction between the reign of the Constitution and the law, on the one hand, and the supremacy of the Executive will on the other.

If Congress fixes the term of four years, if the President appoints and the Senate confirms an official to office, and that officer faithfully discharges his duties through that period, or the greater part of it, I can not consent to the proposition that the President, under any circumstances, has the constitutional authority to remove that officer.

Now, sir, what is the meaning of the proposition we are called upon by this bill to repeal? That the term of office, the tenure of the office-holder appointed under law made by Congress, shall hold his office for the period of four years, unless the Senate, which had a part in his appointment to the extent of his confirmation, shall ratify the appointment of a successor to him in office, or consent to his removal. By confirming him the Senate will consent to the removal of that officer, for the President might send a message to the Senate, and in my opinion to carry out the theory of the Constitution and the laws enacted under it, that would be the proper way, asking the Senate to consent to the removal of an officer of the Federal Government, because he wanted to supersede that officer with another appointment. The merit of that system would be that examination into the facts could be made by the Senate as well as by the President. The Senate could inquire whether or not that official had been discharging the duties of his office faithfully and efficiently, and whether or not to acquiesce in the request of the President that official should be removed.

The present system has no merit at all. It simply, in my opinion, places every Federal appointment, notwithstanding the provision of the Constitution that the Senate shall confirm—it places every Federal appointment at the discretion of the President, and his will is to be the law, and not the law which was made by Congress under the Constitution.

I will never consent to that doctrine. In the early history of the country it was never claimed any such doctrine prevailed. Here in the District of Columbia President Madison appointed a justice of the peace for the term of five years, that being the term fixed for these officials. His name was sent to the Senate. It was confirmed by the Senate. The President refused for some reason or other to give a commission to that justice of the peace, and he sought adjudication of the questions involved. The Supreme Court of the United States held that he was entitled to the office of justice of the peace for five years, unless reason was shown why he should not hold that office. That was the early adjudication of the country. That was the principle that obtained until the spoils system came into vogue in 1832. Then commissions began to be issued only for the term of four years, that all officers hold during the pleasure of the President, and from that day commissions were issued to officers, with some exceptions, in the Departments, to hold during the pleasure of the President, or for four years.

I deny when the Senate has power to confirm, when acquiescence is as much of an essential to complete appointment as the naming by the President to the Senate of the official—I deny the President shall have power to remove an officer that is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate until his term expires as fixed by law—not as fixed by the will of the President, but by law, a law which was passed by the Congress of the United States, and which was approved by the President of the United States.

Therefore, sir, I trust that no man will remove from the statutes of the United States this last assertion among those statutes of the right of a Federal appointee to hold his office during the time the law says he shall hold it. I trust the tendency which has rapidly developed in the country to "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning," in acquiescing in any suggestion the President may make—to accept the removal of this or that officer at the dictation of the President—will not be accepted on the part of the House of Representatives.

We part with our own dignity, we part with our own right to say what the law shall be with reference to the Federal officials of the Government when we acquiesce in such a proposition. It is perfectly clear that the power of the President in this great Government of ours, with its one hundred thousand office-holders, with the power of these officials to enter into our political system and work out results as that political system is worked, I say it is perfectly clear that in the interest of free government, in the interest of republican institutions in this country, no more power should be lodged in the hands of any one man than is absolutely necessary; but that the House of Representatives, who represent immediately the people, whose election is passed upon every two years by the people, should conserve the power which the Constitution places in their hands and jealously part with any jot or tittle of it.

And therefore, Mr. Speaker, I insist that we shall oppose the repeal of this measure, and preserve what we have now in the way of power on the record, going to show that the laws enacted by Congress shall be enforced and respected not only by Congress, and not only by the people, but also by the President of the United States himself.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has but one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I yield that to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the proposition to repeal entirely what is known as the civil tenure-of-office act, is a retrogression that will operate injuriously, not only upon the general officials of this country but upon the party that undertakes to make that retrogression. I understand that civil tenure of office, or to speak more accurately, a "definite" tenure of office, is an Anglo-American idea, that lay at the foundation of government in England from which we come, and which lies at the foundation of all the State governments in this country.

It is everywhere a principle of office-holding in all the States without exception, so far as I know, that when an individual has been appointed or elected to an office he holds it for a definite time or until he has been removed either by impeachment or a judicial sentence in which there has been a charge and a fair investigation, or by resignation, and it has only existed in the Federal Government where the Executive has exercised the power of removal, and to cause removal, without consideration, charge, or reason, but merely on political grounds.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I yield now one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I improve the opportunity afforded me by the gentleman from North Carolina to say a word on the pending question, because I introduced the bill in the Forty-eighth Congress. I shall vote for the bill, repealing as it does the tenure-of-office act, and shall state briefly my reasons.

In the first place, I believe it to be contrary to the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution. The Constitution places the executive power in the hands of the President. A part of that executive power is, of course, the appointment and the removal of the agents who do the executive work. The Constitution expressly provides that these appointments by the executive power shall be made only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The very fact that the consent of the Senate is thus expressly omitted in the case of removal is, to my mind, an argument that the consent of the Senate is not necessary in case of removal, and that the power of removal remains solely with the Executive. Therefore, I believe that the tenure-of-office act is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, if not, as I have said, to its letter.

In the second place, I shall vote for the repeal of this law, because I do not believe it is an expedient or a wise one. I do not believe it accomplishes the purposes intended in its passage. I believe it results in a friction which makes and has made its operation either ineffectual or injurious. It was passed as a makeshift, as we all know. When it was passed there was certainly an impression abroad that it would be repealed as soon as the contingency which it was intended to meet was passed. As soon as that contingency was passed the act was repealed, I think twice, by a vote of the House of Representatives, then largely controlled by a great Republican majority. The Senate, slow to relinquish power once obtained, never consented to its repeal until the present session. Its consent now and here gives this additional argument for its repeal, that is, that the Senate has already power enough in the way of controlling official patronage. I do not believe it wise to give the Senate this additional power. I think it well when the Senate is at last willing to give it up to let it do so, and not let the opportunity pass when the act can be repealed. Leave the power with the President, where the Constitution puts it, and then hold him responsible for its execution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, while I have great respect for the legal opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], and also for that of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL], they will pardon me if I prefer the contemporaneous exposition of that law from men who are recognized as of world-wide reputation for legal acquirements and distinguished statesmanship, not the least of whom comes from the grand old State of Virginia.

According to Lord Coke, an eminent authority on all legal matters, great consideration is to be given to the contemporaneous construction of a statute or a constitution by these sages, who were familiar with the contemporaneous exposition. And we find, sir, that after the most elaborate discussion in the first Congress under this Constitution, Mr. Madison uses this language:

It is evidently the intention of the Constitution that the First Magistrate should be responsible for the executive department.

That comprehends the argument in a nutshell.

So far, therefore, as we do not make the officers who are to aid him in the duties of that department responsible to him he is not responsible to the country.

Chief-Justice Marshall, an eminent authority, whom it would be folly to attempt to eulogize in this presence, speaks thus in regard to the action of the first Congress spoken of. He says:

The action of the first Congress on this question has ever been considered as a full expression of the sense of the Legislature on this important part of the American Constitution.

Mr. Blaine, who is an eminent political authority, in his Twenty Years in Congress, says:

According to the long-accepted construction of the Constitution, the President's power of removal was absolute and unqualified. Appointment to office could not be made unless the consent of the Senate was given in each and every case; but the consent of the Senate had not been held as requisite to the removal of an officer.

The Constitution was silent upon the subject, and the existence or non-existence of power in the Senate to prevent a removal from office had been a matter of dispute from the foundation of the Government. Those who contended for the right of the President to remove without consulting the Senate were fortified by the early legislation of Congress and the early practice of the Executive.

I will now call attention to the words of President Grant himself, who expressed a similar opinion when in his message to Congress in 1869 he declared:

It could not have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution, when providing that appointments made by the President should receive the consent of the Senate, that the latter should have the power to retain in office persons placed there by Federal appointment against the will of the President. The law is inconsistent with a faithful and efficient administration of the Government. What faith can an Executive put in officials forced upon him, and those, too, whom he has suspended for reason? How will such officials be likely to serve an administration which they know does not trust them?

I say, therefore, Mr. Speaker, if you are to hold the Executive responsible to the people for the proper administration of his office, you should remove these shackles from around him, for while thus trammeled he is not free and can not be held responsible for the acts of those upon whom he must rely.

Indeed you raise up a spirit of insubordination among those thus situated, who may even form cabals and combinations to defeat him, and by the aid of their representatives greatly embarrass if not defeat important measures.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The only motion in order pending a motion to suspend the rules is a motion to adjourn, and only one motion of that character can be made.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, and Mr. BAYNE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 67, not voting 80; as follows:

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. BOUTELLE, on this vote.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. WEST, on this vote.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. BINGHAM, on this vote.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. NEGLEY, on this vote.

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, on this vote.

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. E. B. TAYLOR were announced as paired until the adjournment.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 172, and the nays are 67. More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to, and the bill is passed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas; when the Speaker signed the same.

DONATION TO THE GOVERNMENT OF LANDS NEAR CHICAGO.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution which I send to the desk, with an amendment thereto, which appears at the end of the resolution as printed.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept deed and conveyance of a certain tract of land, when the State of Illinois shall cede jurisdiction of the same to the United States, described as follows: Known as the Highwood tract, in Lake County, Illinois, containing 598½ acres, lying on Lake Michigan, north of the city of Chicago, and distant 25 miles; this land being a tract donated by the Commercial Club of Chicago (represented by John A. Doane, C. B. Farwell, and Alexander P. McClurg), for military purposes: Provided, That the title proposed to be conveyed shall be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States as sufficient to vest the fee-simple of the said above-described land in the United States, free of incumbrance, before the Secretary of War shall formally accept the same.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand a second.

Mr. VAN EATON. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON].

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. VAN EATON. I have no objection, provided I control the time on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 19.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 156, and the noes 19. The ayes have it, and there is a second. Under the rules, thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] to control the time in support of the motion and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is the last bill introduced by Senator Logan, the last measure in which he expressed an interest. Its object is simply to have the Government accept a certain tract of land. The purpose to which that land shall be devoted is a matter not for this Congress but for some future Congress to determine. The contracts upon which the title to this land is subject to the control of the donors will expire to-morrow, and therefore they wish Congress to accept the land at this session. As I have already said, what shall be done with this land, whether it shall be made a military post or not, may be determined next year, or five years, or ten years hence, or at any time that Congress may choose. That is a question not now before the House. The only question now before the House is whether the Government will accept nearly 600 acres of land.

Mr. STEELE. Provided the title is made good.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Provided the title is made good.

Mr. STRUBLE. It does not involve any expense to the Government, I understand?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. It does not involve any expense, unless some future Congress shall see fit to go to some expense in connection with it. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to oppose this bill, and, not desiring to occupy the time of the House, I am willing that we shall now have a vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I called for a second on this bill before the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want an opportunity to express my views in regard to this measure.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that he was the first to call for a second, the Chair thinks that he ought to be heard.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am opposed to the Government receiving gifts of land for this purpose.

Wherever the Government desires to establish military posts it should purchase the property and deal with the question directly, and not through the medium of a tribe of this character. It is an effort to obtain in an indirect manner what should be sought for and dealt with in a straightforward manner.

The Government has ample grounds for its use in the Mississippi Valley without this land.

I am informed that this offer is a product of the labor disturbance that recently occurred at Chicago.

Mr. RANDALL. Not of the labor disturbance.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Gentlemen say "No!" "No!" but I am informed that the workmen of that city have protested against this resolution, which could only occur from an impression that it had that bearing. If this is the motive I deem it unwise, as I believe the overwhelming mass of the workingmen of this country believe in law and order, and are always ready to put down disorder, to have the laws enforced and property protected. I deem the establishment of barracks near our principal cities as unnecessary—a needless menace to the people.

I now yield to General WEAVER, who is, I believe, familiar with the facts concerning this resolution.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When two gentlemen rise at the same time to demand a second, and one is recognized by the Chair and the other is not, how much time does the other one control? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has stated that he rose before the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON], and the Chair always accepts the statement of any gentleman to any matter of fact relating to what he has himself done.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But supposing three or four gentlemen rise at the same time to demand a second?

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] does not state that he rose at the same time with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON]. He states that he rose before him.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want order before I proceed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] was recognized by the Speaker to control the time in opposition to this bill, and the only reason the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] was recognized at all was that he stated that he had risen first. Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has occupied his time, and does not the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] control what remains of the fifteen minutes in opposition to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] to state distinctly upon the floor that he did not propose to oppose this bill; but under the rules of the House fifteen minutes are allowed in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the action of the gentleman from Mississippi vacate the right of those who are opposed to the bill to occupy that time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that it does not. Under the rules fifteen minutes are allowed in opposition to the motion; and when the gentleman from Mississippi states that he does not propose to oppose the motion the Chair must recognize other gentlemen who do wish to occupy the time in opposition.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will be heard.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not want anybody to beg a hearing for me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has a right to be heard.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I oppose the passage of this bill for reasons part of which I hope to be able to state in the time allowed me. The original democratic features of our American society seem to be rapidly passing away. We are approaching that condition of things in which, unless we adhere to the old landmarks, you will have to adopt in this country the repressive policy resorted to by the monarchies of the Old World in order to keep the people in subjection. This measure is but an unmistakable indication of the tendency of things in this Republic to-day. Mr. Speaker, we have all noticed how exceedingly difficult it is to prevent the passage of bad legislation and how difficult it is to secure the passage of good legislation.

We have upon our Calendar this moment bills which have been before the House during two or three Congresses and are still not acted upon, bills to compel wealthy corporations to release their clutch upon fifty-odd million acres of land which ought to be consecrated forever and reserved for homeless people who are now, under our land policy, excluded from occupancy of this land and compelled, by the very force of our land system, to congregate in the large cities.

The tendency is away from the farm and away from the rural districts; the trend is toward the city, where the needy congregate and where crime becomes organized and where the Republic is stabbed. Sir, if you want to prevent communism in this country, if you want to do away with the labor troubles, pass laws here which shall be equal in their bearing upon all classes. Repeal your class laws, take the burdens off the people, unlock your Treasury, pay your debts, and relieve the distress of the country. In this way you will have less communism and fewer strikes than you have to-day.

What is this measure? It is an attempt to signalize the advent of a certain gentleman into the Senate of the United States by making a grand donation of land to the Government to be occupied as a military site. It is wrong in policy and in very bad taste.

Mr. DUNHAM. Does not the gentleman from Iowa know that this bill was introduced before the gentleman referred to ever thought of being elected to the Senate?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman to whom I refer has been on this floor seeking the passage of this bill. If the Government of the United States wants a military site near Chicago, it is able to buy it and pay for it; and if these generous gentlemen who are proposing to donate 598 acres of land for a military site have more land than they want let them build homes upon it and donate it to the poor wretches around the streets of Chicago. If they will do this they will have less use for a military encampment there. And after doing this if they still have a superabundance of land, they can donate a part of that magnificent tract numbering millions of acres granted to one of these gentlemen by the State of Texas. This tract alone would furnish homes for thousands of the homeless poor of Chicago. If that were done a shout of joy would go up throughout the length and breadth of that city.

Sir, it is an idle slander to say that every man about Chicago belonging to labor organizations is a communist. No man in this House has less sympathy with that class of people than I have. Let us show ourselves just, and then we can reasonably demand obedience among the people. Our legislation must be pure and honest before we can reasonably expect it to be peaceable.

And I warn this House, in the name of the laboring men of this country, not to pass legislation which looks to overawing the people by military establishments, but to go to work and undo the legislation which has brought about our present discontent. It is the greed of the rich and not the dissensions of the poor that we should dread the world over.

I am opposed to this bill. Let the Government, if it wants a military camp, buy its land and pay for it. These gentlemen come in here now with this proposition to donate land to the Government. Next year when the appropriation bill comes up for consideration we shall have a proposition to expend large sums of money for the improvement of this land. Thus appropriation will follow appropriation, amounting doubtless to millions, in order to build up a grand military establishment in the neighborhood of Chicago and to override and overawe the people.

A MEMBER. And to overawe anarchists.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Not to "overawe anarchists." The anarchists are now in the clutch of the law, and ought to be there. What more do you want?

Mr. BURLEIGH. Why does the gentleman put those two classes together—the communists and the laboring men?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not. But the policy of this bill classes them together, and it has no other logic.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this project did not originate with either of the present Senators from my State, nor did it originate even with the late Senator Logan. It originated with General Sheridan, who, for four or five years, has been anxious for a change in the management of our Army so that our military forces shall no longer be placed almost exclusively on the frontier, where they are not needed, but shall be placed near our great railroad centers, where it costs less to enlist and transport and subsist them.

Mr. MCADOO. If we establish these barracks near Chicago will not other great centers of the country speedily demand barracks, and shall we not soon have the European system—all our large cities teeming with barracks and soldiers?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not know what the gentleman means by "the European system." We shall not have the "European system," if I understand what it is. We shall have our Army where we can manage it more economically, where it can be used more expeditiously should war break out, which certainly is not to be anticipated on our western frontier.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Will not Congress in all the years to come have the power in its own hands to make proper provision on this subject whenever necessary?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I yield three minutes to the gentlemen from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY. I fear, sir, either I or my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] or my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] misapprehends the scope of this bill. If I understand it, it is simply a grant of a tract of land on the shore of Michigan to the Government of the United States to be used for military purposes. The purpose for which the Government shall utilize it hereafter is not named in the bill, but if I for one moment supposed, as my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] seems to understand, that it was for the purpose of crushing the liberal sentiment of our people and crippling their rights within our country, I would join with him in opposing it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. So say we—all of us.

Mr. TARSNEY. But it is not for that purpose. I am familiar with this land. For seven years of my life I followed the arduous and dangerous calling of a marine engineer upon our inland seas. I have sailed into Chicago and out of Chicago; and let me say to you, in the event of a war with a foreign country, such as that with which we were menaced on the fishery question, our Canadian neighbors would place a fleet of gunboats on the Lakes and decimate our cities on the border unless we should place upon a reservation of this character within 20 miles of Chicago a fort, if Congress sees fit hereafter to place it there, which will prevent any fleet of foreign vessels from entering the harbor of that great metropolis of the Northwest.

I take no part in any talk of this donation being made for the purpose of intimidating, if you please, the people of Chicago. Let us accept it as patriotic American citizens, and let those who follow after us here utilize it for the purpose of protecting all of the people of this broad land. [Applause.]

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. Since when has it become patriotic to accept gifts?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Let us accept it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The Government accepted a lot worth $70,000 from the little city of Atlanta.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. Was it considered patriotic?

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 16.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I give notice it will require a quorum to pass this bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, and Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, were appointed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered (one-fifth not having voted in favor thereof).

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. Is not one more than half of the members of the House a quorum? How many makes a quorum?

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-three. The present incumbent of the Chair has uniformly held that a quorum consisted of a majority of the members who constitute the House under the Constitution and laws.

The tellers reported—ayes 147, noes 21.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. PERKINS. I move the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I rise to submit a conference report.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have moved to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any case of a motion to reconsider a vote which suspended the rules of the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. After the Chair makes an announcement that more than two-thirds have voted to suspend the rules and pass the bill that is the end of the suspension of the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and it is the end of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have a right to move to reconsider, because the first motion has spent its force.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the decision to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A vote on the reconsideration of a vetoed bill can not be reconsidered. (Journal, 1, 28, pages 1093, 1097.) Nor can a vote on a motion to suspend the rules be reconsidered. (Journal, 2, 31, page 134.)

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is not a rule.

The SPEAKER. Since that time decisions have been uniform so far as the Chair knows.

INVESTMENT OF FUNDS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

JOHN J. HEMPHILL,
J. H. ROWELL,
JAMES E. CAMPBELL,
Managers on the part of the House.
THOMAS W. PALMER,
P. C. CHENEY,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The House conferees submit the following report:

MARCH 2, 1887.

Statement to accompany conference report on Senate bill 1854, "authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds."

The effect of this report is to adopt the bill as it originally passed the House.

JNO. J. HEMPHILL,
Chairman House Committee.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALFRED HEDBERG.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I submit a privileged report, Mr. Speaker, from a conference committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

That the House assents, by amending the original bill after the words "United States," in line 7 of the printed bill, by striking out the words "with his former rank and date of commission," and agree to the same.

CHARLES M. ANDERSON,
JOSEPH WHEELER,
JAMES S. NEGLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES D. CAMERON,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
J. N. CAMDEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I now renew my motion that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move to amend by making it a quarter past 8.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The motion to take a recess was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock.

---

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House at 8 o'clock resumed its session.

SAMUEL W. RICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel W. Rice.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. EDEN. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. OATES. For the satisfaction of the House I desire to state that the House Judiciary Committee were unanimous in the opinion that the compensation which Judge Rice received was not sufficient, and passed a bill to allow him to go to the Court of Claims and ascertain what he was entitled to; but the Senate Judiciary Committee, on investigation, concluded to allow him $1,000 and not to go to the Court of Claims. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

REPORT ON ASIATIC CHOLERA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. 118) to print the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward O. Shakespeare in Europe and Asia concerning the nature, &c., of Asiatic cholera.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to ask unanimous consent to pass this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward O. Shakespeare in Europe and Asia concerning the nature, causes, method of prevention and cure of epidemic or Asiatic cholera, made by the direction of the President of the United States, be printed, with the accompanying illustrations, and that there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of State, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, said report to be printed under the editorial supervision of Dr. Shakespeare.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. REAGAN. If there is to be no debate I shall not object.

Mr. FARQUHAR. There will be no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and being read a third time, was passed.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. DIBBLE to print in the RECORD remarks on the House joint resolution (H. Res. 61) concerning a constitutional amendment providing for a second Vice-President.

MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to file a report from the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, which was ordered to be printed.

He was also granted leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the same.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the following cases:

To Mr. DAVIS, in the case of Charles Harding for an increase of pension, there being no adverse report;

To Mr. HOLMAN, in connection with the bill (H. R. 440) granting a pension to Neal McGinley, without leaving copies, there being no adverse report; and

To Mr. WOLFORD, in connection with House bills numbered 6051 and 9124, and Report 2700, without leaving copies, there being no adverse report.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WISE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD remarks upon the internal-revenue system.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers as follows:

Mr. MAHONEY, papers in the case of James Cain.

Mr. WADE, papers in the case of S. S. Robinson.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, papers in the case of Elijah Kilday.

BRIDGE AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be put upon its passage.

Several members called for the regular order.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION AT MINNEAPOLIS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that by a mistake, the name of another gentleman was substituted for that of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN], on the list of requests for unanimous consent. The consequence was that the gentleman in his absence from the city lost his place. Under the circumstances the Chair thinks the gentleman from Minnesota should be permitted to present his request.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas ample means have been provided for the holding in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, of an exposition of the products of agriculture, manufactures, and the fine arts; and

Whereas the objects of such an exposition should commend themselves to Congress, and its success should be promoted by all reasonable encouragment, provided, it can be done without expense to the general public: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition, at Minneapolis, Minn., the first exhibition of which is to be held in the year 1886, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles as shall be sold in the United States, or withdrawn for consumption therein, at any time after such importation, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation: And provided further, That in case any articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption, or shall be sold without payment of duty as required by law, all penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal or sale.

SEC. 2. That upon the passage of this act the Secretary of State shall notify the consuls, consular agents, and other representatives of our Government in foreign countries of the time and place of holding said Minneapolis Industrial Exposition, together with the fact that all articles intended therefor will be admitted free of duty, as provided herein.

The Committee on Ways and Means recommended the following amendment:

Strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GILFILLAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler.

The message further requested the return to the Senate of the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STRUBLE. Is it in order for me at this time to move a suspension of the rules?

Many MEMBERS. "Oh, no!"

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] to make a privileged report. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] that it is in order for any gentleman to move to suspend the rules when he can get the floor for that purpose and no other business of higher privilege is before the House.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire to make another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to inquire whether it is in order for the Speaker to recognize a gentleman who remains in his seat to make a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is whenever the Speaker thinks it his duty to do so.

REPRESENTATIVES OF ABRAM O. BOWEN.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read the resolution reported by the committee, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the legal representatives of Abram O. Bowen, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund the expenses connected with the last illness and burial of said Bowen; said expenses not to exceed $250.

The Committee on Accounts recommended the following amendment:

In lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "the legal representatives" and insert the words "Mrs. Joanna R. Carroll, dependent sister."

The amendment was adopted.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RULE AGAINST SMOKING.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. I ask the Clerk to read section 7 of Rule XIV. And in this connection I desire to state that the rule prohibiting smoking was violated to such an extent last night as to drive some of our best members of the House out of this Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will see that this rule is enforced.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has just been brought over from the Senate with very numerous amendments, which, of course, have not yet been printed. At this late hour of the session I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be non-concurred in, that they be ordered to be printed, and that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask a conference with the Senate, and also that the bill and amendments be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit me to make a suggestion, why not move to suspend the rules?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, upon the suggestion of gentlemen around me, I move to suspend the rules, non-concur in the Senate amendments, ask a conference, and order that the bill be printed.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, upon that motion I demand a second.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that under the rule these amendments ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Then, sir, I make the point of order that the amendments must be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have the amendments read.

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope my friend will withdraw that demand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments; but before the reading was concluded Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR withdrew his demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws the demand for the reading of the amendments. If no other gentleman demands that they be read, then the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, upon that motion I have demanded a second, but I have no objection to its being considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection a second will be considered as ordered, and under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy more than two or three minutes, as I want to hasten business as rapidly as possible; but I want this bill put in such a position that we may vote separately upon the amendment inserted by the Senate which allows clerks to Senators, and I want an opportunity to make a motion to concur with an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say to the gentlemen that he shall have that opportunity when the bill is reported back.

Mr. BAYNE. That is all I desire; and I have no more to say, Mr. Speaker.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 3, 1887.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill of the House 2441, to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from said courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the request will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RIGHT OF WAY TO UTAH MIDLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3184) granting the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah reservations, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Utah Midland Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory of Utah, and it is hereby authorized and empowered to locate, construct, own, equip, operate, use, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian reservations situated in the Territory of Utah, and known as the Uncompahgre reservation and the Uintah reservation, occupied by the Tabequache Utes, Uintah Utes, White River Utes, and other tribes of Indians. Said railway shall enter said Uncompahgre reservation at a point on the east boundary-line of Utah Territory at or near the place where the White River crosses said boundary line, running thence by the most feasible route in a general westerly direction across said Uncompahgre reservation and across said Uintah reservation to the western boundary of said Uintah reservation, crossing such western boundary at the most feasible point to reach Salt Lake City.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road: Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way and materials, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof, and also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, whose approval shall be made in writing, and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign, or transfer, or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order across said reservations within three years from the passage of this act, or if the consent of the Indians is required under the terms of the proviso to section 2 of this act, then within three years from the date when such consent shall be obtained, as provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] demands a second. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL].

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. There is a second. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion, and fifteen minutes in opposition to it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is only necessary for the House to understand that this bill contains all the safeguards and guarantees that are to be found in any of the other bills of like character passed in this or the last Congress. It is so guarded that it is impossible for the interests of the Government or of the Indians to be injured in any way. There is a provision in the bill that unless the road is completed within three years the grant is forfeited. There is another provision that the company can not mortgage, sell, or transfer the franchise for any purpose, except that they may mortgage it to raise money to complete the road. There is another provision which requires the consent of the Indians to be obtained if in the discretion of the President he sees proper to so order. There is another provision conferring power upon the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the compensation that is to be paid, and to settle with the Indians. In short, every safeguard is placed in this bill that can possibly be put into a bill of this kind. That is all I desire to say; and I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my time to see whether there is any opposition to this bill. I can not imagine what opposition there can be to such a bill as this. It is the stereotyped bill which has been repeatedly passed granting the right of way to railroads through Indian reservations.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain its provisions so that we may know just what sort of a bill it is?

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has already explained the provisions of this bill. I could take it up and go through it section by section, and in that way I could repeat the bill as it has been read and as the gentleman from Arkansas has explained it; but I do not wish to occupy the time of the House in that manner. This Utah and Midland Railroad passes from Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, to Leadville, the greatest mining camp in the world. It passes from Leadville, mainly over the range of the Rocky Mountains, to the town of Aspen, the second largest mining camp and town in the State. It passes from there down the Eagle River valley to the celebrated Glenwood Springs, and from there across the western line of Colorado and the eastern line of Utah. It passes about equidistant between the Union Pacific Railroad and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, by a route which is many miles distant from any other railroad.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How many miles does it extend across the reservation?

Mr. SYMES. I do not remember the distance at this moment; but it runs right straight through the reservation in a westerly direction.

Mr. TARSNEY. Does it interfere with the rights of the Indians under any existing treaty?

Mr. SYMES. It does not.

Mr. Speaker, the Utah Midland is a broad-gauge railway which will develop some of the richest country and mines in the Rocky Mountain region. It passes through some of the finest coking coal-fields in the world. This road is mostly graded from Colorado Springs to and across the main range, and to Aspen and Glenwood Springs.

The construction of this railroad will be a benefit instead of a detriment to the Ute Indian reservation. The pioneer settlers who have gone in advance are praying for the construction of this railroad. They need it to develop the mines and great material interests of that new country.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the construction of this much-needed railroad should not be retarded when it reaches the west line of this Indian reservation, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. In order that the House may thoroughly understand the provisions of this bill and the necessity for giving another right of way through this Indian reservation, I ask for the reading of the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3184) to grant the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah Reservations, and for other purposes, submit the following report:

The company seeking this franchise is organized under the laws of Utah and composed of the following persons, to wit: Caleb W. West, governor of Utah; Eli H. Murray, ex-governor of Utah; W. S. McCornick, P. H. Lannan, Frederick H. Auerbach, John A. Groesbeck, O. J. Salisbury, Joab Lawrence, H. W. Lawrence, and G. S. Erb, all of Salt Lake City; also James J. Hagerman, Orland Metcalf, D. B. Robinson, H. D. Fisher, and Henry T. Rogers, of Colorado.

The bill grants the right of way only, with the usual amount of ground for stations, turn-outs, &c., necessary for the construction and operation of the road. The right of way, as provided in the bill, enters the Uncompahgre reservation at a point on the east boundary line of Utah Territory at or near where the White River crosses said boundary line, running thence by the most feasible route in a westerly direction through the two small reservations in question, the road having Salt Lake City for its western terminus.

It is believed that the rights of the Indians and the Government are carefully guarded. The amount of land which may be taken is less than that given by the general statute where roads are constructed through the ordinary public lands of the United States. The Secretary of the Interior is charged with the duty of fixing the amount of compensation which shall be paid by the railway company to the Indians, and to provide a time and the manner in which such payment shall be made. Thus the danger that the Indians might be deluded and cheated in making contracts with the company is avoided. The road is to be constructed within three years from the passage of the act or from the date of the consent of the Indians, or the rights granted shall be forfeited.

The road contemplated by the bill, when constructed, is to be operated in conjunction with the Colorado Midland Railway Company, making a continuous line of standard gauge road from Salt Lake City to Colorado Springs, a distance of something more than 400 miles. It will be about midway between the "Denver and Rio Grande" on the south and the "Union Pacific" on the north. These two latter roads are from 100 miles to 250 miles apart. The line in question will furnish transportation facilities to this vast stretch of country, most of which, outside of the reservations named, is rich in minerals. It will also enable the Government to send supplies to the Indian agencies and military posts located on or near the line at greatly reduced rates.

After full and due consideration your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, from the reading of that report it appears that this railroad is to be built from Colorado Springs to Salt Lake City. There are already two competing lines of road between those points; yet as Colorado is a growing State this road will in all probability be necessary to accommodate the increased traffic.

I have not opposed and do not generally oppose the granting or right of way through Indian reservations for the purpose of building railroads. I think the Indians as a rule should not hold their lands as an obstruction in the pathway of progress——

Mr. WILLIS. And civilization.

Mr. SPRINGER. And civilization, as the gentleman suggests. [Laughter.] There is another bill of this character, a bill in which the people of Dakota are interested, opening up a portion of the great Sioux Reservation and granting right of way for two railroads through that great reservation. I would be very glad to see that bill put on on its passage to-night, so that the people of that Territory might have the advantage of another line east and west through their Territory. At the present time they are restricted to one line, and I hope they will be permitted to have a competing line. If it were in order I would be glad to have that bill passed in connection with the one now pending; but as the motion is to suspend the rules, it must of course be submitted as made. I hope, however, that the Speaker may have the kindness to recognize the gentleman having the other bill in charge.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the residue of my time to any gentleman who wants to defend the rights of the Indians and advocate their protection for all time to come. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PEEL to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 119, noes 12; more than two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor and said: I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill 3050, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], on behalf, as the Chair understands, of the Committee on Appropriations, desires to move to suspend the rules and pass an "urgent deficiency" bill. If the gentleman from Iowa will withhold his motion for a moment, the Chair will recognize him again.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, namely:

Post-Office Department:

Postal service: For the extension of the free-delivery service, under the act of January 3, 1887, to an estimated number of seventy-five offices, $55,000.

For salaries for clerks in post-offices left unprovided for by the act of June 29, 1886, consolidating money-order clerks with others, $250,000.

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $5,000.

For manufacture of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and letter-sheets, $137,000.

For manufacture of registered-package, tag, official, and dead-letter envelopes, $10,000.

For transportation of the United States mails and for foreign-closed mails, $50,000.

Treasury Department:

Silver certificates and legal-tender notes: For printing and finishing additional silver certificates and legal notes of the denominations of one and two dollars, to be expended as follows: Under the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, for compensation of employés, $5,500; for plate-printing, $14,000; for materials and miscellaneous expenses, $3,700; under the office of the Treasurer of the United States, for materials needed in sealing and separating United States securities, $500; for salaries for additional pressmen, feeders, and separators, $3,300; in all, $27,000; and the number of plate-printers and printers' assistants may, on the passage of this act, be increased to the number provided for in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

JUDICIAL.

Fees of jurors: For fees of jurors, United States courts, $50,000.

Fees of witnesses: For fees of witnesses attending United States courts, other than courts of United States commissioners, $135,000.

For fees of witnesses in attendance before United States commissioners $65,000.

Support of prisoners: For support of prisoners United States courts, $40,000.

Expenses of Territorial courts in Utah: For expenses of Territorial courts in Utah, $5,000.

For the payment of a portion of the claim certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and which have been certified to Congress and fully set forth in House Executive Documents numbered 49 and 180 and Senate Executive Document numbered 110, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, there is appropriated as follows:

For all of the claims under "Pay of two and three year volunteers," 1871 and prior years, $250,979.08.

For all of the claims under "Bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs," 1871 and prior years, $284,750.22.

For all of the claims under "Bounty act of July 28, 1866," 1880 and prior years, $51,218.56.

For all of the claims under "Pay, &c., of the Army," 1884 and prior years, $14,052.37.

For all of the claims under "Commutation of rations of prisoners of war in rebel States, and to sailors on furlough prior to July 1, 1884," $19,093.19.

For all of the claims under "Horses and other property lost in the military service prior to July 1, 1884," $114,163.65.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CANNON. I demand a second.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let a second be considered as ordered by consent.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of and fifteen minutes in opposition to the motion.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, the bill which has just been presented and read contains no item that was not in the general deficiency bill that passed this House a day or two ago, but at this late hour in the session it is felt both in this House and in the Senate that the general deficiency bill may fail.

There is such a possibility. In order, therefore, that we may take all proper precautions to provide, first, for the postal service of the country, without which provision that service might be greatly impaired; secondly, that we may provide for the silver certificates and legal-tender notes of the denominations of one and two dollars; third, that the courts of the country may not be compelled to suspend business for the want of appropriations for jury service and for the payment of fees and witnesses; and, finally, that the soldiers of the Republic to whom $734,000 are now due, according to the ascertainment of the Treasury officials, we have by this bill made it certain that whatever may be the fate of other bills these worthy objects will be properly protected.

Mr. MCKINLEY. What is the total amount of this bill?

Mr. BURNES. One million five hundred and sixty-three thousand two hundred and fifty-seven dollars and seven cents.

Mr. McKINLEY. I understand that these are items which are embodied in the general deficiency bill, already passed?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; every one of them.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If this bill passes the effect will be to give the Senate a choice as between the other bill and this, will it not?

Mr. BURNES. In reply to the suggestion of my friend from Louisiana, I will say that it will simply give the other body an opportunity to take its choice.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I notice that in the bill the words "legal-tender notes" occur. I would suggest that by unanimous consent it be made to read "United States legal-tender notes."

Mr. BURNES. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. These notes are designated by the Statute as United States legal-tender notes, and it ought to be made specific, so that there could be no question.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the words suggested by the gentleman will be inserted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that proper provision is made here for claims due to officers and soldiers of the Army?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; for commutation of rations, back pay, bounty, horses lost, and all such claims.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would be glad if my friend would be kind enough to explain why it is that the general deficiency bill has been abandoned in this way?

Mr. BURNES. In reply to the gentleman from Michigan I have only to say that we in no sense abandon the general deficiency bill. It is because of the superior necessity for these particular items that at this late hour, nearly 9 o'clock at night on this last evening of the session, we think it but a part of prudence to have this bill in a condition that the appropriations may be made for these meritorious objects whatever be the fate of the other bill.

Mr. LONG. What is the condition of the other bill?

Mr. BURNES. I understand it to have been in committee and is probably now being considered by the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Then it will probably pass that body?

Mr. BURNES. I do not know, sir. I have stated all I can on this subject. The committee, as I understand it, have reported it back to the Senate and it is probably under consideration. Whether it will pass or not is not for me to say.

Mr. LONG. Of course we may rely upon the committee to do all they can to secure the passage of the general deficiency bill as it passed the House.

Mr. BURNES. I will pledge myself to do all that I can conscientiously do in that direction if I should be a conferee.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand this includes items on account of demands with reference to which there is no dispute in either body.

Mr. BURNES. This includes items only concerning which the House and Senate are equally willing to agree.

Mr. RYAN. May I ask whether all objects embraced in this bill are embodied in the general deficiency bill now pending in the Senate?

Mr. BURNES. Every one of them. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to control the time in opposition.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the first knowledge I had of the contents of the bill just read, or that it was to be presented, was upon hearing it read at the Clerk's desk. I have no doubt that the gentleman is correct in his statement that it contains items that the general deficiency bill contains as it passed the House a day or two ago. I can not tell whether it contains all the items that the gentleman referred to or all that class of items to which he refers from hearing its casual reading.

Mr. BURNES. All of the same class that were contained in the bill passed by the House.

Mr. CANNON. I did, however, hear enough to know that even for the purpose for which the House is asked to pass the bill it might well have contained other items equally important with those it does contain, namely, claims allowed by the Sixth Auditor under what is known as the Spalding act.

But, however anxious I may be that this bill should pass if the other fails, yet, upon the whole, I doubt if I had had the determination of it whether I would have agreed to the policy of presenting this bill at this time. It looks to me as though the gentleman from Missouri had made up his mind before he sees the deficiency bill as it comes from the Senate to get ready to say he will not agree to it, and then to save himself from a fall he proposes to fall back upon this bill and say to the country that he expects——

Mr. RYAN. Will it interrupt my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if I ask him one question?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to know whether this bill has ever been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations or any subcommittee?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not as I understand it. The gentleman from Missouri can tell.

Mr. BURNES. Not at all.

Mr. RYAN. I never heard of it before.

Mr. CANNON. I will only take a little more time; but I should like better order.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will go to the rear of the seats and ask gentlemen to be seated and cease conversation. In the confusion that prevails it is impossible for the gentleman from Illinois to be heard.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say again as I did not complete my sentence when the gentleman from Kansas asked me a question that before the deficiency bill has been reported to the Senate, before any of us know what the Senate amendments are, this bill comes in; and it looks to me as though the intention of the gentleman from Missouri—with that acuteness which always characterizes him—as though his intention was to place himself in the position of saying to the Senate that the deficiency bill shall fail.

I will just say one other word in conclusion. After this second bill shall have passed, before we shall have heard from the regular deficiency bill, and after this Congress shall have closed, still the inquiry will rise up in every member's mind and in the minds of the people of the country, why is it that you are driven to these terrible straits in these last hours? And why was it that one week or two weeks ago the deficiency bill was not brought in and considered and completed in order?

I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS].

Mr. McCOMAS. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). Ten minutes remain on that side.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will not consume the whole of that time.

This bill, purporting to be an urgent deficiency bill, lacks every characteristic of an orderly procedure under the rules of this Congress in the appropriation of public money. With the high regard that I have for the gentleman who has presented this bill I do not know how to explain to myself satisfactorily why an urgent deficiency bill should be brought into this House at the close of the session without being submitted to any subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and I have the honor to be a member of the subcommittee on deficiencies. It comes here for what purpose and how? Why, that we may appropriate in an urgent bill a large sum of money, over half a million dollars, to the Post-Office Department and nearly a half million of dollars to the Department of Justice, and making provision for legal-tender notes and providing for a long list of special claims set forth in the bill.

I beg the House to consider how this stands. I learned but a moment ago that the deficiency bill had been reported to the Senate, and here we are under the same roof spending a second time the same dollars by appropriating a duplicate sum of money. Where we intended half a million of dollars for the Post-Office we are now having that duplicated and are appropriating $1,000,000. And we are appropriating $1,000,000 for the Department of Justice, when but awhile ago we gave that Department but half a million. What would be the result if the first bill should pass the Senate, as it probably will, and go into conference and this bill should pass too? You would then have both of these bills.

If that should hang in conference and this one should pass you would have both these bills, you would have a double appropriation, you would have the most lavish extravagance. Mr. Speaker, the ordinary rules of procedure mean something, and their essence is to give safety in legislation and in the appropriation of public money. Suppose the other bill should seem to fail, then items just as important are left out of this bill. Here in this capital city is the tunnel which extends 4 miles, an extensive work, which is designed to supply the city with water, nineteen-twentieths of it built, only one-twentieth uncompleted. There the expenditure of a million must stand idle, and the water which was to come to cool the parched lips of my temperance friends on this side of the House in December next fails because that item is in the bill of deficiencies.

There are also expenses of courts, compensation of clerks here and there, and various such items. When you come to segregate the parts of this deficiency bill of seventy-three pages containing several thousand items, if you take out a few of them and put them here in this special bill which is sprung suddenly upon the House, then you are in my opinion omitting items fully as important as those which you include. I object to this bill, Mr. Speaker, for the way in which it comes here; I object to it because it is hasty and ill-advised and panic-stricken; I object to it because there is in it so much that it ought not to contain, and because there are so many things omitted from it which it ought to contain. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is any occasion here and now for this panic.

Let me say to my Democratic friends as a reminder that this condition of affairs is nothing unusual. I have before me the record of the last Congress, when, with 80 Democratic majority in this House, you had it come to pass in the short session that nine out of fourteen of the great appropriation bills were awaiting approval on the very last day of the session. In this Congress you have done a little better than that. You have already passed as many as eight of these bills, and the rest of them are on the way.

You have had the Naval Committee with one bill, roosting and hatching at the end of the session; you have had the Committee on Foreign Affairs with one bill coming in here at the close of the session; you have had another great bill—the Post-Office bill—coming in at the close of the session; you have had the legislative bill also; you have had all four of those great bills piled up together at one time upon this floor, yet now you are panic-stricken about a few items relating to the courts, and you fear that you can not get through. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the Democratic side.] I know it is bad, I know it is wrong, I know it ought not to be, Mr. Speaker; but when I tell you that, bad as this is, you did very much worse in the last Congress, you will see that there is no occasion for this bill.

Let me remind the House now that out of the forty-eight working days of this Congress, excluding vacation and Sundays (when you did not sit), out of those forty-eight days you did not occupy one in the consideration of an appropriation bill between the 6th and the 29th of January. During twenty-three days out of the forty-eight you never considered an appropriation bill. The bottom fault is the House itself; the bottom fault is the Democratic majority. You have wasted half of your time which ought to have been given to appropriation bills, and now you wail and gnash your teeth and get panic-stricken and come in here with this urgency deficiency bill. It is simply the sum of your own faults. I shall vote against this duplicate panic-stricken bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there is nobody panic-stricken but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS]. The majority are quite cool. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no need for passing such a bill as this, and I ask the gentleman to tell me, in my own time, why it should be passed.

Mr. RANDALL. Only as a matter of precaution; not as a matter of necessity.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I beg that the thoughtful men in this House will hear me patiently for five minutes. I wish to call attention first to the criticisms made by my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] upon what he calls the irregularity of these proceedings. Sir, every provision was matured in committee; every provision of this bill was matured in and by the Committee on Appropriations; every provision of it has been considered in this House and passed upon favorably by the House.

When the reason of a rule fails the rule should fail. We send our bills to committees to have them put into proper shape, and when that is once done and the action of the committee is sustained by the action of the House, then it is idle to say that the formalities of legislation have not been observed.

Referring for one moment to my distinguished colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I beg here to say—and I appeal to my colleagues themselves, and especially to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] to pass on the assertion—that in the transaction of business in the Appropriations Committee and with reference to appropriation bills, I have never known or discriminated for party, or thought of the interests of one party as against the other. I believe my friend from Maryland will bear witness to the fact that here to-night I present these urgent deficiencies, not because I seek to benefit one party or the other, not because I have any partisan feeling on the subject, but with an earnest desire to provide for the American soldiers, whose payment this year but for the passage of this bill may be endangered. I appeal to this House in behalf of a proper supply by appropriation for the postal service of the country, in which deficiencies have been ascertained, provision for which has been sanctioned by the Committee on Appropriations and by an almost unanimous vote of this House.

As I have said before, I honestly believe—and if I could give you the opinions of others higher in authority than myself, not only in this Chamber, but the other, you would not doubt for one moment, these gentlemen to the contrary notwithstanding—that there is not only danger, but great danger, of the failure of the general deficiency bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Out of what does that danger arise? Will the gentleman tell us?

Mr. BURNES. It arises primarily from the shortness of the time for its consideration.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is it exactly.

Mr. REED. When did that danger begin?

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. BURNES. I beg to be permitted to answer gentlemen one at a time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the gentleman this question: If we pass this bill to-night under a suspension of the rules, will it not be in the power of the Senate to add to this very bill by way of amendment the same items which are upon the bill now pending in the Senate?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, all I need say in reply to the distinguished gentleman from New York is that if Senators have the same sentiment of devotion to these important interests that this House has shown they will do no such thing.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. REED. Why do you not agree to the Senate amendments?

Mr. BURNES. Because I have not seen them, and we have as yet had no conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the position to be this: The Senate has amended your other bill by adding certain items; and now you want to have this bill passed because you think it will be better in conference to have this bill. That is all there is of it. Is it not so?

Mr. BURNES. No, sir. So far as conference is concerned, the passage or non-passage of this bill will have no sort of effect with me, if I should be one of the conferees.

Mr. HISCOCK. Every item in this bill is now in conference.

Mr. BURNES. It is not, sir. No conference has been held.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, every item is pending in the Senate.

Mr. BURNES. I presume so; but when that bill will pass the Senate no one can tell; when we can get it into conference no one can determine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there any more assurance in regard to this bill?

Mr. BURNES. I feel confident that the Senate of the United States will pass the bill without objection.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Well, I understand the gentleman is putting this bill out as a sort of life-preserver, so that if the other bill goes down this will float.

Mr. BURNES. That is it exactly. If the other bill goes down this "life-preserver" will "float" the soldiers whose claims have been audited for another year.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is not the regular deficiency bill now under consideration in the Senate?

Mr. BURNES. So I understand.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How could this bill take precedence of the Senate on the regular deficiency bill?

Mr. BURNES. The Senate can pass this bill or not as it pleases. Its passage here can do no harm in any event.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How does it expedite matters to drop this bill and take up the other?

Mr. BURNES. We do not drop the general bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Missouri presents this bill from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BURNES. This bill is not from the Committee on Appropriations; but every item in it was prepared and matured by that committee, and passed through this House by an almost unanimous vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the gentleman acting for that committee now?

Mr. BURNES. I am acting for myself; but I have consulted with various members of the committee whom I have happened to see.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has been read. [The question having been put.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BURNES. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. I think the bill can be passed without it.

Mr. BURNES. For the present I will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, and ask for a rising vote.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered by the House.

Mr. BURNES. I ask by unanimous consent that the order be vacated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURNES. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 49.

So (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, which announced that the President of the United States, having returned the following bills to the Senate, in which they originated, they had passed the same notwithstanding his objections thereto, two-thirds of the Senate voting in favor thereof:

An act (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind.;

An act (S. 856) for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa;

An act (S. 1162) for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass.; and

An act (S. 763) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio.

It further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 243) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report on the search for the Greely expedition.

It further announced that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the resolution of the Senate to print the indexes to the compilation of the House and Senate reports of committees.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House for printing of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of precious metals.

MARY A. LOGAN.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move the rules be suspended and the bill (S. 3050) granting a pension to Mary A. Logan be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Logan, widow of the late John A. Logan, a major-general of United States volunteers in the late war for the Union, and to pay her a pension, from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to a privileged matter. I desire to call up House bill 5995——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. Privileged matters have priority under the rules.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The bill called up is one of my own bills; beside consideration was entered upon. The bill had been read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made his motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and pending that the gentleman from Indiana rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Clerk had completed the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And that being true, then, it seems to me the gentleman could not interfere with the progress of the bill at any other stage of the proceedings, even while debate is progressing or a vote being taken.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman's motion had not been seconded. The gentleman submitted the motion, and thereupon the gentleman from Indiana rose to a privileged matter.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The bill was called up and I was recognized and moved to suspend the rules and pass it, whereupon the Speaker directed the Clerk to read it.

It was read by the Clerk, and it seems to me the proceedings had gotten to that stage when the next thing in order was for the Speaker to ask whether or not a second was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided throughout these proceedings that when a privileged matter was presented, even pending a motion to suspend the rules, the privileged motion must be disposed of by considering it, just as was the case with reference to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] during the day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I was not aware of that ruling, Mr. Speaker.

I wish now to make a parliamentary inquiry. Do I lose my place?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not, except temporarily. The recognition is suspended by the privileged matter.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 5995) granting a pension to David T. Elderkin, together with message of the President accompanying the same stating his objections thereto.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Indiana calls up this bill, which is a bill that was by me introduced and was vetoed by the President. The gentleman who calls it up signed the minority report against the bill.

Mr. MATSON. There is no minority report in the case.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You did not sign the majority report?

Mr. MATSON. Nobody did.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You are against the bill; and the gentleman from Indiana is not the one who reported the bill favorably to the House. He is not, therefore, the one to control it, and I submit that this is a declaration of an evident purpose to antagonize the bill upon which I have been recognized; for if there is any gentleman on this floor who should call up the bill of David T. Elderkin, he is the one who now addresses the House.

I would have done it myself long ago had I believed, from any precedents on this floor, that there was a single hope of having the bill for this poor insane man passed.

The SPEAKER. The matter the gentleman from Indiana calls up is privileged and may be called up by any gentleman on the floor. Several have been called up by gentlemen who are not even members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and of course made no report upon the bill. Any member can call up a privileged matter, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] did this afternoon when he called up a similar bill.

Does the gentleman raise the question of consideration?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will not raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman does not want his bill considered I will withdraw it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I trust the gentleman will not interfere with the consideration of the bill I have now called up.

Mr. MATSON. I suppose the gentleman would prefer to have his own bill considered, but I withdraw it.

I demand a second on the motion.

JAMES W. KINGON.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to submit a conference report.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama now intervenes with a conference report, which has precedence of all matters, but the Chair assumes it will not occupy much time.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the military record of James W. Kingon, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate with an amendment as follows: Add after the word "thereof," in line 18 of the printed bill, as follows:

"As fully and completely as if such proceeding, findings, and sentence had never been had or made."

JOSEPH WHEELER,
G. W. DARGAN,
JAMES LAIRD,
Managers on the part of the House.
BENJAMIN HARRISON,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY A. LOGAN.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I now call up the motion I made.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen in support of and fifteen in opposition to the motion.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I invoke but for a very few moments the kind attention of this House on both sides. In bringing up the bill granting a pension to the widow of the late General John A. Logan, I do so in obedience to the dictates of my own heart and the overwhelming sentiment of this country.

The power to pass this bill by this body no one disputes. There are three precedents for the passage of the bill. Similar pensions have been granted to the widows of Farragut, of Thomas, and of Hancock. The latter I had the pleasure of voting for myself, with a clear conscience and without hesitation.

There is but one objection I have noted that was urged against the passage of this bill—and I have read the reports—one real reason; and that is that Mrs. Logan has property. I appeal to this House that this is a matter which should not be considered in this connection. Almost every dollar of the property which Mrs. Logan has now is the gift of the benevolent, liberty-loving people of this country. If it has any lesson for us, it shows the sea of sentiment that surrounds the question before us at this hour.

General Logan, when he died, died rich in everything except in property. When he left Mrs. Logan a widow he left her poor in nothing save in property. And to-night the American Congress is confronted with the simple question, Will this noble woman, this widow of the Republic, left to us because of the devotion of her husband to the country—will she be denied the recognition demanded by the vast body of the surviving volunteers of the Union Army and their friends, and for which we have precedents? I trust not.

I do not want to beg for this. I will not. I have no pathetic appeal to make for this act of justice—none. But I would be glad if the wires to-night would send to every part of this Republic the information that the heart-beat has followed the drum-beat in the Republic and that over the grave of the past we can meet like men inspired by a common impulse around the graves of the great men of the Republic who have left trusts for us to cherish.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has ten minutes of his time remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate further insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on its part Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL as managers on the part of the Senate.

PENSION TO MRS. LOGAN.

Mr. MATSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY. It is with some degree of diffidence that I rise to oppose the passage of this bill. I come from the great Northwest that furnished to the Federal service the bone and the sinew that saved and preserved the Federal Union, and I regret very much to disagree with my distinguished friend from Iowa upon this question.

But, sir, when the gentleman from Iowa tells me of the great men, the admirals and the generals who have won distinction in the wars of this Union, let me call to his mind and to the mind of this House this fact, that it was not the generals alone that won the victories. There were in the ranks thousands and tens of thousands of humble, noble soldiers, unknown to fame, the graves of many of whom are to-day unmarked over there beyond the Potomac River, and who have never yet been heard of in the halls of Congress asking for a pension.

I, sir, come from a State that furnished 89,000 soldiers to the Federal service. I come from a Michigan Democratic family—although there is no party in this—that furnished five brothers to the Federal service. None of them are here before Congress asking that Congress shall award to them a pension for their valiant services in behalf of the preservation of this Union, nor is there any such claim on behalf of their widows. I come from a family of soldiers, one of whom lies over there somewhere beyond the Potomac. His record upon the books of the War Department reads, "Killed in the Wilderness." Another was for seventeen months and a half within the confines of a confederate prison. Two others bear the scars of an honorable conflict—and let us hope that its bitter memories may soon be forgotten.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the name of our country I protest against our standing here upon this floor and as representatives of constituencies voting to the family of the distinguished statesman—not as a soldier—a pension when the families of the men that bared their breasts to the confederate bullet and walked shoulder to shoulder in the ranks, as privates and non-commissioned officers unknown to fame, are forgotten.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MATSON. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TARSNEY. My distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] refers to the widows of the distinguished Admiral Farragut, General Hancock, and General Thomas. But does he forget that these distinguished officers were still serving as officers and in the line of their duty at the time of their death?

Mr. LOUTTIT. It was not so with General Meagher.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to allow me a moment's interruption. The gentleman who speaks about the pension to the widow of General Meagher is the gentleman who wrote the report and got me to call up the bill for passage.

Mr. LOUTTIT. The question I suggested was, what was the difference in principle between passing that pension at $50 a month for the widow of an officer who did not die in the service and this one at $2,000 a year?

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from California wrote the report and got me to call it up.

Mr. LOUTTIT. And the President signed the bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. Does my distinguished friend from Iowa, for whom I have the most profound regard, forget that the lady whose name is mentioned in this bill now before the House was not the wife of a soldier serving in the ranks or serving in the capacity of an officer of the army of his country at the time of his death?

Does he forget that the distinguished gentleman, honored though he was—and I honor him for his soldier-like qualities and for his statesmanship—does he forget that that distinguished gentleman left the service——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MATSON. I yield him one minute more.

Mr. TARSNEY. Does he forget, I say, that that distinguished gentlemen left his line of duty in the military service of the United States and assumed the same rôle that my distinguished friend and others upon this floor are assuming to-night, the rôle of the American statesman instead of the American soldier? Will you force a civil pension list upon the American people? For my part, in behalf of the great Commonwealth of Michigan, from which I come, I protest against it. Yet I stand here to say that, as my votes and my action upon this floor heretofore have shown, I am willing to vote liberally for any pension that you may propose to give within the range of reason to any deserving soldier or to the widow of any such soldier who died in the service. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has nine minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MATSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would not avail myself of those three minutes to speak on this bill but for the fact that it has been intimated on this floor within the last few days that the votes of those of us here who were opposed to General Logan and other Federal soldiers in the late war would be prompted, in some part at least, by some sort of ill-will or resentment on the part of confederate soldiers against those who were victors over them. I beg to say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], and to every other gentleman upon this floor who wore the blue, that I believe I represent the confederate sentiment, if not every confederate, when I state that there is not lingering with us one single scintilla of hatred or prejudice or ill-will against any man because he was opposed to us in that unfortunate conflict.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. You forgive us, do you? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. No. We forgive the soldiers; but we do not forgive the demagogues that are trying to make capital out of what the soldiers fought for. [Renewed laughter and applause.] Mr. Speaker, my vote on this occasion will be a consistent one. If there is one thing that a confederate soldier admired more than another it was a brave and magnanimous foe, and in General Hancock we all recognized such a man; but when the proposition came into this House to pension the widow of General Hancock—a man for whom I had the highest possible admiration and one to whose widow I would be as willing to grant a pension as to any widow in this nation—when that proposition came in here I voted against it, and I so voted because I did not and do not believe it is right to tax the poor people of this country to pay pensions at the rate of $2,000 a year to anybody.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MATSON. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. If I could have one more minute, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say——

Mr. MATSON. I can not yield further. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has six minutes.

Mr. MATSON. I reserve that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have the right to conclude this discussion, and I trust the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] will finish on his side.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule upon that subject. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in those two minutes that I believe it is good policy for all of us, Democrats and Republicans, American citizens, to give to the widow of General John A. Logan a pension of $2,000 a year. I have not stopped to inquire whether she is on the verge of poverty or not. You understand how that is. I do not place the case upon that ground. I put it rather on the ground of a tribute upon the part of a grateful country to the widow of a man who served it well, and also upon the ground of furnishing an incentive to others hereafter to follow in his footsteps. Why do you give $5,000 a year to the widow of a President? Because you believe it is sound policy. Why do you give $600 a year by special act to forty or fifty widows of general officers? Because you believe it is sound policy. And so here, having voted for a pension of $2,000 to the widow of General Hancock, a regular Army officer, I come as the representative of my constituents, soldiers and civilians alike, to say that I am willing, from the standpoint of public policy, to do the like thing for the widow of the most magnificent volunteer officer of the civil war [applause]; and I want to say, further, that Uncle Sam is rich enough and broad enough, under wise statesmanship, to do justice to all the soldiers of the Republic, whether they were officers or privates, and it is not my fault or my party's fault that it has not been done. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I have only two minutes in which to speak on this bill, but I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, that if his argument in opposition to the bill means anything at all it means simply that every pension granted by the Congress of the United States, or under the laws of the United States, should be exactly the same; that there should be no distinction between pensions granted to privates and pensions granted to officers, no distinction between pensions to officers of inferior rank and pensions to those of exalted rank, or who have rendered distinguished service to their country.

I have as much respect, and love, and admiration for the soldier who carried his knapsack and followed the flag of his country and bared his breast to the bullets of the enemy as any other man can possibly have; but I say now there has been so much said on this floor as an appeal to the common soldiers of the country that it is time now to take a sober and sensible view of this question. Is there to be any encouragement to men to distinguish themselves in the service of their country?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, it would be amusing if it were not a most serious subject, to consider the attitude of the opponents of this bill in connection with their position on other bills which have been brought up here affecting similar cases. My colleague has well said that the widows of General Hancock, General Thomas, and Admiral Farragut have been pensioned with a like sum to that proposed here. I may add a reference to the case of the widow of General Frank P. Blair. I remember that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON] was a most eloquent champion of the bill which gave to the widow of General Blair $50 a month, and $5,000.

In speaking upon the subject at that time, I said that the $5,000 was simply arrears; but the gentleman put it upon the ground of the services of General Blair and the money he had expended in the cause of the Union. Had not other officers expended in the cause of the Union their money as well as their blood? yet no bill was ever brought before Congress to compensate them for the money they had expended. Why was not such a claim relegated to the Court of Claims, or left to be provided for as a private claim in a special act of Congress? It would be unfair, perhaps, to say that the politics of General Blair had anything to do with the attitude of gentlemen on that question; but how can the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions claim that the case presented here is different in principle? It is only a question of degree. That allowance of $5,000 to the widow of General Blair was practically arrears of pension; and it is most astonishing now to observe the arguments urged against this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have four minutes left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have voted in this House to give to the widow of General George H. Thomas and to the widow of General Winfield S. Hancock $2,000 a year. Those were exceptional cases; and I am ready here to-night to make an exceptional case in behalf of the widow of John A. Logan. [Applause.] Why? Because I can not distinguish any difference in the heart-throb or the nerve-pulsation of those three men as they stood in the armies of the United States in behalf of the Union [applause], except that two of them were of the regular Army, which had precedents in its favor. I propose to make a precedent on this occasion in behalf of the volunteer Army of the United States. [Applause.]

I speak in this particular the sentiment of the people I represent. This is not a matter of politics. The question is not whether General Logan was a statesman. The question is, did he render such services in the Army of the United States as to prompt the American people through Congress to give to his widow a soft pillow on which she may rest in the declining years of her life? [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my remaining two minutes.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I would not say one word which might in the least degree detract from the good opinion that all ought to entertain of General Logan; nor would I utter anything which might grate harshly on the ear of the best friend that this recently bereaved woman may have. Mr. Speaker, I am here to discharge a public duty, one which I am led to discharge because I feel that the precedents which are being made here in the form of large pensions are dangerous to the American people and dangerous to this Government.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will my friend allow me——

Mr. MATSON. I cannot yield.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Just a short question.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman must excuse me. No one here can deny that the giving of pensions of $2,000 a year to those who do not need them is in the direction of building up an aristocracy in this country. Nothing could lead in that direction more strongly than to take the money which has been wrung from the sweat of the people, to hand it over in large sums to those who have no need of it. It is upon this ground, Mr. Speaker, that I oppose this pension, and have always opposed large pensions. It is a matter of public knowledge that this proposed beneficiary is worth at least $68,000, recently given her by friends; and I am glad they did it. There is no need of this legislation. Where bills have been passed heretofore giving pensions of $50 a month, the allowance of that sum has been based upon the proposition that there was an absolute necessity to give that much in order that the widow might live in comfort. No bill of this character has been passed here without that kind of showing.

Now, then, what will California say when the widow of that man who perhaps had the brightest intellect which had ever shone in this country, Colonel Baker, who fell leading the Union forces at Ball's Bluff—what will California say when his widow is to be left with a small pension? What will Iowa say when the widow of General Crocker, one of the most brilliant of the soldiers of the recent wars, is left with a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. STRUBLE. We are ready to increase it at the first opportunity.

Mr. MATSON. Certainly you will; there is the point. All of them must be increased if justice is done all round. But the people of this country do not intend there shall be built up an aristocratic class who are to receive $2,000 a year each.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] can justify his vote only on one ground, and that is that this is an exceptional case. It is well known when you begin in this direction there is no place to stop.

Mr. HOLMES. Why did you stop with the bill for the relief of the widow of General Frank P. Blair?

Mr. MATSON. I did not.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman reported it favorably.

Mr. MATSON. The Blair bill is a bill for $50 a month.

Mr. HOLMES. Yes; and $5,000 cash.

Mr. MATSON. Five thousand dollars of money which was expended by him.

Mr. HOLMES. But it is cash all the same.

Mr. MATSON. Money owed her husband.

Mr. HOLMES. Did not the gentleman favor it?

Mr. MATSON. They are not alike for the reason stated. Thomas and Farragut were officers during their whole life. They gave their entire life to the service of their country.

Mr. TAULBEE. They died in the service of their country.

Mr. MATSON. There was no question about their right to some pension. But as to the other there is a question of the right of this widow to a pension. I would vote to give her $50 a month, although I have heretofore only voted once in that direction, and that was to give a pension to General Paul, who had both eyes plowed out by a Minnie ball on the field of Gettysburg.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. He would be entitled to $50.

Mr. MATSON. No; to only $30. General Warren's widow and children, my friend Governor CURTIN tells me, are to-day in poverty.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us pension her.

Mr. MATSON. Oh, yes; but you say this is exceptional. The gentlemen can not justify his vote upon any other ground. If you give it to one you are bound in justice to give it to all.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I am glad to state here, Mr. Speaker, that the glorious State from which the gentleman comes has instructed, by its Legislature, the Senators as well as the Representatives from that State, to vote in favor of this bill granting a pension to the widow of General John A. Logan. I congratulate the State of Indiana, which sent 180,000 and more soldiers to the field.

There is one thing I must say to the House. When the Hancock bill passed this House 70 Democrats voted for it. We will plant on this vote to-night 140 votes. If it is beaten, you know who must beat it. Consistency is a jewel which should adorn us all, and it is only right by this legislative body to-night that Mrs. Logan should be recognized as this bill directs. I ask whether this House is to forget that this woman stands forth before the Union as one of the noblest of them all, who went into camp and field herself as a nurse, a woman who was a companion to General Logan, and that of itself is a high tribute to her.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 145, nays 113, not voting 61; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. WADE.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. MCADOO.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. RICE, for the remainder of the evening session.

Mr SNYDER with Mr. WAIT, on this vote.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, on this vote.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. LAWLER, on this vote. If present Mr. JONES, of Alabama, would vote "no," and Mr. LAWLER "aye."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I was not present when my name was called, but should have voted in the negative.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments the bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines;

A bill (H. R. 1735) for the relief of Matthew H. Fulton;

A bill (H. R. 8978) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 3365) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Samuel H. Moer;

A bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition, to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords.

Also that the Senate agreed to the reports of committees of conference on bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas; and

A bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg.

Also that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2441) to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. PUGH managers on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to suspend the rules, call up the bill S. 3104, and put it upon its passage.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia to submit a conference report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He makes that report pending my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
J. M. RIGGS,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
WILLIAM MAHONE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question upon the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing to demand the previous question upon. If there be no objection the report will be accepted.

Mr. BLOUNT. The House entertained a different idea on this question heretofore. I move the adoption of the report, and upon that demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, I move that the report be accepted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending question? I understood the gentleman from Georgia made a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman simply reports now a paper that has been read announcing that the conferees on this bill have failed to agree.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And he makes no motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing to adopt. The Chair stated that without objection the report would be accepted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now will the gentleman make his motion?

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendments; and on that I ask the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the House recede from its disagreement. May I ask what is the limit of debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia demands the previous question upon the motion submitted by him, which covers both motions.

Mr. BINGHAM. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Georgia has demanded the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. How did he get the floor for that purpose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania took the floor the gentleman from Georgia demanded the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. After the gentleman from Georgia moved to adhere, then the gentleman from Pennsylvania had the right to move that the House recede.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no necessity for any misunderstanding. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Georgia rose and addressed the Chair and made his motion, and at that time, before any other motion was made, he demanded the previous question. Pending that, the gentleman from Pennsylvania moved that the House recede from its disagreement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Who demanded the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Allow the Chair to state: Pending that, the gentleman from Pennsylvania moved that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same.

But the demand for the previous question had already been made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Speaker ruled the other day that the previous question operated on both motions.

Mr. RANDALL. Only the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes in as a prior motion to the one made by the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Chair hold that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has not the right to the floor on his motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question shall be ordered there will be thirty minutes allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BURROWS. This question has been up in the House within the last two or three days, and under the ruling of the Speaker the gentleman from Pennsylvania has now the right to the floor.

Mr. LONG. It was so held in regard to the debate on the fisheries bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In regard to the very bill referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Chair pardon me and allow me to say one word?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. When the matter now presented came back two days ago, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] made the same motion and called the previous question. I then rose in my place and moved that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment. The Speaker held that I had the right to the floor upon that motion, even although the gentleman from Georgia had demanded the previous question, as the motion to recede took precedence over all other motions. It was so held, and I debated the question till I withdrew the motion.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The record shows that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is correct in his statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask if the Chair has not ruled on this question which gentlemen are discussing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair having heard the statements of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], again states that the gentleman from Georgia submitted a motion and upon that demanded the previous question. Pending that, the gentleman from Pennsylvania submitted his motion. If the demand for the previous question is sustained by the House it will operate on both motions; the precedence in putting the question belonging to the motion submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, there being—ayes 120, noes 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same; thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not think that anything I may say in this debate will change the twice expressed judgment of the House. But not having had an opportunity to debate this bill when it was before the House at its first consideration, I desire to submit a few facts and a few statements which as I claim, while they will not change the judgment of the House, may present a phase of the proposition not heretofore presented.

I am not going to discuss the question of trade results and trade benefits to the American people if this proposition is accepted. I believe it has been ably and forcibly debated upon this floor, and nothing that I can say will add to or strengthen the argument that has been presented by those in favor of this Senate proposition.

I will say, however, that this amendment made by the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill is different in character from any heretofore considered by either House of Congress. It is not the old proposition, but it is distinctively a new proposition. It is to give for the purpose of securing greater frequency and regularity in the dispatch of our mails to the South American ports and states in American steamships $1 per nautical mile simply for the outgoing trip.

Within the past few days there has been presented to the Secretary of State by Mr. Hanna, of Indiana, minister to the Argentine Republic, the statement that that republic, in character so much like our own, offers $100,000 annually for the mail transportation between the ports of the Argentine Republic and the United States for outgoing mails. There are to-day enterprising men in this country who are willing to make a proposition to carry those mails if they have any guarantee from this Government that a fair and reasonable compensation will be given them for the transportation of mails from this country to that.

Remember the fact that the statute under which you pay to-day for the transportation of your foreign mails was enacted in 1858. You then gave sea and inland postage for the transportation of your foreign mails. In many cases that covered 45 cents a letter, and the compensation extended from that down to the smaller sum. Since that day, throughout the world, there has been a revolution in the matter of the cost of mail transportation by the governments of the world; and under the universal postal union but 5 cents a letter is charged to-day from any one section of the civilized world to any other. You have changed in your legislation the charge that you make to the citizen for carrying his letter, and yet you have never, since 1858, made a single change in the matter of allowance which you give to the vessels carrying your foreign mails.

I desire to make the further statement that this proposition is simply to place your foreign-mail service upon the same basis upon which you placed your railroad transportation, which is that the cost shall not exceed so much per pound per mile. It is on virtually the same basis that you to-day establish your star-route service, the contracts for which are subject to the rule of being awarded to the lowest bidder.

And the purpose of this legislation is that our system may be thoroughly consistent as to the railroad, star-route, steamboat, and foreign-mail service. I desire to say further that in this country, as throughout the civilized world, ocean-mail transportation has been regarded as a handmaid for the development of a marine for defensive purposes as well as of a marine for the carrying of your products to sections of the world where the individual enterprise of your people will not admit of competition with established lines which are aided and abetted by their respective governments; and in this respect the Post-Office Department has ever been an aider and abettor. Gentlemen well know that in connection with the transportation of the mails there is carried on to-day a great banking system by the Post-Office Department, which handles upwards of a hundred millions of dollars through the money-order service.

That has nothing to do with the direct transportation of letters, yet it has been engrafted upon the postal service because the needs and the demands of the people require it. Further than that, we find in what is known as the fast-mail service exactly that which this proviso in the bill proposes to carry out. We give to-day upwards of $200,000 annually for the fast-mail service between points in the East and extreme points in the South. We have given in one year upwards of $600,000 for that same service. The proposition in this bill is identical in principle with that which this very House has engrafted on the present Post-Office bill, covering an appropriation of upwards of $200,000.

Again, what has the Post-Office Department in the mere transportation of mails to do with the conveyance of seeds, bulbs, and clippings, which go directly to aid in the development of the agricultural and farming interests of the country? Bulbs are not, and seeds and cuttings are not mail matter. You lose in your Post-Office Department a million dollars annually because you transmit through the mails seeds and bulbs and that class of matter for the benefit of the agricultural interests.

Within two years the American Congress cut down the postage on newspapers from 2 cents to 1 cent a pound, and to-day from Maine to California newspapers are transmitted at the rate of 1 cent a pound. By that enactment you cut off from the Post-Office, in the year in which you passed it, a million dollars of revenue. Why did you enact that law? Because it was the impression in this House, because it was the good judgment of this House, that the dissemination of information through the newspapers would contribute to the betterment, to the elevation, to the dignity and the true manhood of the American citizen.

You transmit books through the mails; they are not letters; they are not matter such as the mail originally was intended to transport. These measures which you have engrafted upon the postal service have contributed to make you a better and stronger nation. Following the same line of thought and policy, we come now with this appeal and say to you: We do not claim it as a subsidy, but it is a gift to enterprise; it is a gift to American energy; it is the placing of your foreign-mail service upon the same basis as your internal mail service; and we ask that in the development of that service a fair contribution may be made—not as under the law of 1856 but as under the law of thirty years later, the law of 1887—and that there may now be a fair recognition of the value of the development which this foreign-mail service may give to your Post-Office Department. If you do this, we can reach out and bring to ourselves the great trade of the South American nations and use the Post-Office Department in the future as in the past as a handmaid for the development and general growth of our common country. [Applause.] I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The gentleman from Kansas has five minutes.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, several years ago a commission was appointed which went to South America for the purpose of making certain investigations in the interests of this Government. That commission, after discharging its duties, returned and made its report, in which it recommended as one of the measures to be adopted by this Government in the interest of the country that there be more frequent mail communication between the United States and the South American countries.

The proposition involved in this difference between the Senate and the House conferees has for its object the increase of such mail facilities. We expended a large sum of money in sending that commission to South America, and we did it for a purpose. We desired to see whether there could not be some means devised by which the United States and those South American communities could be brought into more immediate communication by which there could be a nearer relationship between them. That money having been expended and the report of that commission having been made, shall we allow to go for naught all that we obtained in the way of advice or recommendation from those commissioners who thoroughly looked into South American affairs, or shall we take some action that will redound to the benefit of our country and give us some remuneration for the money which has been spent in sending out that commission?

The proposition which is now presented is simply to make an experiment; and we are making experiments under the authority of legislation continually. We have to-day passed bills appropriating large amounts of money in order to make experiments for the benefit of this country. Large sums are being expended almost constantly for experimental purposes. Is it not proper and judicious that we should make an experiment in the direction of increasing mail facilities between this country and South America in the hope that benefit may accrue to the producers of this country by developing a market nearer to us than any we now enjoy for the surplus products which we raise?

The present proposition leaves this whole matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. The whole amount to be appropriated will be expended under his discretion. Is it not wise for us to make a trial in this matter during the coming year to see whether good will not ensue? If the result should not be encouraging we need not follow up this matter by any appropriations in the future. But unless we make a trial how can we tell whether we can increase our facilities for mail transportation in this direction? How can we ever determine this question, which was before the Forty-eighth Congress, as well as before the present Congress of the last session? I say let us agree to the amendment which the Senate proposes; let us make this experiment for the coming year and see whether we may not realize important advantages for the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER].

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss at this time the merits of this subsidy amendment at any length; indeed, I had no intention to take up the time of the House at all with reference to it.

The subsidy feature has been so fully debated in the first session of this Congress last summer and again in this and is so fresh in the minds of almost every member that I deem it quite superfluous to waste any time over it now. As it, however, seems that the other end of this Congress is endeavoring to repeat what they did in the closing hours of the Forty-eighth Congress, to tire out the House and coerce us to adopt their subsidy amendment, I feel compelled to enter my solemn protest and insist upon rejecting it.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], for whom I entertain the highest personal regard, has been unfaltering in his advocacy of this amendment. He tells us in his suave way that it is not a subsidy. I fully appreciate the power of his persuasive eloquence. I even believe that he has convinced himself that he really believes all he has told us, and is entirely honest in his ideas, but I believe him to be mistaken. He has produced everything that can be produced in favor of the proposition. The force of his argumentative talent, combined with the charm of his flute-like, mellow voice, has acted like the song of the sirens upon a number of my Republican friends, who last summer to the number of thirty-two withstood all the temptations of the subsidists. They have been charmed by him and have plunged head foremost into the deep sea of this subsidy.

My genial friend from Michigan has eased your conscience by declaring that this is a different proposition from that of last year.

My friends, it is the same old story, the same old raid upon the Treasury, only in a different form. The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau—still the same grasping hands that are so greedy to grab a few millions of Uncle Sam's gold. True, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is not included in this amendment. But, Mr. Speaker, our opposition was not against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company per se.

Our efforts were directed to prevent a raid upon the Treasury of the United States. Whether this raid is perpetrated by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or other kindred concerns is immaterial. We object to paying ten times the value of a service rendered. We object to having a rider upon the Post-Office appropriation bill under the pretense of promoting the commerce of the United States. If it were true that this is a commercial measure, then it ought to have been considered by the proper committee—the Committee on Commerce.

I yield to no gentleman upon this floor in devotion to the best interests of my country. I go as far as anybody on this floor to build up the commerce, the manufactories, and all the interests of my country. I am intensely American, and I want to see this, the country of my choice, the greatest, the happiest, the foremost on the face of the globe. I am, however, earnestly opposed that the patriotism of our citizens should be made the cloak under which certain Eastern gentlemen will succeed in entering the vaults of the Treasury of the United States and help themselves to millions of dollars.

I for one—and I know that I am safe in saying that I speak at least for a number of Republicans—will not allow myself to be intimidated into voting this subsidy by threats of an extra session.

I am willing to have the issue made upon this line. If we can not have a Post-Office appropriation bill without yielding to the demands of these Eastern cormorants and subsidy-hunters, I am willing to have an extra session. We are contending for a principle, and are willing to sacrifice personal convenience in order to maintain it. If you want to play a game of political freeze-out we will join you, but bear in mind we have as many chips as you have. A game of bluff will not work. We have seen your hand and we hold a better one than you do. We know that the people who sent us here will approve of our action. They object to being humbugged out of millions of dollars by those Eastern shippers who conceived their peculiar notions of patriotism in the schools of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Their exhibition of love of our country and her beautiful flag is always accompanied by a clamor for money, by passing around the hat, and their patriotism is of the kind "for revenue only."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] in the course of the debate on a previous conference more than once thought it proper to call attention to the fact that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was not included in this amendment. I wish to say in part that is true and in part it is untrue. The proposition covers the Pacific Mail Steamship Line from San Francisco to Panama. The objection to the Pacific mail grew out of the man who had scandalized this Government by an organized lobby at each end of the Capitol, which is as well known as any other current event. That man, C. P. Huntington, is the vice-president of this Brazilian line which is now seeking a subsidy, and is the principal factor here seeking an additional line to the Argentine Republic.

So whatever weight is to be had in that connection it is not lost by the mere separation of the Pacific Mail Steamship line, for the methods to-night are the same methods employed hitherto—misrepresentation all along the line.

In a communication to the House during the last session of Congress there was an attempt made to mislead the House by the allegation that the Brazilian line got no more for carrying the mails than the actual expenses of entering the ports.

I wish to call attention to one of the items—detention seventy-two hours, at $23.52½ per hour, $1,693.50. The Postmaster-General sent an agent to investigate it as well as into the other false charges. Let me quote from the report of the Postmaster-General in reference to these false charges:

|---|---|
| Pilotage | $176 00 |
| Custom-house duties and petties | 59 64 |
| Light dues | 40 08 |
| Lighter and tarpaulin | 28 80 |
| Landing mails | 8 00 |
| Translating manifest | 16 00 |
| Custom-house agents | 20 00 |
| Porterage | 12 00 |
| Bill of health | 1 76 |
| Telegrams | 4 00 |
| Commissions | 80 00 |
| Detention seventy-two hours, at $23.52½ per hour | 1,693 50 |
| Making a total of | 2,131 78 |
| This amount is credited by freight list | 720 44 |
| Leaving the amount charged to the mail of | 1,411 34 |

My report shows that the agent of the steamship company at this port informed me that it cost to deliver the mail from the steamer to the post-office from $11 to $22; the cost varying as they use a row-boat or steam-launch; this time a steam-launch was used and the cost was about $22. The agent told me that this was as much as the delivery of the mail cost at this port.

As to the charges made for pilotage, custom duties, light dues, lighter and tarpaulin, translating manifest, bill of health, telegrams, and for commissions have no connection whatever with the mails; these charges would be the same if the steamer had no mail.

As to the detention of the steamer seventy-two hours, the facts are these: This is a tidal harbor; at 1.30 p. m. on May 13 the steamer anchored to wait till the tide was high enough for her to go in the harbor; at 2.50 p. m. the steamer went in the harbor, anchoring at 3.15 p. m. The steamer sailed from this port at 2.45 a. m. May 14, so that it will be seen that from the time the steamer anchored near the city of Maranhão, to wait for high tide, till the time she sailed was just thirteen hours and fifteen minutes; the only delay was caused from low tide, which was one hour and twenty minutes. The time the steamer remained in port was consumed with the cargo, unloading the freight.

Now, sir, here was an expense for a vessel detained in port for its mercantile business charged up against the Government for carrying the mails. I refer to this as an illustration of the deception and falsehood here employed when the question is brought up in order to mislead the House.

Again, sir, you have been told in this debate, and it comes from the very same parties—Huntington and his associates—that there is a proposition on the part of the Argentine Republic, in order to get a line established between Montevideo and New York, to give a subsidy of $100,000; and you have been told further that it is a condition precedent to that subsidy that the United States shall add to it a certain sum.

Now, what are the facts? Is that a correct statement? On the contrary, the communication which I had published in the RECORD a day or two ago from Mr. Hanna, the American consul there, states distinctly that the proposition was submitted by these very gentlemen to the Argentine Republic to take the mails from New York to Montevideo, the line referred to, for $100,000. A proposition was made to that government and accepted without condition; and the American minister says that if that line which made the proposition shall refuse to accept it, other companies will take it up.

Mr. BINGHAM. An English company will get it.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; that is the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but the minister says that parties in New York will get it.

Now let us see in reference to this matter. The Postmaster-General thought at one time that a small sum of money might be used to get an increase of the Brazilian line, and also believed that a small sum might create the line to the Argentine Republic. But he finds now that you can not get any increase in the Brazilian line at a reasonable rate; and furthermore, he believes that whether or not the Government gives a dollar to the line for the establishment of the service, it will be put on any how, and by contract with the Argentine Government, without reference to any such action as that suggested on the part of this Government.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. I supposed not.

Mr. BLOUNT. See how misleading these statements of the subsidy hunters are! They have come here with correspondence showing that unless the American Government contributed to these subsidies there would be a failure to establish the line, when on the contrary, there is a correspondence of an official character from our minister showing that they have got a proposition to put it on already, and the Argentine Government has accepted the bid. It is just as truthful as the statement we have heard in reference to the expenditures above referred to.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow a question now?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. I supposed the gentleman would not yield.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend has had a good deal to say about the pay being very insignificant for this service.

Mr. BURROWS. How about the $55,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Michigan has had his say, and the gentleman owes it to me and to himself not to interrupt me.

Mr. BURROWS. I will not, of course, if the gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now let us look at the figures for a moment. The American lines, at sea and inland postage, are paid three times as much as the foreign ships are paid, and these are glad to get the business at that rate. The American lines are paid just as much as the express companies charge, and they have no risk, and hence there is no insurance to pay on what they carry for the Government. Now talk about business transactions.

Is not this pay ample when it is what the express companies charge for the service? The Postmaster-General says it is. He has stated so in a report which has been submitted to this House, for which he was denounced by the steamship companies and their friends. But the House, after a long debate and a deliberate consideration, by an overwhelming vote rejected the idea that the compensation was not sufficient. This, I say, is conclusive of the matter.

Gentleman in this discussion have also been referring to the old rate of letter-postage at 45 cents, a rate paid many years ago when the compulsory clause was passed, and have been comparing it with the rate of to-day. To get the higher rates cited you have to make the calculation on the basis of transporting from this country to England and then back to South America.

Now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding this change the reduction of rates has multiplied the amount of mail matter until these ships are getting now in money more than they did then. It is, then, just as I have already stated, the pay they receive is a pay that business men accept everywhere, and are glad to get it.

Now I want to call attention briefly to a statement of the Post-Office Department on this subject of compensation for the different classes of service. They have furnished a table showing the amount per mile paid for the year 1885 for the transportation of mail by railway, star routes, steamboat, coastwise service, and the American steamship service to foreign ports, and also the average amount paid to the eight principal lines of American steamships, as well as the amount that would have been paid if the American steamships had received the sea and inland postage on these lines.

This table shows that the average amount paid per mile to the railroads was nearly 11 cents; the average amount paid on the star-route service was about 6½ cents; the amount paid the steamboat and coastwise service nearly 16 cents, which has been since reduced, while the amount paid, if sea and inland postage was the basis, to the eight American lines, would be a little over 14 cents, showing that the sea and inland postage was considerably greater than the average amount paid for the railroad or star-route service, and nearly equal to the steamboat service, for at the time this table was made the rates for that class of service were somewhat higher than now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, a number of gentlemen have expressed a desire to insert in the RECORD remarks upon this proposition, not being able to get recognition, and I ask unanimous consent that they be permitted to do so.

There was no objection.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 137, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—98.

Mr. EDEN. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WISE with Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, for the rest of the night.

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. HOPKINS, for the rest of the night.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. THOMPSON, for the rest of the night.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. WEST, for the rest of the night.

Mr. HOLMAN with Mr. CANNON, for the rest of the evening, being absent on a conference committee.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. RANNEY, for the rest of the night; also on this vote. If present, Mr. RANNEY would vote "aye" and Mr. WARNER "no."

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. RICE, on this vote.

Mr. MULLER. I desire to know if my vote is recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recorded as having voted in the negative.

Mr. MULLER. That is the way I want to vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 118) to print the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward Shakespeare concerning the nature, &c., of epidemic cholera;

Joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition.

ADJUSTMENT OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. COBB. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 1 and insert as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court each of the railroad land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and heretofore unadjusted."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 2, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 2. That if it shall appear, upon the completion of such adjustments respectively, or sooner, that lands have been, from any cause, heretofore erroneously certified or patented, by the United States, to or for the use or benefit of any company claiming by, through, or under grant from the United States, to aid in the construction of a railroad, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to thereupon demand from such company a relinquishment or reconveyance to the United States of all such lands, whether within granted or indemnity limits; and if such company shall neglect or fail to so reconvey such lands to the United States within ninety days after the aforesaid demand shall have been made, it shall thereupon be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel all patents, certification, or other evidence of title heretofore issued for such lands, and to restore the title thereof to the United States.

"SEC. 3. That if, in the adjustment of said grants, it shall appear that the homestead or pre-emption entry of any bona fide settler has been erroneously canceled on account of any railroad grant or the withdrawal of public lands from market, such settler, upon application, shall be reinstated in all his rights and allowed to perfect his entry by complying with the public-land laws: Provided, That he has not located another claim, or made an entry in lieu of the one so erroneously canceled: And provided also, That he did not voluntarily abandon said original entry: And provided further, That if any of said settlers do not renew their application to be reinstated within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, then all such unclaimed lands shall be disposed of under the public-land laws, with priority of right given to bona fide purchasers of said unclaimed lands, if any, and if there be no such purchasers, then to bona fide settlers residing thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 3, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That as to all lands, except those mentioned in the foregoing section, which have been so erroneously certified or patented as aforesaid and which have been sold by the grantee company to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, the person or persons so purchasing, in good faith, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to the land so purchased, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase at the proper land office, within such time and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the grants respectively shall have been adjusted; and patents of the United States shall issue therefor, and shall relate back to the date of the original certification or patenting; and the Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, shall demand payment from the company which has so disposed of such lands of an amount equal to the Government price of similar lands; and in case of neglect or refusal of such company to make payment as hereafter specified, within ninety days after the demand shall have been made, the Attorney-General shall cause suit or suits to be brought against such company for the said amount: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent any purchaser of lands erroneously withdrawn, certified, or patented as aforesaid from recovering the purchase-money therefor from the grantee company, less the amount paid to the United States by such company as by this act required: And provided, That a mortgage or pledge of said lands by the company shall not be considered as a sale for the purpose of this act, nor shall this act be construed as a declaration of forfeiture of any portion of any land grant for conditions broken, or as authorizing an entry for the same, or as a waiver of any rights that the United States may have on account of any branch of said conditions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 4 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 5. That where any said company shall have sold to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, as a part of its grant, lands not conveyed to or for the use of such company, said lands being the numbered sections prescribed in the grant, and being coterminous with the constructed parts of said road, and where the lands so sold are for any reason excepted from the operation of the grant to said company, it shall be lawful for the bona fide purchaser thereof from said company to make payment to the United States for said lands at the ordinary Government price for like lands, and thereupon patents shall issue therefor to the said bona fide purchaser, his heirs or assigns: Provided, That all lands shall be excepted from the provisions of this section which at the date of such sales were in the bona fide occupation of adverse claimants under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and whose claims and occupation have not since been voluntarily abandoned, as to which excepted lands the said pre-emption and homestead claimants shall be permitted to perfect their proofs and entries and receive patents therefor: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to lands settled on subsequent to the 1st day of December, 1882, by persons claiming to enter the same under the settlement laws of the United States, as to which lands the parties claiming the same as aforesaid shall be entitled to prove up and enter as in other like cases."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amenment, as follows:

"Strike out section 5 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 6. That where any such lands have been sold and conveyed, as the property of any railroad company, for State and county taxes thereon, and the grant to such company has been thereafter forfeited, the purchaser thereof shall have the prior right, which shall continue for one year from the approval of this act, and no longer, to purchase such lands from the United States at the Government price, and patents for such lands shall thereupon issue: Provided, That said lands were not, previous to or at the time of the taking effect of such grant, in the possession of or subject to the right of any actual settler."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out section 6, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 7. That no more lands shall be certified or conveyed to any State or to any corporation or individual, for the benefit of either of the companies herein mentioned, where it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that such transfers may create an excess over the quantity of lands to which such State, corporation, or individual would be rightfully entitled."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN A. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. M. TELLER,
E. C. WALTHALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. COBB. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose this is now open to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. NELSON. I dislike to occupy the time of the House, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (H. Res. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10900) to regulate the construction and operation of elevators within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 899) for the relief of A. S. Bloom.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. HARRIS.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House on the Post-Office appropriation bill the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. J. M. TAYLOR, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a question now pending, so the Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has the floor.

ADJUSTMENT OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to take up the time of the House with any debate on this bill. I simply desire to ask either the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] to explain to the House the nature and effect of the bill as it has been agreed upon. I remember what it was when it passed the House, and I would like to have its provisions as they stand now explained.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very briefly, it is this. There were found to be grants made to railroads in the State of Kansas, where there was no question as to the completion of the roads in time, or as to forfeiture or anything of that kind, but where the Department had issued to the companies more lands than the grants contained—in one case, that of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, 15,000 acres more than could by any possibility be in the grant. Accordingly the bill when it passed last year was known as the Kansas adjustment bill.

Mr. NELSON. But it included other roads.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, it was so reported by our committee and became a general bill. By that bill this excess land was required to be restored to the public domain, and in order to do that it became necessary that the title should be caused to revert to the United States. Then the bill was made a general bill both here and in the Senate, and it is now a general bill and applies to cases where, when the adjustment of the grant is made, it shall be found that more land has been certified or patented to the railroad company than the grant really gives. This bill simply provides for that excess land.

Mr. NELSON. What is to be done with that excess land?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. By the second section of the bill the title reverts to the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Suppose it has passed to the company, and from the company to third parties; how then?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The second section requires that the Secretary of the Interior shall make demand upon the company to relinquish and reconvey its title, and in the event of the company refusing to do that, then the Attorney-General is to enter proceedings to have the title reconveyed to the United States. Then, as to this excess land, where it is found after such adjustment that the homesteader or pre-emptor had title when the title of the company attached, the second section of the bill secures him priority of right in perfecting that title. Then as to another class of lands, namely, lands which the company has sold, the fourth section gives to the purchaser of that land his title.

I think the gentleman will find that all of the points that can be guarded in such a bill have been very carefully guarded. The bill has been in conference for twenty-four hours, the conferees on the part of the Senate being Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. WALTHALL, and I can assure the House that there has been every disposition on the part of the managers representing both bodies to reach an agreement, and that the agreement which has been reached is believed to be just and satisfactory to all interests concerned.

Mr. NELSON. One more question and I shall have done. Does this deal with any but this so-called excess land?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is all; and the bill is not a forfeiture bill, as we use that term in the House. It is simply a measure to protect the rights of the Government and the rights of settlers and purchasers as to these excess lands. It is not a forfeiture bill.

Mr. NELSON. I can see no objection to it as the gentleman explains it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HAYES.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I send to the desk a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of John Hayes, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the expenses attending his last illness and funeral, not to exceed the sum of $250.

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the foregoing, having considered the same, report it back with the recommendation that it be adopted. The deceased was the locksmith employed in the Clerk's office, and died in the employ of the House. The resolution is the usual one in such cases, and in accordance with that practice the committee recommend its passage.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM FIGLEY.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
DANIEL ERMENTROUT,
B. M. CUTCHEON,
Managers on the part of the House.
BENJAMIN HARRISON,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will state that the amendment of the Senate simply fixed a date for the discharge of this enlisted man; that is all. [Cries of "All right;" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The report was adopted.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to suspend the rules so as to put on its passage the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with. I will state the purpose of the bill.

There is nothing in this bill which has not been reported upon favorably by the Committee on Commerce of the House except certain Senate amendments, the effect of which I will state. The Secretary of War advised that bridges between Saint Louis and Cairo be 500 feet wide in the middle span and 50 feet above high water. Now, some parties wanted this bridge 85 feet high; and I have here a telegram from Mr. Scudder, the president of the Anchor line of steamers, in which he accedes to the provision now in the bill requiring the bridge to be 85 feet high, which is 45 feet more than the Secretary of War has declared to be necessary. Mr. Scudder asked that 500 feet be the width of the central span; and I have a telegram from him to that effect. In this bill we provide that the central span shall be 650 feet. This bridge under the provisions of this bill will be 10 feet higher than the Memphis bridge, and 50 feet wider.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust the motion of the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas will prevail. His terse and lucid exposition of the provisions of this bill obviates the necessity of any extended remarks from me. But representing, as I do, a constituency almost exclusively agricultural, and wishing to foster competition between rail and river, lower rates, and extend to them every facility for cheap transportation that ingenuity can devise or legislation effect, I desire to add my voice to his and appeal to the House most earnestly for the immediate consideration and passage of this measure.

Every requirement that the most critical and fastidious opposition could suggest or exact has been satisfactorily met, and this bill comes to us from the Senate with the joint approval of the railroads, the river interests, and the people of the already great but rapidly growing South and West.

I trust, therefore, that no factious opposition will be made; that the motion to suspend the rules may prevail, and that the bill may pass.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of dispute as to the width which should be required for this bridge. Some say that the main span should be 750 feet. In this bill the Senate has fixed it at 650 feet. I think the gentleman from Arkansas ought to allow an amendment to insert 750 feet as the width of the main span. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. MORRISON. That would mean no bridge at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask the Clerk to read the telegram of Mr. Scudder, who is president of the largest steamboat company in the West.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAINT LOUIS, MO., March 2, 1887.

We have no objection to a bridge at Grand Tower, one span not less than 85 feet high above high-water mark, and one span of 500 feet in width. On the contrary, we wish all assistance given such bridge.

JOHN A. SCUDDER.
JNO. G. PRATHER.

Hon. WILLIAM DAWSON.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The main span of the Memphis bridge is 750 feet.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No; it is 600 feet. I have a statement of the Committee on Commerce to that effect.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have a statement made in the Senate by Senator VEST to the effect that the main spans of the Memphis bridge and the Natchez bridge are 750 feet.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Here is a statement prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Commerce showing that the main span of the Memphis bridge is 600 feet. The gentleman can read it himself. The bridge authorized by this bill will be 50 feet wider and 10 feet higher.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. This bill has never been considered by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Every feature of it has been considered except these increases, which are deemed an improvement. The bill goes that much beyond what the committee ask.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But this bill has not received the sanction of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill; but before the reading was concluded—

Mr. DUNHAM said: Mr. Speaker, numerous gentlemen here who desire to be recognized object to the consumption of time in reading this bill. I think we ought to know what is in the bill before we vote on it; but in compliance with the urgent requests of gentlemen, I withdraw the demand for the reading.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I renew the demand.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, but was interrupted by—

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, who said: I withdraw the demand for the reading of the bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

HOTEL AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. NEGLEY. I move that the rules be suspended, and the joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va., be passed.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to John F. Chamberlin to build a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, upon such site and with such plans and dimensions as may be approved by the Secretary of War and the commanding officer at Fortress Monroe: Provided, That the State of Virginia, by its General Assembly and governor, shall, by proper legal enactment, give the consent of said State to the erection of such hotel, and that the building or buildings erected shall be removed, at the expense of the owner or owners, whenever the Secretary of War shall so direct; and no claim for damages by reason of such removal shall be made upon the Government of the United States: And provided further, That the buildings so erected shall be subject to State and national taxation as other property.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand a second.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask by unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes; I object. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no further objection, and by unanimous consent the second is considered as ordered. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes in favor and fifteen minutes in opposition to it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is only necessary to announce to the House that this bill has a written approval of the Secretary of War, the General of the Army, and the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to know what precedent there is in this country for this legislation. I do not care if there is a hotel there now; that is no reason why the Government should continue to keep leasing or granting the right to erect hotels on the Government property.

Why should it be in this particular case? What are the special reasons which surround Mr. John Chamberlin and his associates that in the closing moments of this Congress we should grant this permit.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. We want a hotel there—a good hotel.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let Mr. Chamberlin get his ground and build a hotel upon it, as other people do.

Mr. NEGLEY. There is one there now. This is to prevent monopoly.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. It is a good place to have a hotel and John Chamberlin is a good man to keep it. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEGLEY. It breaks up a monopoly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It breaks up a monopoly by making another monopoly. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 141, noes 29.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered (14 only voting in favor thereof).

The rules were suspended and the bill passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

ALICE KELLEY.

Mr. SWOPE. I present the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "twelve" insert "twenty."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN A. SWOPE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
J. D. CAMERON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY SENATE BILL 2382.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate bill 2382, placing Alice Kelley on the pension-roll, report:

The Senate bill placed this pension at $25, which was amended by the House so as to give her $12.

The conferees have agreed that her pension be fixed at $20, this being the amount which the House has fixed in the case of several pensions to nurses whose services and present destitution are not as great as those of the beneficiary of this bill.

Mr. SWOPE demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. SWOPE moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

B. B. CONNOR.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to refund and pay to B. B. Connor & Brother, now of Louisville, Ky., surviving partners of the late firm of B. B. Connor, Brother & Swan, of Nashville, Tenn., the sum of $4,420.32, net proceeds paid into the Treasury from sale of 170 tierces and 120 barrels of lard, shipped by them March 24, 1862, from Nashville to Louisville, without a permit, in ignorant violation of law and trade regulations, and seized, libelled, and sold by the United States, the same having been so shipped after due inquiry, without willful negligence or intent to violate any law or trade regulations; and for that purpose the sum of $4,420.32 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask by unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered in order that I may explain it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I consent to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. Thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in favor of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to say briefly that Mr. Connor resided in Nashville; was a loyal citizen, and sent a lot of lard to Louisville without being aware that it was necessary under the Treasury regulations to be provided with a permit for that purpose. He sent it on a Government boat; he was recognized as a loyal citizen by the authorities of Nashville, and when it reached Louisville, because of this technical violation of the rule requiring the permit, the lard was seized, and subsequently it was sold at a great loss to him.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. When was this?

Mr. WILLIS. During the war. His claim went to the Department, and was from there referred to Congress, and it was reported favorably on by Mr. MORRISON in the Forty-fourth Congress; has been passed several times by the House, and has also passed the Senate; is now favorably reported by the Senate committee; has the unanimous report of the House committee, passed the Senate by a unanimous vote; and, as exhibiting the gist of the matter, I will ask the Clerk to read a few lines of the report, which states the whole facts.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. How much lard did he have?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not able to state the exact number of pounds; it is stated in the report.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. What was the price?

Mr. WILLIS. I think the price at that time was about 15 cents a pound, but it was sold for between 4 and 6 cents a pound.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Has this been favorably reported by the House Committee on War Claims?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. From what committee?

Mr. WILLIS. From the Committee on War Claims. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. You say this was on a Government boat?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; it was shipped on a Government boat from Nashville to Louisville. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in this report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A loyal citizen of the United States had purchased and paid for in good faith property which the Government agents found in his possession, and after full examination and careful scrutiny of his books was recognized as his property. This possession and ownership continuing for a month after Federal occupation of Nashville, and there being no market for his goods there, the owner, as the judge certifies, in good faith and openly, and in ignorance of the law, shipped his goods on a Government boat to Louisville. The goods, &c., were seized and condemned, not because of any suspicion of disloyalty or any question of ownership, but simply for failure to comply with a technical regulation.

It would, in the opinion of this committee, be harsh and unjust for the Government under such circumstances to retain the proceeds of the sale, and they recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to inquire if that report shows no more than the facts which have been read from the desk?

Mr. WILLIS. The report shows the whole statement of the case, but it is rather lengthy. I asked only to have that portion read which crystallizes in a condensed form the report of the committee. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that this was a quantity of lard which was shipped from Nashville to Louisville without a permit, which was then required, the party being ignorant of that requirement. It was sold there subsequently at a great loss. It has been reported several times favorably, once by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] in the Forty-fourth Congress, and it has just dropped out between the two Houses.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a bill for the relief of a private individual—one man—and it is a war claim at that. Even if there was time enough to properly investigate it I doubt the propriety of passing it. However that may be, there are other bills here, one affecting the people of my State, a portion of them, about twelve hundred families, situated upon a railroad land grant, being harassed——

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy but four minutes and yield the rest of my time to other gentlemen. I want to say, in the first place, that this is a private claim. It is a claim reported here by the War Claims Committee. I do not know who made the report; but it is a question that should be considered by this House.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Speaker, I think it is proper that I should say here in my place to the people of my district that I have had a public measure, a Senate bill, which has been upon the Calendar for more than a year, and that I have been promised at least half a dozen times to be recognized.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 154, noes 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this question the ayes are 154 and the noes 15. More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative——

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I demand tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers; and they were refused—only 10 members rising in support of the demand.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS to suspend the rules and pass the bill was then agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I move to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. Pending that motion I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a motion to adjourn pending.

Mr. WHEELER. But pending that motion I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman should understand that there is a motion to adjourn pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. A conference report may be received even pending a motion to adjourn.

JOHN A. LONDON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama state that he desires to present a conference report?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill of the Senate (H. R. 831) for the relief of John A. London, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
F. L. WOLFORD,
G. W. STEELE,
Managers on the part of the House.

BENJAMIN HARRISON,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10900) to regulate the construction and operation of elevators within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 899) for the relief of A. S. Bloom.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] that the House adjourn.

Mr. COWLES. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. FELTON. I want to know what a motion to adjourn now means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It means to adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg pardon. It means an adjournment sine die. This House can not sit on the 4th of March. The legislative day of the 3d of March must continue until final adjournment. An adjournment now means an extra session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated what the motion is. It is not for the Chair to state its effect.

Mr. COWLES. I desire to know whether the effect of the motion would not be an adjournment sine die.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to ask a parliamentary question.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

PHILIP TAYLOR.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to make a conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
EGBERT L. VIELE,
JAMES W. NEGLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

BENJAMIN HARRISON,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. NELSON. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee on Indian Affairs from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and put the same on its passage.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 3005) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation in Montana Territory.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I raise the question of consideration upon the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration can not be raised against a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I have a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I desire to call up for present consideration the veto message of the President upon Senate bill 856. This I understand to be a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. NELSON. I have not surrendered the floor.

[At this point the Speaker resumed the chair.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] will state his question of privilege.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DAYTON, OHIO—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I desire to call up for present consideration the veto message of the President upon Senate bill 856. I desire that the question be considered and that the House pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 856) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has this bill been referred to a committee?

Mr. DIBBLE. I raise the question of consideration upon the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The SPEAKER. Should the House determine to consider the matter that motion will be in order. The gentleman from South Carolina raises the question of consideration.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will simply state that there are eight of these public building bills which have been vetoed. If the House desires to consume in their consideration the remainder of the session, then let it decide to take up this measure.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The question being taken, "Will the House consider the bill?" there were—ayes 65, noes 58.

Mr. DIBBLE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope we will not take the yeas and nays twice on this bill. I suggest, by unanimous consent, we only take the yeas and nays on passing the bill over the President's veto.

Mr. LONG. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on ordering the yeas and nays.

A MEMBER. What is it on?

The SPEAKER. On the question of consideration.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DIBBLE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, were appointed tellers.

Mr. DIBBLE. I withdraw the point of no quorum and will let the question be decided by yeas and nays on passing the bill over the veto.

So the House agreed to consider the question.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on passing the bill, notwithstanding the objection of the President.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will take the floor and ask that the message of the President be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill 856, entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio."

It is not claimed that the Government has any public department or business which it should quarter at Dayton except its post-office and internal-revenue office. The former is represented as employing ten clerks, sixteen regular and two substitute letter-carriers, and two special-delivery employés, who, I suppose, are boys, only occasionally in actual service.

I do not understand that the present post-office quarters are either insufficient or inconvenient. By a statement prepared by the present postmaster it appears that they are rented by the Government for a period of ten years from the 15th day of October, 1883, at an annual rent of $2,950, which includes the cost of heating the same.

The office of the internal-revenue collector is claimed to be inadequate, but I am led to believe that this officer is fairly accommodated at an annual rental of $900. It is not impossible that a suggestion to change the area of this revenue district may be adopted, which would relieve any complaint of inadequacy of office room.

With only these two offices to provide for, I am not satisfied that the expenditure of $150,000 for their accommodation, as proposed by this bill, is in accordance with sound business principles or consistent with that economy in public affairs which has been promised to the people.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 9, 1886.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I desire to make a statement, if I can have the attention of the House. The city of Dayton has a population of between 55,000 and 60,000 inhabitants. A post-office and revenue office located there turn over into the United States Treasury nearly $2,000,000 annually. The Government of the United States is paying now about $4,000 a year rent. It is the only large city in the United States unprovided with a public building. There are one hundred and sixteen Government buildings in the United States in towns smaller than this one. There are but thirty-eight cities in the United States that have Government buildings that are larger than the city of Dayton.

Mr. MCKINLEY. How much does this bill carry?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars. I ask for the reading of the report of the Senate committee. I have the right to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to submit any paper not disrespectful to the Senate or the House; it is an official proceeding.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on passing the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 133, noes 64, not voting 122; as follows:

Mr. LE FEVRE. I wish to state that I have been absent on a conference committee, but if present would have voted "aye."

Mr. WILSON. I have been necessarily absent from several roll-calls to-day, being engaged in conferences. If present, I should have voted "aye" on this question.

The following additional pairs were announced for this night:

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. COBB with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. OATES with Mr. MOFFATT.

Mr. TURNER with Mr. RICE.

Mr. JONES, of Texas, with Mr. LINDSLEY.

Mr. BARNES. I desire to say in behalf of my colleague, Mr. TURNER, that he was compelled to leave the House, being quite unwell.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 222) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 229) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1887;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 293) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands;

A bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines;

A bill (H. R. 1753) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton;

A bill (H. R. 3365) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Samuel H. Moer;

A bill (H. R. 8978) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer; and

A bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 264) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move that the House now take up Senate bill 763 as reported from the Senate, being passed by that body over the veto of the President, and put it upon its passage; and upon that I ask to be heard briefly.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON. I submit a privileged report from a conference committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

WM. L. WILSON,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. In reporting a second inability to agree, Mr. Speaker, I desire to explain to the House very briefly the irreconcilable differences between the conferees of the two Houses on this bill, and the first point is upon the appropriations to be used for the coming year for the improvement of the streets and avenues. The House Appropriations Committee gave 75 per cent. of the estimates called for by the commissioners, adopted, with a single exception, a schedule of streets to be improved by the commissioners, but went a little further than that, and apportioned the amount to be appropriated, amounting to the sum of $300,000 among the five grand divisions of the city, under the impression, under the belief, under what they conceived to be a positive knowledge that some such restriction as this is necessary in the interest of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia as to the localities in which these sums are to be expended.

The Senate committee and the Senate have increased that proposed appropriation by the sum of $100,000, and have stricken out the distribution made by the House among the five sections of the city. In order to arrive at an ageement, if possible, upon that item of the bill, the House conferees have offered to increase the amount to be expended for this purpose from $300,000 to $350,000, but have adhered studiously to their own scheme of distribution among the grand divisions of the city. We have offered to the Senate conferees to make this increase in the appropriation to be distributed according to the scheme adopted by the House in the several sections of the District.

Now, I wish to say here, in explanation of the remarks made on yesterday, that in framing this bill, and in attempting, as we believed it to be our duty, representing the tax-payers of the District of Columbia, representing the two millions of local revenues gathered here for the expenses of the local government, we deemed it our duty to make these appropriations as specific as possible, and to leave very little that could be avoided to the discretion of agents, that is, to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their expenditures.

I need hardly say for myself, and the other members of the committee that framed this bill, that it has not been done in any distrust of the present commissioners of the District of Columbia. We believe them to be, we concede them to be, men of the highest personal integrity, but we believe that specific appropriations, under all circumstances, are the proper appropriations, and that no Government agents should have intrusted to them large sums of money for indefinite expenditure, according to their own discretion.

In fixing these limits we have aimed to do for the District of Columbia only that which Congress and its committees aim to do for every department of the Federal Government in the expenditure of these appropriations. It does not imply a distrust of the agent if the power under which he acts is made specific.

Another point of irreconcilable difference between the conferees of the House, Mr. Speaker, has been upon the amendment of the Senate proposing to appropriate $60,000 for constructing county roads and suburban streets, a new item in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, in every respect equivalent, as we regard it, to a new item, of one-half that amount, for opening suburban roads and streets, and we have refused to agree to this appropriation, not because we are unwilling to appropriate whatever amount may be reasonable or necessary for work upon or improvements of existing public highways outside of the city limits, but because we believe that the phraseology of that appropriation is entirely equivalent to the phraseology of the appropriation of last year, and would permit the expenditure of this amount in the opening of new streets and avenues not yet demanded by the population of the District of Columbia or by the convenience of the people of the District themselves, being all the time willing, as I have said, to increase, and offered to increase, the appropriation by $30,000, in order that work upon existing streets and avenues may be continued, and offering to allow the Senate conferees to incorporate streets and avenues they deemed proper to be improved by this expenditure.

Another point of disagreement, Mr. Speaker, is as to the appropriation for the public schools, not for the ordinary running of the schools, but for the erection of new school buildings in the District for the coming year. The House committee went beyond the estimates in providing an additional school building—an eight-room school building—at an expense for the building of $25,000 and $3,000 for an exchange of site. The Senate committee went beyond that by the addition of another building in another division of the city, to cost $10,000 for the site and $25,000 for the building, and then added that omnibus provision, against which we have firmly taken our stand, authorizing the commissioners of the District to sell any lots or parcels of ground in the District deemed by them not needed at present for District purposes, and to apply the proceeds of sale to the erection of new buildings. We were not willing to give this power, not that we were unwilling to trust these commissioners particularly, but we did not deem it proper in an appropriation bill, where such matters could not be carefully considered, to give these commissioners this undefined, unrestricted power of selling any property in the District they might deem it advisable to sell, and to erect new buildings wherever they might deem it advisable to erect them. A bill for that very purpose, for the sale of this property, has been considered, and, as I am informed, has been rejected by the District of Columbia Committee of this House at the present session. We could not pass upon this matter in an appropriation report. But not to be outdone in any necessary and laudable zeal for the providing of school accommodations in the District, we have offered to the Senate, striking out this general provision, to appropriate $70,000 for the erection of two new school buildings, one for the colored and another for the white schools in the designated divisions of the city of Washington.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And to accept a third one they have already in the bill.

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Making $105,000 of an advance for schools.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; making, as my colleague on the committee of conference says, $105,000 advance since the bill left the House, where we had advanced $28,000 beyond the estimate of the commissioners for the erection of new school buildings in the District in the coming year.

Mr. GOFF. How many additional buildings does that provide for?

Mr. WILSON. It provides for six eight-room buildings additional, and also for two one-room buildings in the suburban part of the District, making a provision for the coming year far in excess, as I believe, of any that has been made in any recent year, or perhaps in any year—a provision for the erection of fifty new school-rooms in the coming year in the District.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the chief points of difference between the conferees of the two Houses; and having been unable to agree, we come and submit them to the House and ask the House to accept our report and to insist further on the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on accepting the report.

The report was accepted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia now moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and request a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. WILSON, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I again call up the consideration of the bill (S. 763) vetoed by the President.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has a matter of privilege before the House, having called up for consideration a veto message of the President. But the Chair understands the gentleman from Virginia desires to make a report not for action, but to have it printed.

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield for that purpose.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the resolution referred to that committee on the 22d of January in relation to the Hawaiian treaty, accompanied by a report in writing.

The report was ordered to be printed, and to lie over for the present.

SECTIONS 5191 AND 5192 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me to move non-concurrence in amendments by the Senate to the bill H. R. 9110.

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to agree to the request of the Senate for a committee of conference.

Mr. NELSON. I do not lose my ground, I presume, by this?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that his motion is suspended for the time being by the privileged matter called up by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendments of the Senate having been read, were non-concurred in, and the request of the Senate for a committee of conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. MILLER, Mr. WILKINS, and Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me to take up a Senate bill and move to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate without any debate.

Mr. STRUBLE. If I may retain the floor, I will yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Then, if there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House the House bill with the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, the amendments have been read once this evening in the House, and I now ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur and agree to a conference.

Mr. STRAIT and Mr. HERMANN objected, but subsequently withdrew their objections, and the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in and a conference agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE].

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, internal-revenue office, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Sioux City, Iowa. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Iowa shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein. For the purposes of this act the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration against this bill.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this another bill proposed to be passed over the President's veto?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. COWLES. Then I want to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has already raised that question. The question now is, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the bill? This question is not debatable.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, and the Speaker declared that he was unable to determine the result.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays, but withdrew the demand.

Mr. SCOTT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 73, not voting 138; as follows:

So the House determined to proceed to consider the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. NEGLEY and Mr. SCOTT objected.

Mr. NEGLEY subsequently withdrew his objection, but Mr. SCOTT insisted upon his, and the names were read.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, on this vote.

Mr. BOUTELLE with Mr. MCMILLIN, on this vote.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House for a few moments.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the veto message.

The SPEAKER. That can be done in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] when he takes the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to debate until the previous question is moved; then we shall have an opportunity to debate the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not object to debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not object unless the previous question is moved. If it is not moved, I will move it myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] has the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not object to debate. This is a debatable motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can the gentleman from Iowa take the floor for two or three minutes and then move the previous question on the bill?

The SPEAKER. He can, but the House is not obliged to sustain it.

Mr. SCOTT. Can we have the bill read?

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read.

Mr. SCOTT. Is a motion now in order to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order whenever the gentleman gets the floor. At present the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] has the floor.

Mr. STRUBLE. With the understanding that there shall be fifteen minutes' debate on each side, I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House allows thirty minutes for debate after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the previous question cut off the right to make a motion to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] calls for the previous question on the passage of this bill over the veto.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, to be equally divided between the two sides.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 1255) to authorize the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. Res. 26) to provide for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

A bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointment of civil officers;

A bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg;

A bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice;

A bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 253) for printing 5,000 copies of Commander Schley's report of his search for the Greely expedition.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

The House resumed the consideration of the veto message of the President of the United States.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, provides for an appropriation of $100,000 with which to erect a public building at Sioux City, Iowa. The President vetoed the bill; and as one of his grounds—I understand the main one—he says he finds upon examination that United States courts are sometimes held in Sioux City. I wish to say for the information of the House that under the law United States courts have been held at Sioux City regularly twice a year for the last four years, and the business of the courts has been increasing annually since the first term. The President was under a misapprehension with respect to this fact.

Now, with regard to the population of Sioux City. The State census, taken in 1885, showed at Sioux City a population of 19,000. A census taken a year later disclosed a population of 23,000. It is within my personal knowledge that since that time the city has grown rapidly, and I estimate that it has now not less than 25,000 people.

Accompanying the report of the House committee on this bill there is a strong letter addressed to me by Judge Shiras, the district judge, urging the importance of this bill.

Mr. LONG. What appropriation do you ask for?

Mr. STRUBLE. One hundred thousand dollars. Judge Shiras urges that this bill be passed, so as to provide within reasonable time a suitable place for the courts now held in that city and for the United States officers located there. I have not time to read that letter, for I do not wish to detain the House; but I will say that the postmaster of Sioux City, in reply to a letter addressed to him by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury in February, 1886, discloses the fact that, in addition to the United States courts, there are located in that city the following Federal officers: district attorney, deputy marshal, pension examiner, paymaster, United States commissioner, United States internal-revenue collector, and headquarters of military and Indian supplies.

The cost of the post-office in that city under the present lease is $2,200 a year. That lease will expire in two years from this time, when, to my knowledge, that building must be vacated, because a large hotel has been built adjoining it by the owners of the post-office building, and they want to use the post-office building in connection with the hotel as soon as the lease expires.

Mr. BAKER. How far is it to the nearest public building?

Mr. STRUBLE. The gentleman from New York asks how far it is from that point to the nearest city having a public building. Council Bluffs, 75 miles away.

The terms of court to which I referred are regular terms, and Judge Shiras discloses, in his letter, a fact well known to me, that since the court was established there the business has been increased to a large extent.

Unless gentlemen want to ask me questions, which I would be glad to answer [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"], I will reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, since I have been a member of this House to the best of my recollection I have never objected to any proposition of any gentleman upon this floor; but in justice to myself I want to explain why, on this occasion, I object to the proposition made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE]. I desired to pass a bridge bill [laughter]—I will explain it—across the Missouri River at this very Sioux City, where he wants the Government of the United States to expend $100,000 to erect a public building, and the gentleman from Iowa has persistently objected that bill off the Calendar. [Laughter.]

Ten years ago a charter was granted by the Government for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Sioux City, and from that day to this not one single shovel-full of earth or one stone has been quarried for its construction. That charter is in the hands of four or five individuals and they hold it for speculative purposes. And when in good faith a corporation desires to build a bridge across the Missouri River at Sioux City it is the gentleman from Iowa who comes up and object it off the Calendar.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Two wrongs do not make one right.

Mr. SCOTT. I know of no way in this world except to treat others as they treat me.

Mr. MILLIKEN rose.

Mr. SCOTT. Now let us look into the merits of this bill.

The proposition is to have the Government expend $100,000 upon a public building at Sioux City, which claims to have a population of 19,000 people, and it is likely the 19,000 people would dwindle to 10,000 or 12,000 under a correct census, and the cost of the building reach $150,000 or $200,000, in place of $100,000, before we got through with it.

Now, where does the economy come in so far as the Government's interest goes? The gentleman says the Government is now paying $2,200 rent at Sioux City. If the building only costs $100,000, and money is worth 4 per cent. per annum, there would be a saving of $1,800 per annum to the Government by renting facilities at Sioux City in place of passing this bill over the President's veto.

Mr. STRUBLE. For a post-office.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Is this bill right?

Mr. SCOTT. I will not yield to any one. The gentleman representing the Sioux City district can support a bill appropriating $100,000 of the people's money for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, and yet he can stand here day after day and night after night objecting to a bill for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Sioux City which will cost possibly half a million of dollars, and which the people of this country will not be taxed for.

The gentleman is not willing that the producers of the West and the consumers of the East, nor even the people of his own city shall enjoy the advantages which this bridge would give them, simply because four or five men have an old charter for a bridge at Sioux City which they wish to dispose of, or for the purpose of speculation.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Then he does wrong.

Mr. SCOTT. That is one of my objections, and that is why I have opposed this bill.

I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. In 1882 Congress passed an act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts. That bill also provided there should be three terms of courts held in each of these judicial districts; that makes six places for holding United States courts, while in the great State of Illinois, with one-third more population, we have but two places for holding United States courts.

I objected to having so many places for holding United States courts, and I resisted the passage of that bill and stated at the time it would not be long before each of these places would be coming into Congress and asking for the construction of a public building on the ground a court was held there.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is the gentleman not aware that when that law was passed it was because Illinois had a great commercial center, while Iowa, though she had a number of large cities scattered throughout the State, none of them like Chicago in extent, but such cities as Dubuque, Sioux City, Council Bluffs, and Des Moines, could not concentrate its business at one point as did Illinois; and I call the gentleman's attention to that as the reason for the distribution of these courts in the manner to which he has referred.

Mr. SPRINGER. I recognize the fact that there were no great cities in the State of Iowa, but a large number of small ones; still that does not create public business, nor does it necessitate the holding of courts in each of these places in the State.

But in order to meet that objection I will read one provision of this law authorizing these courts, to which I call the special attention of the House:

Provided—

In the sixth section—

That the additional courts at the places in the several divisions named in this act shall be held in buildings provided for that purpose without expense to the Government.

Mr. HAMMOND. That was evidently to get the bill passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is just what I am calling attention to. It was done in that way.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the date?

Mr. SPRINGER. Eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and one of the places mentioned in the act for holding these courts was this very city of Sioux City, where it is now proposed to erect this building.

Mr. HAMMOND. That does not amount to anything in the law-books. It was only to secure the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is exactly the case, I know; and when that bill was up for consideration I objected to it on the ground that these cities would be coming here in a few years asking to have public buildings, though I did not expect to be in Congress long enough for the cities to appear. However, here comes Sioux City right away, and asks that a court-house be built there on the ground of the establishment of this court, when the principal right to hold it there rests on an obligation in the shape of a pledge or contract in the State that the State was to furnish the building for the purpose of accommodating the court without any expense whatever to the United States. Now they come and want an appropriation of $100,000, and the reason assigned is because Sioux City has a court. There is no other good reason for it aside from the court, and there is nothing of a public nature except the business of the court. I do not see the necessity, therefore, for erecting a public building at Sioux City for the sake of accommodating merely the post-office of that city.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There are seven United States offices located there.

Mr. SPRINGER. What are they?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The United States district court is there.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is exactly what I said, and I have just shown you how it got there.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is the clerk of the circuit court, clerk of the United States district court, the United States commissioner, and the commissioners of the United States circuit court——

Mr. SPRINGER. All of these officials connected with the court under that very act.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is the United States marshal and district attorney, and besides it is the leading town of the State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOTT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES].

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the reasoning of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the absence of any necessity for this public building, but I do not think that either of the gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the bill put it on the strongest ground. I think it ought to be sufficient for us to guide our action to remember that that bill comes from the Senate to-night and is brought before the House without ever having been committed to any committee here since the veto of the President upon it. Since that examination on the part of the President, he having access to all of the statistics in reference to the matter, and basing his veto upon a full investigation of the subject, I hold that it is not proper that we should undertake to consider and pass it through the House, overriding the veto, without any reference to or consideration by a committee.

We all know that such bills are passed here all the time under the whip and spur of the previous question or suspension of the rules, and without that debate or consideration they ought to have. It is generally as a matter of favor by one set of gentlemen to another set. The bills are passed through as a matter of course, and it is looked forward to, likewise as a matter of course, that there will be an investigation somewhere.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This bill was recommended unanimously at the last session of this House.

Mr. COWLES. The President after the examination he has given to the matter conceived it to be his duty to veto the bill; and I see no good reason why this House, in view of the examination the President necessarily gave the bill and his expression of opinion upon it, should undertake to pass it over the veto, for which he assigns good reasons.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What are the reasons?

Mr. COWLES. Simply because we can get a building cheaper by renting it than the interest on the money you propose to pay for the erection of this one, as shown by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to state why it is that I, a representative in part of the State of Iowa, feel compelled to stand by the President in his veto of this bill. I understand that the President has attempted to impress upon the administration of the Government a business policy in all of its affairs—that, whilst he does not intend to be understood as objecting to the legitimate construction of court-houses at all points where there shall be need for them, he insists that, like a prudent business man in ordinary life who undertakes to improve his premises, we shall not attempt to construct all of the buildings at once. And he says that in the city of Sioux City and in many other cities where he has applied his executive power of veto the present public affairs can be conducted for a reasonable time without increasing or multiplying the number of public buildings already in process of construction. In proper time Sioux City will get this court-house, but not now.

There is in process of construction at Keokuk a public building the expense of which is $140,000. There is in process of construction at Des Moines a public building the total expense of which will be $600,000, of which $183,000 is appropriated now.

I feel bound out of respect to this business policy of the President to vote against the construction of court-houses at a number of other points in the country, and consistency compels me to stand by that policy even in my own State.

Mr. STRUBLE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. STRUBLE. I will say with reference to the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the court-house in Sioux City has been used without charge to this date. At the time the act was passed Sioux City was much smaller than it is now, and the court-house business was much smaller. The last Legislature created three district judges and the business in the courts has much increased, so that a court-house is needed nearly all winter.

As to the objection of my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HALL], which I regretted to hear, I wish to remind the House that that gentleman represents a district in which there is a nice building obtained last session in a city having a population of about 8,000, the city of Keokuk.

I regret exceedingly that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] should have brought up a personal matter, and urged it against the passage of this bill. I will say to the House frankly, since that gentleman has referred to it, that there is an outstanding charter providing for the building of a bridge, carefully worded and guarded; and in the last two years the local capitalists of Sioux City have organized under the charter, gone to work, enlisted other capital, putting in also their own, and the engineer and architect are preparing to lay the foundation and commencing to build the bridge. Under these circumstances my own personal friends in Sioux City telegraphed to me that they regarded the pending proposition referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as detrimental to their interests, and that their capital being pledged and their arrangements made under a charter which not only protects the companies already running in but all others that may hereafter run in, this bill ought not to pass.

I went frankly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania when I received that information, because I had previously consulted with him when, not knowing so fully of these matters, I laid the matter before him, and said: "I regret the position in which I am placed, but here are the facts, and I must represent the capitalists who live there and have put their substance into the enterprise." He treated me kindly, and I had no idea he would regard my position as anything different from what he could appreciate under the circumstances. I have endeavored to act the man. Never in my life have I raised an objection to the consideration of a bill except this bill, and I raise the objection to it because of the circumstances I have explained.

I appeal to the good sense and manhood and fairness of this House to say whether that one objection under these circumstances should condemn me before the House and the country. I appeal to both sides of the House to treat the bill on which the House is about to vote as it did the last one—not out of disrespect to the President, but I ask from gentlemen simply fair treatment under the circumstances with respect to this bill. I now call for a vote.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to recommit this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I am not to be taken off the floor by cries of "vote." If I am entitled to the floor I will keep it. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STRUBLE. I submit to the Chair whether that motion is in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bills of the following titles:

The bill (S. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley;

The bill (S. 2352) granting a pension to Alice Kelly; and

The bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY.

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw the motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill? On this question the Constitution requires the yeas and nays to be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 77, not voting 135; as follows:

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, with Mr. FUNSTON, until 12 o'clock.

Mr. J. M. TAYLOR with Mr. NEGLEY, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.;

A bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelly;

A bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.; and Joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlain to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888. The report is accompanied by a statement in writing, and as the report and statement together are somewhat long, I ask unanimous consent that instead of having them both read, I be permitted to make a brief explanatory statement.

Mr. NEGLEY and Mr. GOFF objected.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 18, 19, 24, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 7, 8, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 26, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$625,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract, two steel gunboats, each of about 1,700 tons displacement, of the type of Gunboat No. 1, at a cost, exclusive of armament, of not more than $550,000 each, two steel cruisers to be provided with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable. The cost of both of said cruisers in the aggregate, complete, exclusive of armament, and excluding any premiums that may be paid for speed for the same, shall not be more than $3,000,000. The sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated toward the construction of said vessels. That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under the contract, save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture. The contracts for the construction of said cruisers shall contain provisions to the effect that the contractor guarantees that when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, the vessels shall exhibit a maximum speed of at least 19 knots per hour; and for every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guarantee the contractor shall receive a premium over and above his contract-price of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guaranteed speed there shall be deducted from the contract-price the sum of $50,000.

"In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act it shall be required that one of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, one of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connecting therewith, and two of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve.

"If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for such contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels cannot be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall authorize the construction of said vessels, or either of them, elsewhere in the United States.

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for the construction of cruiser No. 1, known as the Newark; and the limit of cost of said vessel is hereby extended to $1,300,000, exclusive of armament."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That, for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the sums of money hereinafter named are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the President, in the exercise of his discretion, upon plans and specifications to be furnished by the Navy Department.

"For floating batteries or rams, or other naval structures, to be used for coast and harbor defense, $1,000,000. The final cost of said floating batteries, rams, or other naval structures, exclusive of armament, shall not exceed $2,000,000.

"For the purchase of and the trial and testing of torpedoes and appliances using explosives, to be operated from naval vessels, floating batteries, or rams, $50,000, which sum shall be immediately available.

"That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be, so far as practicable, of American production, and furnished and manufactured in the United States, and all contracts made for their construction shall be under the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment:' Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such civilian expert aids, additional draughtsmen, writers, copyists, and model-makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and strike out on page 28 of the bill lines 2 to 18, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. For expenditure towards the construction and completion (exclusive of armament) of the five double-turreted monitors, the four vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, and the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886, $2,420,000.

"Towards the armament, of domestic manufacture, for the vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, of the vessels authorized by sections 1 and 2 of the act of August 3, 1886, of the unfinished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, and of the Miantonomoh, and of the vessels authorized by this act, $2,128,362.

"Towards procuring, testing, and delivering the armor and gun steel for the vessels authorized by section 1 of the act of August 3, 1886, and the unfinished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, and the vessels authorized by this act, $4,000,000: Provided, Said armor and gun steel shall be of domestic manufacture."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The explanatory statement of the House conferees will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement to accompany the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The conferees upon the part of the House submit the following statement in writing, to accompany their report on the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes:

The House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, which provides that pay, miscellaneous, shall include books and periodicals.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 2, making the amount for publishing the surveys of the Mexican coast $7,000 instead of $5,000.

The Senate also recedes from its amendment numbered 3, which appropriated $12,000 for a naval training station at Coaster's Harbor Island, called in previous appropriation bills the naval war college.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, by which the Senate increased from $30,000 to $50,000 the appropriation for purchase of proving ground, both Houses agreeing that $40,000 should be submitted.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agrees to the same. It provides an appropriation of $25,000 for the purchase of the "Stiletto," for use as a torpedo-boat for experimental purposes.

Amendment numbered 6: the Senate, which had added $100,000 to the appropriation for equipment of vessels, agrees to reduce that addition $75,000.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, appropriating $1,200 for a clerk at League Island navy-yard.

Amendment numbered 8 simply makes a correction in the aggregate amount appropriated for the Bureau of Equipment rendered necessary by the foregoing amendment.

Amendment numbered 9: The Senate recedes from their insistence upon this amendment and the item remains the same as originally agreed upon by the House.

Amendment numbered 10: The Senate recedes from its amendment inserting the words "not more than" in line 267 of section 1, so as to leave the provision, as put by the House, for two dry-docks instead of allowing the whole sum to be expended upon one.

Amendments 11 and 12: The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the item for a clerk at Pensacola navy-yard, and puts a correction of the amount in the aggregate appropriation under the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Amendment numbered 13: The House agrees to the amendment of the Senate appropriating $5,000 for the improvement of the naval hospital park at Portsmouth, Va.

Amendment numbered 14: The Senate recedes from its amendment appropriating $40,000, instead of $70,000, for the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing. The increased amount for the civil establishment of that bureau is rendered necessary by the order of the Secretary of the Navy consolidating all the stores at each navy-yard under one head. The result of said order saves a larger and more considerable sum than the increase given in this bill.

Amendment numbered 15: The House consents that steam-steerers, pneumatic steerers, &c., shall be put under the control of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, instead of Steam Engineering.

Amendment numbered 16: The House agrees to this amendment.

Amendment numbered 17: The House agrees to this amendment, which leaves the repair of certain vessels discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy.

Amendments numbered 18 and 19: The Senate recedes from the amendment striking out a writer at Pensacola navy-yard, and in the following amendment the correction of the aggregate appropriation is agreed to.

The House agrees to amendments numbered 20, 21, and 22.

Amendment numbered 23: The House agrees to an amendment limiting repairs upon engines and machinery to 20 per cent. of their original cost.

Amendments numbered 24 and 25 are receded from by the Senate. The first relates to a writer at the Pensacola navy-yard, and the other is a correction of the aggregate appropriation for the civil establishment under the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

Amendments numbered 20, 26, and 27: By agreement between the two Houses, two of the 1700-ton gunboats and the torpedo-boat, included in the House bill, are stricken out, leaving to be constructed only two 1700-ton gunboats and two cruisers. These cruisers are to have a speed of at least 19 knots an hour, and a premium is to be given, and a penalty exacted, for every one-quarter of a knot above or below 19 which may be made by the vessel upon a measured mile. In lieu of the three boats stricken out the House agrees that an expenditure may be made for the construction of floating batteries, or rams, or other naval structures, for coast and harbor defense, to the extent of $2,000,000, of which $1,000,000 is appropriated by this bill; and also that $50,000 may be appropriated for the testing of torpedoes and appliances containing explosives to be used on naval vessels, and that the limit of cost of the Newark be extended from $1,100,000 to $1,300,000. On the foregoing conditions the Senate recedes from its appropriation of $6,000,000 for coast-defense vessels, $720,000 for the construction of light draught gunboats; $600,000 for torpedo-boats; $600,000 for torpedoes and other explosives. The Senate also recedes from the appropriation of $1,800,000 for the armament of the vessels appropriated for by the bill for the increase of the navy agreed upon. The bill, as agreed on by the conferees, appropriates the same sum for increase of the Navy that was contained in the bill as it passed the House.

Amendment numbered 29: The Senate also recedes from its amendment appropriating $112,000 for the purchase of Capt. John Ericsson's boat, the Destroyer, and its appliances.

H. A. HERBERT.
JOSEPH D. SAYERS.
JOHN R. THOMAS.

Mr. BUCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] a question. About how much is the appropriation reduced by this conference report below the amount in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. HERBERT. It is not reduced at all; the amount is the same.

Mr. BUCK. What is the reduction upon the amount of the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. HERBERT. The reduction upon the amount of the bill as passed by the Senate is something over $20,000,000. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think we had better find out something about this bill before we order the previous question.

Mr. HERBERT. There will be fifteen minutes on each side for debate after the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. But there will be no debate after the previous question is ordered, if debate takes place before it is ordered.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes are now allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in favor of the adoption of the report and fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. BUCK. I desire to put one more question to the gentleman from Alabama: Whether it is not true that the number of ships, the construction of which is recommended by this conference report, is less than the number provided for in the bill when it passed the House?

Mr. HERBERT. The number of cruisers is less. The House bill authorized the construction of two cruisers, four gunboats (which may also be called cruisers, and a torpedo-boat. This conference report leaves out two of those gunboats and the torpedo-boat; but in lieu of those we have yielded to the Senate the construction of harbor-defense vessels to the amount of $2,000,000.

Mr. BUCK. That is to say, in yielding to the Senate you have reduced the number of vessels which the House itself authorized to be built. You provide not only for a less number than the Senate voted to construct, but for a less number than the House authorized.

Mr. HERBERT. A less number of cruisers, of course, than the Senate or the House authorized. But the House had authorized no harbor defense vessels at all. The Senate insisted upon harbor-defense vessels. So we sacrificed three of the cruisers which were provided for in the House bill, and then we yielded to the Senate a provision for the building of harbor-defense vessels at a cost of $2,000,000, $1,000,000 of which is now appropriated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the chairman of the committee state what these "naval structures" are; whether they are to be on sea or land.

Mr. HERBERT. They are to be upon the sea; they come within the generic term of "harbor-defense vessels;" but the determination of the particular kind of vessels to be constructed is left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If I understood the phraseology of the bill, as proposed in this report, it provides for "floating batteries, rams, or other naval structures."

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir; those were the words put in by the Senate conferees, and I believe passed by the Senate itself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It strikes me that a naval hospital would be a "naval structure."

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman may criticise what the Senate did; but we yielded to them on this point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am trying to "criticise what the Senate did," in order to find out what we are to do. If we are to give the Secretary of the Navy power to build floating batteries or rams, most of us have at least a vague idea of what that language means; but when we authorize the construction of "floating batteries, rams, or other naval structures," the language is rather loose.

Mr. HERBERT. It does vest in the Secretary a good deal of discretion.

Mr. MCADOO. Does not the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] understand what is meant by a naval structure for harbor defense?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It might mean a naval battery on shore.

Mr. MCADOO. No, sir; a naval structure for harbor defense means something that floats in the harbor and can be made defensive.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss this question any further at present. I will reserve my time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I think it due to the House that some attention should be called to the fact that this conference committee has succeeded, according to its own statement, in bringing down the demands of the Senate by some $20,000,000. [A voice: "Good!"] Gentlemen say "good!" Very well; I am glad to hear that come from the Democratic side, because it is sincere; and you shall have the benefit of such advertisement as I can give to the country in the statement I make that you say it is "good" when your conferees succeed in forcing the Senate to recede to the amount of $20,000,000 from its own measure in which it proposed to make an adequate contribution to the Navy of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I want also to call attention to the fact that the Republican sentiment of this House, as expressed on this floor, has not been represented upon this conference committee.

When this naval appropriation bill was up I had the honor to move as a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYRES] a bill which had passed the Senate of the United States by a unanimous vote, appropriating for ten naval cruisers of approved type; a bill which carried $15,000,000 for vessels, $4,800,000 for armament, and $2,000,000 in premiums for speed, making $21,800,000 toward the vaunted rehabilitation of the United States Navy, which Democratic newspapers pretend to be so desirous of securing, and some Democrats individually talk about, but which collectively the Democracy on this floor ridicule.

On that vote—to appropriate $21,000,000 for the Navy—every Republican but two answered to the call. Eighty-six votes were cast in favor of it, every one of them Republicans, and 107 votes were cast against it, all Democrats but two.

In addition to that my colleague from the State of Maine [Mr. REED] moved still further to contribute toward the building up of our Navy by amending that bill with another proposition that had passed a Republican Senate, and with Democratic votes in favor of it at the other end of the Capitol, appropriating $8,000,000 to establish plants necessary to forge steel for armor and guns. Upon that there were cast 94 Republican votes in favor of it and 105 Democratic votes against it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we came back to the little contribution which was put forward here as the utmost extent and limit to which the Democracy would go, which was the amendment of my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYRES], providing for two cruisers, four gunboats, and a torpedo boat. We carried that in the House by 151 votes; and 100 of them, I desire to remind gentlemen, were contributed by the Republican side of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is true, says my honest friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who, I believe, is as willing to stand up in public and sustain his parsimony as he is in private; but I wish to give the rest of his party the benefit of the same publicity in advertising that the little measure of the House contributing toward building up the Navy, out of 151 votes received, 100 votes were on this Republican side. When you got up in the affirmative we sat here still at first to see how lonesome you would look, the few patriotic men of your side who were willing to build up a Navy by Democratic votes, and we then called upon the brethren on this side who have the interest of the Navy at heart, and they came up and furnished the votes by which you were willing to obtain the reputation of making that contribution to the Navy. Seventy-two votes were cast against it, every one of them by a Democrat.

Now, I say that the Republican sentiment in this House has not been represented on that conference; for no man who voted for my proposition, which was the Cameron bill from the Senate—not one of the Republicans who supported that measure—was a member of that conference committee. You went over there and you representative Democrats, you representatives of the Democracy of this House, have succeeded in forcing a Republican Senate to reduce the appropriation to the extent of $21,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That statement is greeted with applause on the Democratic side of the House [applause on the Democratic side], and I desire to call the attention of the country to the interest you feel in the rehabilitation of the American Navy.

[Here the hammer fell].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will reserve that time.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. HERBERT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the conference committee I felt for one that it was my duty to carry out, in good faith, if it were possible, the views of the House as expressed by the vote taken here. I did so with greater good will for the reason that I believed at the time the bill carried as much money and provided for the construction of as large a number of vessels as we could economically and prudently construct during the next fiscal year. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I explained fully during the debate on this bill in the House in the first instance that there were four vessels already authorized by law, for which appropriations have been made, but which have not been let to contract and yet remain to be built, two of them to cost $5,000,000, and one, a torpedo-boat, to cost $100,000, the other being a 19-knot cruiser, to cost $1,300,000. In addition to these are the five unfinished double-turretted monitors provided for in the appropriations embodied in this bill. Added to these are the two 19-knot cruisers which are provided for here, and the two 1,700-ton sloops-of-war also provided for in this bill, together with the coast and harbor defenses, for which appropriations are also made here, and for the purchase and placing in position of the armor on these men-of-war and monitors. I felt, yes, I knew, from experience on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and after looking into the affairs of the Navy carefully, conscientiously, and fairly, free from all political prejudice or bias, looking only to the good of the country, that there was as much provided by this bill as could be properly used during the next fiscal year. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In that view, I stood by my colleagues on the committee, without regard to party or political considerations.

I would prefer, sir, doing what I believe to be right and that which my judgment approves than to secure the approval of political associates who think more of making political capital than they do of attending to the real needs of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HERBERT. I will reserve the remainder of my time, unless we can have a vote now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if he pleases. I want to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee if this bill makes any provision for the completion of the work on the hull and engines of the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; that goes into the deficiency bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee if any provision has been made in any appropriation of the House of Representatives for the completion of these vessels?

Mr. HERBERT. Not in this bill; and I do not know what is in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriations made heretofore amount to $4,098,000, I believe, for these vessels.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not asking what appropriations have been made heretofore; but I ask the chairman of the committee if the appropriations which, I understand he knows, as I know, or as I am informed, are absolutely essential to the completion of these three steel ships have been provided for by any appropriation of this House at this session of Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has all been appropriated, except about $6,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In what bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. In former bills $4,098,000 was the amount fixed, and there has been about $4,093,000 appropriated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman and myself are evidently at cross purposes. He is speaking of appropriations which have been made heretofore; I am speaking of the fact which comes to me from what I regard as an authoritative source, that now there is really some $84,000 to be appropriated to complete the work in the construction bureau upon these three ships, and some $56,000 to complete the work in the engineering bureau. I am told, in addition, upon what I also deem good authority, that unless these appropriations are made these nearly completed ships, the property of the Government, nearly finished ships which the Government has taken possession of to complete, putting itself in the place of the contractor, will not be completed, but will remain tied up alongside of the wharf and kept there idle until another Congress shall assemble and make that appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has there been an estimate for those vessels beyond the sum heretofore provided for?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir; I understand the estimate has been before the gentleman's committee, and that the Secretary of the Navy has recommended this session an appropriation to be made in one of the appropriation bills. I refer to the gentleman's colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], who has charge of the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The limit as I have said was the $4,098,000; and I believe that has all been appropriated except about $6,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has anything been appropriated at this session?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not heard that the Navy Department has asked for more.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the gentleman's colleague on the deficiency subcommittee if it is or is not true that estimates have been submitted to the House of sums necessary for the completion of those vessels, and whether the Secretary of the Navy has not recommended those amounts to be inserted in the deficiency bill.

Mr. BURNES. I will answer the gentleman from Maine that estimates from the Department were submitted to the committee as stated by him, aggregating about $125,000 or $130,000—I can not state the amount exactly at this moment; and I will say in that connection that the original limit upon the cost of the four vessels has already been exceeded by appropriations, and that the expenditure has probably about reached within a few thousand dollars the extreme limit placed on the cost of those vessels by the legislation authorizing their construction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH.) The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let us have the facts. I think the House is interested in knowing about this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The fifteen minutes in opposition allowed under the rule have expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent to get this information before we dispose of this bill. Here are three ships which can not be completed unless the money is furnished.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama has five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the chairman of the committee in the five minutes at his disposal to make this matter plain.

Mr. HERBERT. I will say in relation to this subject that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] well knows no estimates of that kind have come to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know it.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman ought to know it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I had no opportunity of knowing it. I do not belong to the triumvirate that have taken charge of all the matters devolving on the Naval Committee.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Maine belongs to the Naval Committee, and if he had performed his duty he would have known what estimates went to that committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I say it is part of the duty of the gentleman from Alabama, as chairman of the committee, to see that the appropriations are made by some committee to complete these three Government ships. It is not my business, it is his; and the responsibility will rest on him if those vessels lie up at the wharves uncompleted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to state the aggregate of the bill as now reported back.

Mr. HERBERT. I can not state the precise amount. I believe it is between twenty-three and twenty-four millions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Which is ten millions larger than any bill that has heretofore passed the House?

Mr. HERBERT. Oh, no; nothing of the kind. There is an amount of $11,098,000 for the increase of the Navy. That money can not all be spent within one year or two years; it will probably run through three years; but that is the appropriation for the increase of the Navy. I will say further that the committee have appropriated what they believed to be right and proper upon every estimate sent to us or that properly belonged to us.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And you do not think that these ships ought to be completed?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the chairman how much the Senate has increased the amount.

Mr. HERBERT. The Senate tried to increase it $21,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much has it actually increased it by the bill now reported?

Mr. HERBERT. By this report the Senate does not increase the bill for the increase of the Navy by any appropriation whatever; but the limit of authorized ships is increased some $1,200,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 9.

So (further count not being called for) the report was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON. I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1885, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

D. B. CULBERSON,
J. R. TUCKER,
A. X. PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. F. WILSON,
G. F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House submit the following statement to accompany House bill 2441:

The amendments of the Senate other than those merely verbal promote the objects of the bill, which is to reduce the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State to Federal courts. The effect of the amendments is to reduce the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and the managers on the part of the House recommend that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment.

D. B. CULBERSON,
J. RANDOLPH TUCKER,
A. X. PARKER.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas whether that feature which was upon the bill a while ago increasing the salaries to $5,000 is still upon the bill, or is it out of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senate recalled this bill and rescinded their action in that particular and struck that amendment out of the bill. It is off. It was not in this conference.

Mr. TUCKER. And is no longer in the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is no longer in the bill.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CROW RESERVATION.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was on the floor when interrupted by these privileged matters.

Mr. NELSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill of the Senate No. 3095, which is a bill granting the right of way to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation in Montana Territory.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I call up Senate bill 531 and move that it be passed, the objections of the President notwithstanding.

Mr. NELSON. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Minnesota. I understand that I have a right to call up this bill again at any time.

The SPEAKER. It is privileged.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill for the reason that it is in the same form as the other bills granting the right of way through Indian reservations in the Northwest.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Montana, for the construction, operation, and maintenance of its railroads through the lands set apart for the use of the Crow Indians, and commonly known as the Crow Indian Reservation, beginning at a point at or near Laurel, in Yellowstone County, Montana Territory, running thence by the most practical route to or near the mouth of Rock Creek, commonly called Rocky Fork; thence up said creek to the coal mines near Red Lodge post-office, in Gallatin County, in said Territory; thence by the most practicable route to Cooke City, in said Gallatin County.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to said right of way for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision: Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign, or transfor, or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed through that part of said reservation through which it shall be constructed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order through said reservation on said line within two years from the passage of this act: And provided further, That no part of said line shall touch any portion of the National Park.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no objection to that, but I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, a second will be considered as ordered. Under the rule, thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the motion, and fifteen minutes in opposition to it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. NELSON. I reserve my time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a bill which has been sent by the President to Congress, which has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, which has been asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a bill to compel the payment to the freedmen in the Indian Territory of money that is due them from the Cherokee Indians. That is a Territory that has no representative upon this floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I can not allow these interruptions to come out of my time. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. HATCH] will state his question of order.

Mr. HATCH. I insist that the gentleman is not speaking to the bill now under consideration, but is violating the rules of the House by making a speech upon another bill when the bill called up by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is pending.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House is that gentlemen shall confine themselves to the subject pending before the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. But Mr. Speaker, you are aware that it is a difficult matter for some persons to reach the subject. [Laughter.] I am doing the best I can.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has been read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will come to that after awhile.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman's colleague [Mr. HATCH] insists that the gentleman shall stay by that all the time, in obedience to the rule of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I deny that the Speaker of this House can apply the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] either for or against the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] demanded a second and was recognized for that purpose, and the Chair stated that the gentleman was recognized to control the time in opposition to the bill called up by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, I will come to that; but here is a bill that affects fourteen hundred unfortunate freedmen, formerly slaves of the Cherokee Indians. This bill proposes to compel the payment to them——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my point of order. The decision of the Chair is not being observed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated the rule of the House and trusts that gentlemen will observe it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, my opposition to the pending bill is this: I have stood here and seen one railroad bill after another go through, and bills of other kinds, and now I want to see if a bill like this, affecting the interests and rights of these poor, unfortunate beings who have no representation here, can not get some recognition from this House.

Mr. NELSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House on this question, but I do want to make one statement. On yesterday when House resolution 170 was under consideration, the joint resolution authorizing the investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of the Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States Government——

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order on the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I objected yesterday to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] printing some remarks in the RECORD. I desire now to withdraw that objection.

Mr. HATCH. I insist upon the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] insists on the regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman object to my withdrawing an objection which I made yesterday to the gentleman from Illinois printing some remarks.

Mr. HATCH. No, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I will withdraw the objection which I made yesterday to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that he might have leave to print his remarks.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. NELSON. Unless some gentleman desires some explanation in connection with this bill, I will not occupy the time of the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. NELSON to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LA FAYETTE, IND.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I call up as a privileged question the veto message of the President of the United States on the bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the bill and message?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 29, noes 61.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, and Mr. NEGLEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 10 voting therefor.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. DUNN. Pending that I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. CANNON. I hope that motion will not be agreed to. We may expect the legislative bill here soon.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DUNN, there were—ayes 31, noes 73.

Mr. HAMMOND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion of Mr. DUNN was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs, Will the House now proceed to consider the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD]? No quorum having voted on the question, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The House proceeded to divide.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Before the tellers had made their report,

Mr. CANNON said: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to make a request for unanimous consent. As the tellers have disappeared, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 2163, discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the same, and pass it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What bill is that?

Mr. CANNON. It is a bill to incorporate a hotel company in this city to build a two-million-dollar hotel.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.
Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will not object.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I intend to object at every step, and to defeat the bill if I can.
Mr. CANNON. In whose interest does my friend appear?
Mr. GROSVENOR. In my own interest.
Mr. CANNON. Do you own a hotel here?
Mr. GROSVENOR. No, sir; I do not.
Mr. LEHLBACH. I move that the House take a recess till 8 o'clock.
Mr. EVERHART. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. [Cries of "All right!" "Go on!"]
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART] to make a statement?
A MEMBER. On what subject?
The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know the nature of the statement or its subject. Is there objection?
Several members successively objected, but subsequently withdrew their objections.
The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHESTER, PA.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to abuse the indulgence which has been shown me. For several years I have listened with exemplary respect and patience to many gentlemen who have on various occasions entertained and informed the House. But having never objected to any request they made, nor made any for myself, it seems reasonable to expect from the justice or grace of members a modicum of reciprocity towards my constituents, who are not to be disparaged in comparison with any represented here. But it is not on this ground chiefly, alalthough it might perhaps induce some consideration in its favor, that I seek to have this bill put upon its passage. [Applause.]
A MEMBER. What is the bill?
Mr. EVERHART. It is for a public building in Chester, Pa. I may say, Mr. Speaker, with verity, that such an improvement is essential on account of the importance of the city. On account of its population, which, with the suburbs to be accommodated, amounts to some 35,000 souls; and of its postal business, which will aggregate quarterly over $10,000; and of its domestic and foreign trade, employing some three hundred vessels yearly, and its harbor, wider, deeper, and nearer the sea than Philadelphia. On account of its industrial works, textile, iron, and chemical, its famous plants for the construction of steel and wooden vessels, and its great refineries of oil. On account of its schools, miscellaneous, military, and theological; and its churches, banks, and newspapers, and its various associations of loyalty and charity. On account of its situation, bounded on the front by the Delaware River, teeming with fish and ventures, with the rolling land behind it exuberant with crops and cattle, while three great lines of railway send numerous loaded trains through it daily to all points of the compass.
On account of its history, as the seat of William Penn's first legislative council, where he organized his Commonwealth of free suffrage and free worship, and proclaimed his immortal policy of peace. On account of its growth, which has duplicated its extent, its correspondence, and resources within a score of years. On account of its necessities, because the present buildings are merely leased and inconvenient in size, arrangements, and locality, for the transaction of the public affairs. [Applause.] Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered and passed. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. There is a question pending before the House.
Mr. ERMENTROUT. Let him have it by common consent.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman.
Mr. EVERHART. I ask unanimous consent.
Mr. MORRISON. I object.
The SPEAKER. The tellers will proceed with the count.
Mr. LEHLBACH. I have pending a motion for a recess.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
I ask unanimous consent to have the attention of the House for a few moments.
The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's statement?
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to make a brief statement in regard to a bill to give to these freedmen the money that is due them from the Indians. It will not cost the Government one dollar; and I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the bill. [Cries of "Regular order."]
The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.
Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask that the tellers be required to make their report.
Mr. LEHLBACH. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.
The SPEAKER. The tellers have not made their report.
The tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 67.
Mr. HAMMOND. No quorum.
The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to consider House bill 2516, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.
Mr. DUNN. Regular order.
Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.
The SPEAKER. That motion the Chair has several times decided is not in order while another matter is pending before the House.
Mr. TARSNEY. I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider the bill H. R. 9921. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and consider the same. This is a bill to erect a public building in the city of East Saginaw.
Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object.
Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of Senate bill 3026, and put it upon its passage. This is a bill granting the right of way across a small Indian reservation to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company, under precisely the same conditions as the other bills, three or four of which we have already passed without objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
Mr. SKINNER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (S. 52) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Indians, in Dakota, and to put it upon its passage.
Mr. SPRINGER. That is a very good bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that the bill he has indicated be now considered?
Several members called for the regular order.
Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] withdraws his objection.
Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I do.
Several members called for the regular order.
Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] have the privilege of stating what the object of the Sioux bill is. If he is permitted to do so, I think there will be no objection to its being put upon its passage.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from North Carolina being permitted to make a statement?
There was no objection.
Mr. SKINNER. The Great Sioux Reservation contains about 22,000,000 of acres of land situated in the Territory of Dakota; about the size of the State of Ohio. There are about 25,000 Indians upon it. That land divided would give to each Indian, man, woman, and child, 900 acres of land. They cannot by any possibility make use of all that land. They are wild Indians untrained and untutored. They are blanket Indians. They are not in a condition of civilization.
This bill proposes to divide that reservation into six reservations and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase from those Indians 9,000,000 of acres of that land and use the money for educating the Indians and teaching them how to work and how to be self-sustaining. Already two railroads approach the eastern boundary of this reservation, and the third is seeking to have the right of way through it to reach the Black Hills country, now occupied by 50,000 American citizens, who desire to have communication with the East and who are cut off by the obstacle in the way of civilization.
A MEMBER. What sort of land is it?
Mr. SKINNER. This is arable land. By the sale of this land the Indians can get over four and a half millions of dollars for the purpose of being educated. At present that reservation stands there as a block in the way of the civilization of that country.
Mr. MORGAN. And the bill leaves them plenty of land besides.
Mr. SKINNER. It leaves them 500 acres of land apiece. The bill has twice passed the Senate. It needs merely the assent of this House to become a law.
Mr. PERKINS. In addition to what has been said by the gentleman from North Carolina, I may be permitted to state that the 9,000,000 acres to be treated for are to be open to settlement under the homestead law, and the Indians are to be paid a just compensation for the land they surrender. They have consented to the conditions of this bill. It is of importance to the people of that country that this bill should be considered. There are more than five hundred thousand people in Dakota Territory who are interested in this measure, and it is exceedingly important to the people of that country and of the people of the West that some attention be given to this bill. I hope there will be no objection to this.
All the gentleman from North Carolina asks is that the bill be given consideration; that it be treated as other bills have been treated, and that it shall be amended if there be anything objectionable in it. That reservation stands as a great obstacle to commerce and civilization in that great Territory. The bill ought to be considered, and that is all which the gentleman from North Carolina asks.
Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. Do I understand him to say if this bill passes this land is to be disposed of under the present homestead law?

Mr. PERKINS. It will be disposed of under the homestead law; not the commuted homestead law, but the homestead law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is that the law under which such gigantic frauds have been practiced in the West, by means of which large tracts of land have passed into the hands of foreign holders?

Mr. PERKINS. Those frauds, as a rule, have occurred under the preemption law and the commuted homestead law. This bill does not open the land to settlement under either of those laws, but opens them to settlement under the homestead law.

Mr. STRAIT. Which requires an actual residence and a payment of 50 cents an acre.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know what actual residence means.

Mr. NELSON. I may state that the requirement is that the settler shall live on the land for four years and pay 50 cents an acre.

Mr. PERKINS. Those who go upon the lands will have to pay to the Indians 50 cents an acre, and that money will go to them for their civilization and benefit. Mr. Speaker, I hear no objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. There was objection. The regular order was demanded.

Mr. SKINNER. I renew my request for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill requires more consideration than it can receive at this time, and I must object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay Mexican pensioners.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TARSNEY. The objection has been withdrawn to the bill which I called up a short time ago.

The SPEAKER. The regular order was called for by several gentlemen.

Mr. TARSNEY. I send up the report to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to understand whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am willing that the report should be read, reserving the right to object.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman withdraws the call for the regular order as against the bill which I presented.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar Senate bill 430 and put it upon its passage. It is a bill to finish the public building at the city of Terre Haute, Ind., to put an iron roof on it in place of the wooden roof. The bill passed the Senate last May, and has been here ever since.

Several members objected.

COURTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. Inasmuch as this is probably the last request I shall ever make in the American Congress, I ask magnanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendments to a House bill, the object of which is to alter the boundaries of a United States court district, United States circuit, in my State.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the objection to my request for unanimous consent is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Three gentlemen objected. Is the objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] withdrawn?

Mr. EDEN. It is not.

Mr. VAN EATON. Is my request objected to? It is the last request I shall make, and there is no money in the bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON]?

There was no objection.

The bill was read with the Senate amendments thereto.

The amendments were concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. M'COOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment numbered 4 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

WILLIAM SCHUCHARDT.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1444) for the relief of William Schuchardt. It is a little bill involving only some $1,500. The payment of the claim was recommended by a Republican Secretary of State, Mr. Frelinghuysen, and it has also been approved by the present Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico, the sum of $750, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for his services in obtaining testimony for the use of the United States and Mexican Claims Commission appointed under the convention of July 4, 1868, with Mexico.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana object to its consideration? Debate is not in order until the bill is before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want an explanation of it.

The SPEAKER. Subject to the right to debate or not?

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, the explanation is this: There was a commission appointed by act of Congress to investigate certain claims arising between Mexico and the United States. This man furnished the testimony and was the interpreter for the commission, and this bill is introduced in response to his demand for compensation for his services. Its payment has been recommended by Secretary Frelinghuysen and also by another Secretary of State. The bill has passed both Houses on previous occasions, but at different sessions. The chairman of the Committee on Claims reported it—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRAIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN M. TAYLOR,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. MAHONE,
J. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The difference between the two Houses on the vote on the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, was on the Senate amendment number 4, which is as follows:

"(4) For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River."

The Senate recedes from this amendment.

J. H. BLOUNT,
JOHN M. TAYLOR,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. SPRINGER submitted a conference report; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments and agree to the House bill with amendments as follows:

In line 28, after the word "thereof," insert "so certified as hereinbefore provided."

In line 43, after the words "referred to," insert "his or their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives."

In line 47, after the word "Treasury," insert "such person, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives."

And the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
W. H. SOWDEN,
JAMES LAIRD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
JAMES H. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMES. I call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls for the reading of the bill. Is there objection to the reading?

Several members called the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection.

The report was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I asked for the reading of the bill just acted on; and I would like to know for what reason it was not read.

The SPEAKER. Because the House was not called upon to vote on the bill, and objection was made to the reading. Only the conference report was under consideration. The bill was passed by the House long since.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill (S. 3001) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.

The bill, with the amendments of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate and can not be done except by unanimous consent until the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. McKINLEY. This bill is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK. The bill has already passed the Senate, and there is a unanimous report in its favor from the committee of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CŒUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. HALL. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was recognized a moment ago, and his request was objected to.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman who made that objection has consented to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa renews the request for unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of Senate bill 3026, and pass the same.

Mr. HALL. This bill is precisely similar in its terms to two or three bills which have been passed granting right of way to railroads through Indian reservations. In this case the reservation is a small one, not exceeding 10 miles square. It is a valley in the mountains, lying exactly in the path of the road, so that the road can not possibly be constructed without this right of way. A large mining region which lies beyond is inaccessible without the construction of this road. The Indians themselves are interested in having this right of way granted. I trust that unanimous consent may be given for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. Let it be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (S. 3026) granting to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian Reservation.

Mr. HALL (interrupting the reading). I would like permission to state that two other bills precisely similar in phraseology to this have been passed. This bill has been reported favorably by the committee, and has the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. All the provisions which were contained in the bills which were passed for protecting the rights of the Indians are in this bill. The whole matter is placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. The right of way is subject to his approval. The compensation for the right of way is to be fixed by him. The entire matter is left in his hands.

Mr. BURNES. There seem to be two railroads seeking right of way through this reservation.

I hold in my hand a bill which has passed the Senate authorizing another company to have the right of way. There seems to be a contest between them.

Mr. HALL. There is no contest at all.

Mr. BURNES. If there be no contest, will they go together?

Mr. RANDALL. I object to both.

SAMUEL P. EVANS.

Mr. HOUK. I ask by unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar and take up for consideration the bill (S. 277) for the relief of Samuel P. Evans.

It provides for paying this marshal for fees due him for services rendered by request of the President and Attorney-General eight years ago. It was unanimously passed by the Senate and has been reported favorably by two committees at this session. Recognition to suspend the rules is a hard thing to get in this country. [Laughter.]

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to audit and pay to Samuel P. Evans the sum of $1,154.04, this sum being due to him as fees for services rendered by him as marshal after the expiration of his term of office and before his successor was appointed and qualified.

Mr. HOUK. This marshal, by special request of the President and Attorney-General, proceeded to discharge these duties.

There was no objection, and the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from its further consideration.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOUK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. REAGAN. There is an important bill which has yet to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the bill to erect a public building at La Fayette, which has been vetoed by the President, and against which the question of consideration has been raised, and upon which no quorum has voted.

Mr. MORRISON. I hope the House will take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. MORRISON. We have been waiting all night on that story of the legislative bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be here in five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the regular order, and ask that the tellers shall resume their places.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am a teller. I am like the boy upon the burning deck.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 47.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded and insisted upon.

Mr. CURTIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. COWLES. No one will vote against my bill. It does not take a dollar out of the Treasury.

Mr. MATSON. I move the pending bill be laid aside informally, to be taken up when a quorum appears.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

Mr. DUNN. I move that the House take a recess for half an hour.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the tellers to report.

The SPEAKER. The tellers have reported and the Chair has announced the result, and no quorum voting the gentleman from Georgia made the point.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the tellers to take their places.

The SPEAKER. The tellers have taken their places and the Chair has called upon gentlemen who have not voted to come forward and vote.

Mr. BURNES. I have a suggestion to make for the convenience of members in regard to the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COWLES. Is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has asked to make a statement.

Mr. BURNES. I have information the general deficiency bill will not be reported for half an hour. After it comes here there being so many amendments it will be indispensable for the subcommittee or some member of the Committee on Appropriations to examine them before we can make an intelligent report in regard to them unless we go into conference at once. Supposing members would like to have an explanation I suggest the subcommittee need only be punished by examining and reporting promptly at 8 o'clock. Therefore if the House desires for its convenience we might take a recess until 8 o'clock when the subcommittee could report on the subject. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TARNSNEY. We will stay here and continue with general business.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It would be well to have the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were demanded, and according to the recollection of the Chair they were refused by the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the services of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; and

A bill (S. 395) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company a right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, in Montana.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1885, relating to the purchase of arms for the States; and

A bill (H. R. 10514) regulating the compensation of physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass a little bill of eight lines.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded and insisted upon by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the gentleman to withdraw for a moment the demand.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to ask a question for information.

This being the 4th day of March, whether it is in order for the Senator from Texas to participate in the deliberations of this House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 6 o'clock, in order to give the Speaker and the officers of the House some little rest. It is now half past 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is entirely willing to sit here and attempt to transact the business of the House as long as gentlemen desire it. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I am sure of that.

Mr. LONG. Regular order. I demand it because I see a message from the Senate is about to be presented.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6066) to authorize the sale of the United States barracks property in the city of Newport, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, &c.;

A bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River;

A bill (H. R. 11063) extending the charter of the President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company, of Washington and Georgetown, D. C.; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Warder.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the resolution of the House providing for the printing of 5,000 copies of the report of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill H. R. 11028, (the legislative appropriation bill), and further insisted on its amendments numbered 3 and 14, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Also, that the Senate further insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10082) to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the further conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the conferees on the part of the House on the legislative bill I submit the following report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 20, 30, 34, 36, 37, 44, 45, 46, 49, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 59, 81, 82, 83, 92, 93, 94, 101, 102, 112, 113, 117, 119, 120, 127, 128, 130, 132, 133, and 134.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 25½, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 57, 58, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 97, 98, 99, 100, 105, 106, 107, 110, 115, 116, 118, 121, 122, 125, 126, 129, 131, 135, and 137, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numberd 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert "and disbursing clerk;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert "one clerk of class 1; one clerk at $1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "1,925,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out, amended by inserting "first day of March" in lieu of "thirty-first day of January;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$195,690;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 109: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$32,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$26,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 3 and 14: As to amendments numbered 3 and 14 the committee are unable to agree.

W. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference committee as submitted in the accompanying report:

The Senate made one hundred and thirty-eight amendments to the bill, increasing the same $225,381 over the amount as it passed the House. Of these amendments the conferees have agreed upon all but the two numbered 3 and 14, which appropriate $40,896 for clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees.

In agreeing upon the remaining amendments the Senate conferees have yielded $63,735, and if the amendments 3 and 14 are finally yielded by the House the sum total of the bill will be $20,701,221.67, or $4,234.70 less than the appropriation for the current year, and $472,609.40 less than the estimates submitted to Congress.

WM. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to be recognized for a few moments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not be as well to have the previous question seconded, which would give fifteen minutes for debate on each side?

Mr. REED. We desire to see if we can not come to an agreement by an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. We can not amend this; it is a conference report.

Mr. REED. But it is not a final agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not; but it is not desirable to open up the debate before the previous question is ordered.

I call for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the previous question being ordered.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to make a motion that the House recede with an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not come up until after the report is adopted.

Mr. REED. You will allow that motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; I can not help it.

Mr. REED. That is all right.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] submits the motion he has indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a statement on that subject. The amendments not disposed of by the committee of conference, those numbered 3 and 14, of course come up after the report is adopted. It will then be for the House as regards those amendments either to insist or to recede. The report, as far as it goes, is all that is before the House at this time.

In connection with the report I desire to make a brief statement. I wish to say this bill is not in the shape in which it can be regarded as entirely satisfactory to the House. As reported to the House the bill made a reduction from the appropriations of the current law, the law for the present year, of $418,000, which in a bill of this kind would be a very fair and yet a moderate reduction. I must say from the study I have given to this subject, not only in the present Congress but in former Congresses, it is very unfortunate indeed that at least that much has not been accomplished. Last session in this bill, the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, we made a reduction amounting to largely over $700,000; and yet it is absolutely certain that no public interest suffered. Indeed, so far as the reduction promoted economy it purified and elevated the Government.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does the gentleman mean that there was that reduction from the amounts authorized by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean there was that reduction from the amounts authorized by the current law of the preceding year.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman means the appropriation bill of the preceding year, not the permanent statutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ten years ago, as my friend [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has heard a hundred times, when the Democratic party came into power after long absence, there was a very heavy reduction of salaries, and those salaries have remained under the standard fixed by permanent statutes from that day to this. And for one, I am not willing, as a Democrat having insisted on the reduction of these salaries when the Republicans were in power, by any vote of mine to deviate from that policy.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Is there any reduction of salary yielded by the Senate?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are some few reductions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman please state what those reductions are?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate made no reductions except in the salary of the subtreasurer at New Orleans. That was reduced $500 to what it is for the current year. That is the only one I remember. All the others were increased.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did the House conferees yield on those increases that were demanded by the Senate?

Mr. HOLMAN. The House conferees yielded to a part of them, as the gentleman might have learned by listening to the report. The Senate amendments increase the amount of the bill by $225,381 over the amount of the bill as it left this House and went to the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman state how much the amount of the bill is increased now over what it was when it left the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will follow my figures he will get an answer to these questions. The bill as it left the House was largely increased above the amount it carried when reported from the Committee on Appropriations. More than half of the reduction made of $418,000 by the bill when it came into the House was overcome by the action of the House. Yet I feel confident no gentleman on the floor who has carefully studied the subject can dispute the fact that the reduction of appropriations from those of the current year of $418,000 was a very moderate reduction; and I am confident also that if that had been carried out not only would no branch of the public service have suffered, but, on the contrary, its efficiency would have been absolutely promoted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to repeat my question. What is the increase made by the Senate over the bill as it left the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have stated, the Senate amendments made an increase of $225,381. Now, if the House yields $40,000 for the clerks of the Senate they will have yielded $165,000 of the $225,000, and the Senate will have yielded a little over $60,000. As it now stands, if the House should recede as to the clerks of the Senate, the appropriations made by the bill will be but $4,234.70 below the law of the current year, instead of $418,000, as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations; and the bill will be $472,609 less than the estimates. I believe that is all I have to say. The committee of conference have done as well as they could and accomplished as much as they could.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before the gentleman from Indiana takes his seat I should like to ask him what proportion of the amendments put on the bill by the Senate have been conceded by the House conferees?

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole number of amendments made by the Senate is one hundred and thirty-eight. I can not state precisely the number conceded.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I believe about four-fifths.

Mr. HOLMAN. The mere number is a matter of no consequence; what is of importance is the amount involved. Of the Senate amendments the Senate concedes $60,000, and the House concedes $165,000 if the House concedes to the Senate the Senatorial clerks.

One word further in regard to that. I hope the House will not be confused at all by the fact that the two amendments are spoken of, numbers 3 and 14. Amendment No. 3 is simply the footing up of the aggregates. Amendment 14 is the real amendment, and is in the following words:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, $40,890.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have said all that I desire to say upon this subject, except to express my regret that the House did not more carefully consider the recommendations submitted in the first place by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say about this bill that as it passed the House it was for a less amount than was recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. There was a very general desire that the bill in many respects should conform to that of the current year; but I will not go into that matter. The bill went to the Senate, and there a great number of amendments were placed upon it, some decreasing and some increasing the amount. It is not perhaps proper that I should inquire too closely how those amendments were brought about. Suffice it to say that in quite a number of instances our Democratic friends on the House side and our Democratic friends on the Senate side were satisfied that the increases which the Senate put upon the bill should be placed there.

Mr. MORRISON. Expecting to get our fellows in?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; expecting to get your fellows in. So that whatever may appear upon the face of the statement of the House conferees or upon the face of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the truth is that wherever increases have been made they have been made for the benefit of a Democratic administration and a Democratic House.

One word in conclusion, and then I will yield to my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], who desires to be heard for a few minutes. So far as I am concerned, or so far as the Republicans upon this side of the House are concerned, and, as I understand, so far as Republicans in the Senate are concerned, we are all willing that the Democratic administration and the Democratic House shall have pretty much such service as they desire to carry on this Government.

Mr. BURNES. Deficiencies and all?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I think very largely deficiencies and all.

Mr. BURNES. All right.

Mr. CANNON. Of course, I could tell a great big story about this matter if I wanted to go into particulars. [Laughter.] What I mean is that I could tell a great big true story if I desired; but I will not go into particulars. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in various instances where this economical Democratic House had provided for a certain limited service there was an immediate rushing over to the Democrats in the Senate, and also to Republicans in the Senate, with requests that increases should be made in that body for this Democratic service. But I will not go into that matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON. Can you tell who went over there?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not care about being too particular.

Mr. MORRISON. But you ought to be particular.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that I for one did not go.

Mr. MORRISON. Who did?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am not here to state that.

Mr. MORRISON. You ought not to say anything about it then.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As one of the conferees, I am willing that you should tell.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yield to his colleague?

Mr. CANNON. How much have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eight minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to my colleague seven minutes and three-quarters.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, prior to the meeting of this session of Congress, at the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the members of the various subcommittees were requested to meet at Washington in order to prepare the bills which were to be submitted to the House. Among others was the subcommittee on the legislative bill. Some of the members of that sub-committee came here, and I am told by them (I was not present myself, although a member of that committee) that they diligently inquired into the needs of the Government, and upon careful investigation prepared this bill in a shape in which they thought it should pass. The bill lay in that condition until after the holidays and until after certain Senatorial elections were over. Then the subcommittee met again, and for days and nights, on Sundays as well as other days of the week, we carefully examined the estimates of the Departments, endeavoring to prepare a bill which would promote economy and at the same time not destroy the efficiency of the public service.

The bill after being thus prepared was brought before the full Committee on Appropriations. The history of that bill thus prepared by that subcommittee is more humiliating in my judgment than the history of any other appropriation bill that has come into this Congress for many years. That bill as prepared by the subcommittee was substantially passed by the general committee. The bill came into this House. The majority of those controlling the subcommittee—I was not one of those who concurred in the movement—succeeded in reducing salaries and the clerical force in the Departments, against the protest of heads of bureaus, who insisted the reductions would be detrimental to the public service. Clerks were stricken out, salaries were struck down here and there, the heads of officials were cut off blindly, without reason, without argument, without judgment. I protested against it. The bill came before the general committee, and the general committee, after hearing suggestions of various members of the subcommitteee, some of the suggestions coming from my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], proposed an increase of salary here and there; and in some places they blindly, without any basis whatever for their action, cut down the salaries of certain officials of the Government and reduced the force of certain bureaus.

Mr. Speaker, from the time I became a voter I have been, until recent years, following blindly the views of certain gentlemen who have been advocating economy and reform in the civil service. I was taught, in my primer of Democracy, that economy is one of the great principles of that party; but I was also taught by the great leaders of the party, Jefferson and Jackson, that economy means not only a reduction of expenditures, but a reduction in such a manner as not to impair the efficiency of the service.

When the Republicans had control of this Government I listened to the charges which were made of extravagance in administration. I believed then, as I believe now, that there was much foundation for the charge. But when a Democratic administration came into power I said, "Now there are honest men at the helm of state, and I can trust them." When their estimates came in, and I found that these same gentlemen, who before had been caviling and quibbling over the estimates, were in conflict with the officials of the new administration, I went to some of those officials, who said to me that if I blindly followed the policy and views of certain gentlemen on this floor, who were striking right and left, cutting horizontally, perpendicularly, and every other way, at the force in the different Departments of the Government and the salaries of its officers, the efficiency of the public service would thereby be greatly crippled.

I had faith in this Democratic administration. Grover Cleveland had proved himself a wise executive in New York, and I did not believe he had lost his honesty and his capacity for executive duty when he came to Washington. Therefore, I insisted with my colleagues that we must prevent these officials from being deprived of what ought to be regarded as a proper official force.

But I was overruled. The bill came into this House; and what became of it? The bill on which we had labored day and night, Sundays as well as week days, was repudiated by this House. Nearly every reduction we had made was stricken out. Every increase that had been made (and they were very few in number) was stricken out. The bill was sent to the Senate. The conferees have now concluded their labors; and what is the result of the efforts of this conference, composed no doubt of good men, wise men, and the majority of whom at least we have always regarded as stubborn men? The Senate put on this bill over $200,000 of increase. It undid the work of the House. What do these gentlemen, representing the House, now confess? With the utmost humiliation and chagrin, they acknowledge they have been forced by the Senate to assent to over two-thirds of the amendments put on by the Senate, and to give up in very large measure the economical features which we had put upon the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want to know why these gentlemen here have given away the little crumbs of economy which we finally succeeded in injecting into the bill?

Has my time expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am not half through with what I wanted to say.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Print.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No. I do not intend to alter a word of my remarks, but I wish to ask my friend from Indiana before I take my seat why has he surrendered to the dictation of the Senate on two-thirds of the amendments put on this bill by the Senate?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentlemen have half an hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois being allowed to proceed for half an hour.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois expects me to answer or specially refer to the course of his remarks. The gentleman of course knows the concessions made by the conferees on the part of the House are about the usual concessions [laughter] that each party must make.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What are the usual concessions? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. That each party must give and take. These are about such as every gentleman experiences in reports of this kind. The report made by my friend from Pennsylvania shows about the same concessions as have been made on this bill.

I yield now any time I have remaining to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. CABELL. It is true, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, that the members of the Committee on Appropriations were summoned here prior to the session of Congress to prepare the bills to go before the House for which that committee was responsible. If the gentleman had done his duty as he might have done it perhaps he would not be here to-night vexing the House with his complaints. He is here undertaking to complain of gentlemen for the manner in which they have performed their work, his own part of which he failed to put in.

The gentleman speaks of the committee having been humiliated. The greatest humiliation that I have witnessed at all during the sessions of the Appropriations Committee occurred when outrageous attempts were made to increase the salaries of officials and augment the expenses of the Government.

Forgetful of the pledges which the Democratic party had given, and disregarding our cry that the Republican party had placed too many people in office and paid them too much for their services, certain gentlemen have subjected us to criticism as well as humiliation by endeavoring to follow and sometimes outstrip bad Republican precedents.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is about the size of it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You see you had to shear your own lambs.

A MEMBER. By a large majority.

Mr. CABELL. There is not time however to enter into discussions of this character when we have but a few hours remaining of the session and when these and other bills have to be disposed of.

Mr. MORRISON. And that is all we have, CABELL.

Mr. CABELL. I do not understand the animus of the gentleman in his attacks upon the committee of which he is a member.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He has no animus at all; he has pity.

Mr. CABELL. Pity for what?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Pity for the humiliating attitude of the subcommittee on the legislative appropriation bill which the subcommittee occupies to-day.

Mr. CABELL. And most of that humiliation will cluster around the gentleman when justice is done. No shadow of censure can rest upon the gentlemen who were sent by the House into conference with the Senate committee. If we were put in a humiliating position it was done by the help of the gentleman as much as by that of any other man.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; that is not true. I co-operated zealously with the committee when the bill came before the House.

Mr. CABELL. When we went into the conference we exerted ourselves to the utmost extent and availed us of all the time and opportunity presented to compose the difficulties that had been placed in our way, and to free this bill from every improper feature and bring about an honorable agreement upon it between the two Houses of Congress.

We succeeded about as well and got about as much as we usually get in these conferences, as my friend from Indiana (Judge HOLMAN) says. We did about as well as could be expected under the circumstances [laughter]—under the circumstances in which we had been placed by the able co-operation of the gentleman from Illinois, with his fellow-complainants.

Mr. STRUBLE. Under the circumstances!

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir; under the circumstances, and considering the difficulties into which we were drawn largely by the work and active co-operation of the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is proper to say that we contended in conference as stoutly as we could to maintain the House measures in the bill. It was apparent to us as to every one that this bill would fail unless a speedy agreement could be had with the Senate. If there is really any trouble about the bill, it has been brought about by the action of the House with the help of the gentleman from Illinois always. [Laughter.]

The bill was a good one when we brought it out of committee, notwithstanding the efforts of the gentleman from Illinois. It is not very surprising, perhaps, that he criticises it now. Why, it is a fact, well known to that committee—as the gentleman has spoken of what occurred there—that no matters of retrenchment, no reductions, no reforms which we undertook to make were permitted, because the gentleman from Illinois always "stood in" with the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will you allow a question?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will ask the gentleman, since he has spoken of affairs in committee, if he did not blindly strike out two employés in the Interior Department, and when he found that one was a Virginian, came back into committee and asked to have him put back again? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CABELL. No; there is not a solitary word of truth in it. I deny the statement emphatically.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call upon the committee to bear witness.

Mr. CABELL. No man in the committee would bear out that statement.

Mr. HAMMOND. I insist upon my question of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did you not move to restore one of these men in the Land Office when you found out that he was from Virginia and was stricken out from the bill on your own motion?

Mr. CABELL. No, sir; both were stricken from the bill, I do not know whether on my motion or not, but the Secretary of the Interior came in person to our committee-room and insisted and urged that the names of the men should be put back into the bill.

They were put back into the bill, and it was understood they were to be put back before I ever knew that either of the men was a Virginian. And the over-well informed gentleman from Illinois was the very first man to give me the information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia will desist. The time has expired, and the gentleman from Georgia is making a point of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am trying to make the point of order that these matters which transpired in the committee can not be properly mentioned in the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains it. The time for debate has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to agree to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

Several MEMBERS. Move to recede.

Mr. HOLMAN. I infer from the remarks made around me that perhaps I should come at once to the test vote on these amendments. I shall therefore move that the House recede from its disagreement to the two amendments of the Senate; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to know if one of these is the amendment providing clerks to Senators?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Indiana makes a motion to recede?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is my motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wanted that fact to be known.

Mr. BAYNE. I propose an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Indiana agreed it should be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Indiana agreed that this matter should be brought up, and I think he will stand by his agreement; I know he will, when reminded of it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Indiana can not bind us by any private agreement he may have made.

Mr. REED. It was not a private agreement, but was made in the House in the presence and hearing of everybody.

Mr. HAMMOND. Not in mine; and I object.

Mr. REED. It was in the presence of the whole House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The agreement ought to be kept.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the right to move to recede, has he not, with an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to submit. It may be a motion that is entirely in order pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. I gave notice to the gentleman from Indiana that I would make a motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 3 and 14, and agree to the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is in order. The motion to recede and agree with an amendment has priority over a simple motion to recede.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the parliamentary rule is that motions are entitled to priority which most directly bring the two Houses together at once if carried, while a motion to concur with an amendment still prolongs the disagreement. And besides I called the previous question upon the motion I made that the House recede.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] agreed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania could make the motion he has indicated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What does the gentleman from Indiana say about the agreement?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be very glad in the interest of fairness if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would state what was said. I never trust myself to repeat anything which may have been said in the hurry of debate.

Mr. REED. It was I who made the statement. I said "the gentleman from Indiana then will permit the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?" and the gentleman from Indiana replied "Certainly; of course I can not prevent it."

Mr. HOLMAN. But I do not see any engagement there. But if there is any intimation on the part of the House that that imposed upon me the duty as a representative to open this matter up to amendment, of course I shall very promptly do so. But I do not see it in that light, or any obligation on my part as a member of this House not to make the motion which I have made and to call the previous question upon it.

Mr. SKINNER. I will state what occurred as I heard it. When the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] made the remark he has repeated, the gentleman from Indiana replied, "Certainly;" and then he muttered sotto voce as he took his seat, "I can not prevent it." It was an agreement if ever there was an agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. It could not have been said sub voce, because the gentleman from Maine heard it. But the House if it pleases can vote down the call for the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the question was asked as to whether a separate vote was to be given on the question of Senator's clerks, and the gentleman from Indiana said that would be allowed.

Mr. SKINNER. What he agreed to was to permit the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPRINGER. Which I understand was a motion to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take the statement of the gentleman from Maine to be correct; but I submit that according to that statement there was nothing in the language I employed which could preclude me from calling the previous question on this proposition. If the House sees fit to vote down the previous question then it is open to amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point of order that any statement made by a gentleman in the course of debate or in any way, and not submitted by the Chair to the House so as thereby to give the House an opportunity to reject the proposition, can not bind the House now.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it ought to bind him in honor if he made any such agreement.

Mr. REED. It was an honorable understanding and should be adhered to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think it goes further than the gentleman from Indiana supposes. He was in charge of the bill; he was representing the majority; he did, according to the understanding of all of us around here, and most of us assented in some form or other, agree that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to have an opportunity to offer a motion to recede from disagreement and agree with an amendment; and it is clear that if that permission had not been given the gentlemen on the other side would have made some motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not consent that there shall be any doubt as to the question of honor resting on any gentleman, so far as I am concerned. Therefore I will not press this motion, but withdraw it for the present. And I hope when the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is submitted, the effect of which will prevent the two Houses from coming to an agreement, that it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That each Senator and Representative in Congress, who is not the chairman of a committee which is allowed a clerk, shall, during the sessions of Congress only, be entitled to a clerk, to be appointed and paid as follows, to wit: Such Senator may, at the beginning of each session, as soon as the committees are announced, nominate to the Secretary of the Senate such person as he desires to be his clerk, and thereupon said Secretary shall enroll the name of such nominee in a record-book to be kept for that purpose, showing the full name of such person and the State or place from which appointed, with the date of the same. Such Representative may, at the beginning of each session of Congress, as soon as the committees are announced, nominate to the Clerk of the House of Representatives such person as he desires to be his clerk, and thereupon the Clerk of the said House shall enroll the name of such nominee in a record-book to be kept for that purpose, showing the full name of such person and State or place from whence appointed, with date of same.

And the aforesaid clerks shall be paid as other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, but only for the time they are actually present and in the service of the Senator or Representative by whom they are respectively nominated, each at the rate of $100 per month; and such clerks shall be removable at the pleasure of the Senator or Representative at whose instance the appointment is made. And the sum of $192,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the salaries of said clerks; $16,800 for the clerks of Senators and $175,200 for the clerks of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. This being a new proposition, and one to appropriate money, it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. I may remind the Chair that this is not a new question either to the House or to the Chair, as it was fully considered in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the further point of order that it changes existing law, and, therefore, under the rule which has been so rigidly enforced, it is not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. At all events it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the point of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] this proposition is certainly germane to the Senate amendment, which also makes an appropriation. This simply proposes to increase the amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, that Senate amendment would have had to be considered in Committee of the Whole if the point had been made.

Mr. BAYNE. The point can be made against an amendment to the proposition of the Senate which would have lain against the proposition of the Senate itself. In other words, if the Senate proposition was liable to the point of order, and that point of order was not made, that was an acquiescence in the proposition that the Senate amendment might be amended, under the rules of parliamentary law, with any proposition or amendment which was germane to it. I take it that that is perfectly settled.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is certainly not the rule.

Mr. REED. And as to the proposition with regard to existing law, the House and the Senate both have the right to perfect their organization by the choice and payment of such officers as suit them. That was well argued and settled in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the Senate amendment came to the House it was subject, under Rule XX, to the point of order that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and if that point had been made of course the amendment and the bill would have gone to the Committee of the Whole.

The point was not made, however, but it is now made against so much of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] as proposes to make an appropriation of money for a different purpose from that specified in the Senate amendment, and the Chair has ruled heretofore that it must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but it takes the bill also; they go together.

Mr. BAYNE. Then, as I understand it, the whole bill and the amendments must be referred to the Committee of the Whole if that point is made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. Of course the committee can not consider the bill, but can consider only the amendments. Nevertheless, the bill must go to the committee because the amendment is proposed as a part of the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I trust then that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will make the motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this amendment, if he prefers that it should take that course.

Mr. HOLMAN. When this question arose a few years ago the ruling, I think, did not go to the extent now stated by the Chair; that is to say, that the point of order operated on anything except the pending proposition. This is a new substantive proposition.

Mr. REED. You can not have the bill in the House and the amendment in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this proposition must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these amendments be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to make a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am making a parliamentary inquiry. I ask the Chair what becomes of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that this amendment is not in order because it changes existing law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the practice of the House has been that when the Senate sends to this body an amendment which is not in accordance with existing law the House may further amend it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not so understand the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair has decided that it goes there and is not before the House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] now, instead of moving to go into Committee of the Whole, moves to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole from its further consideration, and that it be considered in the House. Is a second demanded?

Mr. REED. What is the effect of that?

The SPEAKER. That the House will now proceed to consider the amendment if the gentleman's motion is agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] demands a second. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that demand will be waived.

Mr. HAMMOND. No; I mean that that provision shall not be put upon this bill if I can help it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN (after the tellers had taken their places). We are both on the same side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moved to suspend the rules and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] demanded a second.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought that if the gentleman's motion was agreed to it would carry the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with it, and it is the amendment that I desire to defeat.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's motion prevails the amendment will then be before the House for consideration instead of being in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. That is, the effect will be the same as if the gentleman withdrew the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair misapprehends the motion I made. It was that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and pending proposition, and that the House recede from its disagreement and adopt the same.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In other words, the gentleman is willing to et Senators have clerks, but not members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misapprehended the latter part of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman states that his motion was that the rules be suspended and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the amendment, and that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. REED. That is not giving us the vote we were promised. That is breaking the agreement. The gentleman might as well give us a chance to vote.

Mr. BAYNE. This amendment is now connected with the amendment of the Senate. The gentleman can not by any process of that kind——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; and to separate from an amendment adopted by the Senate and sent over here an amendment which, so far as consideration is concerned, is already attached to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Even if it were all included in a bill pending in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the gentleman might move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole and pass a certain part of the bill; for instance, the first, second, and third sections, omitting the others entirely. That is the same in substance as the gentleman's motion now. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the amendment, and to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment. Gentlemen who oppose that action will vote against the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it in order to move as a substitute that the House insist on its amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because this is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does a motion to suspend the rules so as to recede from the disagreement of the House and agree to the Senate amendment have precedence over a motion to insist?

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules, and is not amendable at all.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] represent the same side of this question.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Georgia demanded a second; and the Chair in appointing him as teller followed the invariable custom.

Mr. REED. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand a second merely for the purpose of opening the question for debate. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered? The Chair hears no objection. There are now thirty minutes allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to control the time in opposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BAYNE. I know how precious time is now and I do not desire to delay final action on this bill. I think, however, that when Senators have clerks, the members of this House should have clerks; and I believe that both should have clerks. I feel that members of the House, if provided with clerks, would be relieved from a world of drudgery which each one of them is now compelled to perform. In this way the interests of the constituents of every member would be benefited. He would be enabled to give more time to important matters of general legislation, while at the same time the minor interests of his constituents would receive better attention. We all know the large amount of work required from a member in all the Departments, work which now can not be done properly, but which with a clerk could be promptly disposed of. As a recognition of the dignity of the House, as a matter of fair play to its members, we are entitled to clerks, and should insist on having them as the Senators have. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it now lacks ten minutes of 7 o'clock. This Congress, under the limitations of the Constitution and the law, must expire at 12 o'clock. This bill requires to be enrolled and to reach the President in time to be examined by him; for the country has been notified that he intends to examine these bills carefully before giving them his approval; that he will not sign any bill without thoroughly understanding its provisions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Can not the clerks enroll at once the whole of this bill, except this provision?

Mr. HOLMAN. A number of other bills are to go to the Executive for examination, and for approval or disapproval. It is manifest that time is now a matter of the utmost importance, and that this measure ought to be disposed of at once. It is almost certain—judging from our past experience I say it is certain—that the House sooner or later will do as it has done in former years, yield this point to the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman will allow me to state that in point of fact this bill has already been enrolled, with the exception of the provision now under discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield. If the gentleman wants to get this little addition to his salary——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No; I am opposed to it. I am opposed to these clerks for either Senators or Representatives. The gentleman from Indiana is in favor of them for Senators, but against them for members of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very easy to be courageous when there is no danger pending. [Laughter.] The gentleman knows very well that the House will recede. It has done so now four times in succession. There is not time for us to hang out upon this question; if there were I should hang out as long as any gentleman. I have been as much opposed as any gentleman on this floor to Senators having clerks. But as one individual merely of the two bodies constituting the Congress of the United States, I am not responsible for the action of the Senate. They claimed the right in the first instance to employ their clerks and pay them out of the contingent fund. We peremptorily refused to consent to payment in that form; and they finally made payment in what we consider a more creditable form—a direct appropriation of the salaries of their clerks. I have said and done all that I could in former years against yielding to the action of the Senate. But we have been uniformly defeated; and now at this late hour I for one do not propose to prolong the controversy. I am opposed to the House adopting the practice which we have condemned in the Senate. I am opposed to increasing our salaries by voting ourselves these clerks; for that is what the proposition means. [Cries of "Let us vote."]

Mr. BOUTELLE (to Mr. HOLMAN). Have you moved to concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The effect of which is to give Senators their clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia the remainder of my time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Have you not moved to concur with the Senate?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have.

Mr. BOUTELLE. To give them clerks?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy more than a moment or two of the time of the House. I think to vote to give a member of Congress a clerk is indirectly voting each man $1,000 in addition to his salary.

Mr. PAYNE. It is not so much; $600 for a long session and $300 for a short session.

Mr. HAMMOND. The principle would be the same if it were 60 cents. It is voting to increase your own salary.

I do not think it would be wise for members of Congress to have clerks to transact their business. I think it is unwise for Senators to transact the business for which they were sent here by clerks. It is not a wise thing to do for gentlemen to go into their quarters and prepare for action here, and leave some irresponsible clerk to go to the Departments to deal with matters there. Every thinking man must know the work done by the clerk will be inefficiently done compared with the work done by the member himself. Every gentleman must know the necessary acquaintance of a Senator or Member with the Departments of the Government can not be learned unless he comes in personal contact with them. The information he receives from the Departments will be untrustworthy unless the questions be put by the man who understands the business and who is responsible for dealing with it. If there were a fund out of which clerks could be paid without any wrong in the payment of them I would say, as a representative of the people, "Away with clerks, and attend to these matters yourselves!" [Cries of "Good!" and applause.]

I yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. BAYNE. There are only five hours and five minutes of this session left. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I agree to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has just stated, and I say if this policy is to be adopted it would be decent to notify those before whom they are to make their race that they are in favor of increasing their salaries by voting themselves clerks, and let the people pass upon the matter.

This has not been done in any instance by members of this Congress. I do not charge members of Congress with doing indirectly an improper thing, but if this is to be done at all it should take effect beyond the term of those who are to profit by it, because, as the gentleman from Georgia has stated, it is in effect an increase of the salary of the member who gets the benefit of the clerk's service.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is the gentleman in favor of furnishing Senators with clerks?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am not. I resisted it from the beginning. I was not for it at the beginning. I was not for it at the last session. I am not for it to-day. On the contrary, I can give the gentleman the history of this whole thing.

Mr. REED. Then you will not vote to suspend the rules and do it?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will not.

Mr. REED. Then you will vote against it?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not propose to be responsible for giving Senators and Representatives clerks, for I agree most heartily with the gentleman from Georgia in thinking no good will come to the country from it. I will remind the gentleman from Kentucky that the Senatorial clerks were forced on the country under circumstances similar to those passing here to-day, the Senate saying you must vote us clerks or you shall have no appropriation. So gentlemen will say here, we will have these clerks or you will have no money appropriated by 12 o'clock.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does the gentleman insist this House puts the case in that way?

Mr. McMILLIN. I insist if this House makes the voting of clerks to members a sine qua non of the passage of this bill, it will. I hope, however, the House has come to that point, and I believe it will soon. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. Let me ask another question. Will not the proposition now before this House put us in the attitude of voting clerks to Senators or running the risk of the failure of public business and rendering an extra session necessary? And is it not a fact that there is no contingency upon the proposition to give to the members of the House clerks?

Mr. McMILLIN. I feel that every additional proposition added but complicates the situation and increases the danger. The gentleman in charge of the bill has moved to concur in the Senate amendments.

Now, instead of taking that direct course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to add an amendment, which carries it back to the Senate; and I submit to the gentleman whether it is not increasing the danger of the very thing we are so anxious to avoid?

Mr. BAYNE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like in that time to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not consider that this House is putting any such hypothesis, nor is it making any such terms upon this bill. I believe I stand identified in sentiment with many members of the House when I say that if we are compelled to either have a called session or give to the Senators clerks, that the members of the House who, in a certain sense, are the direct representatives of the people are more entitled to these clerks than are the Senators who have heretofore enjoyed them. And I will only add this word, that if the amendment of the House is receded from I will resort to every parliamentary right known to the rules of the House of which I may have cognizance before this bill shall pass with clerks for Senators and the members of the House refused them. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. NELSON. Is not the effect of this motion, if it prevails, simply to leave this bill in the House as though it were in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The effect of the motion, if agreed to, would be to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the amendment against which the point of order was made, and recede from the House disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. REED. This is to agree to give the Senators clerks.

Mr. TAULBEE. Upon that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. That has been already had, otherwise there could have been no debate.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, the House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 41.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion was rejected.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will now withdraw the point of order, and let us have a square vote on the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. HAMMOND. I renew it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to ask if the question before the House is the motion to agree to the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House except the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Was the motion to concur in the Senate amendments rejected?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated more than once that it has been disposed of.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not a fact that the House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration only of so much of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as is additional to the Senate amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The whole bill is here, and all pending amendments; but the only amendment the Clerk will read is the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the pending amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask to have it read.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 46, noes 80.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that point of order as this has been a test vote.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum on the division of this substitute, but I will now give notice that it takes a quorum to pass the Senate amendment.

So (no further count being demanded) the substitute was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House.

Mr. BAYNE. The Senate amendment has not been considered yet in Committee of the Whole, and it is not fair to take advantage of that and submit the motion now.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that portion of the bill was not before the committee at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the committee rise and report the bill to the House is in order.

Mr. BAYNE. Without considering the Senate amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not made on the Senate amendments; but having been made on the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that carried the bill with it into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of that amendment being considered.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it not the fact that the Chair announced in response to a parliamentary question by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that the House was in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Senate amendments with the House amendment thereto?

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman has misapprehended my point of order. It was just the reverse of what he has stated. I made the point of order that the only thing for consideration in Committee of the Whole was the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that under the ruling of the Speaker the Senate amendments could not be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAULBEE. I made no statement as to any point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee. What I referred to was the answer by the Chair to a parliamentary inquiry by that gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the committee rise and report this bill to the House is in order.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration an amendment proposed to amendments of the Senate to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill had instructed him to report back the amendment referred to the committee with the recommendation that it be disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee having under consideration the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to the Senate amendments numbered 3 and 14 to the legislative appropriation bill had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it be disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question upon that.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 22.

So (further count not being called for) the report of the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House insist on its disagreement to the third and fourteenth amendments of the Senate and ask for a further conference.

Mr. REED. What is the other amendment?

The SPEAKER. They both relate to the same subject, the salaries of clerks of Senators.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to one thing. He knows as well now as he will after going into conference that the conferees on the part of the Senate will continue to insist on their amendments. Has the gentleman any earthly doubt about that?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not for me to speak for the Senate conferees.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Would it not be just as well to recede now as to wait the result of another conference?

Mr. HOLMAN. If gentlemen are willing to take that course let them make that motion.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have no motion to make. I am not in charge of the bill. Let it be made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the disposition of the House is to act practically. I therefore renew my former motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move that the House insist on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana has priority because it has the tendency to bring the two Houses to an agreement. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments 3 and 14.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 70, noes 19.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I must renew my former motion. I now move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his motion that the House recede from its disagreement.

Mr. LONG. I renew it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

The question being taken on the motion for a recess, there were—ayes 23, noes 60.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now make a motion that the House insist on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Massachusetts has made the motion to recede and the Chair has appointed tellers. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] will act as tellers.

Mr. TAULBEE (while the count was proceeding). If we can have the yeas and nays on this I will not insist on a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. So many have voted that I think there will be a quorum.

The count by the tellers was resumed.

Mr. TAULBEE. Inasmuch as there now only lack three votes to disclose the presence of a quorum I withdraw the point of no quorum. But I do it under protest; and I shall now announce to the members of the Appropriations Committee that next session they must bring their bills in earlier.

The tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 52.

So (further count not being called for) the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments 3 and 14 was agreed to.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the tellers on the question of consideration in regard to the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] are still in existence.

The SPEAKER. That is the question before the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the deficiency bill will soon be here.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Does the action of the House during the last hour prevent the further consideration of the matter which was interrupted?

The SPEAKER. No. It was suspended by the presentation of a matter of higher privilege, to wit, a conference report.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Then I suggest that the question be resubmitted.

The SPEAKER. The tellers had reported 68 gentlemen as voting in the affirmative, and 70 in the negative. The point was made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] that no quorum had voted, and thereupon the tellers assumed their places and were continuing the count when they were interrupted by the conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that in a very short time the deficiency bill will be reported to the House with amendments. The most important point of course is the appointment of the conferees on the part of the House, and although the House is not officially informed of the action of the Senate upon that bill, I wish to inquire whether it would not be parliamentary to ask unanimous consent that the bill be received informally, that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, that conferees upon the part of the House be at once appointed, and then that a recess be taken to such hour as may be agreed upon.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill be considered as disagreed to and a committee of conference appointed.

Mr. DIBBLE. I object.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 63.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]. I misunderstood it.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] that the Senate amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill shall be considered as disagreed to and a committee of conference upon the part of the House be appointed as soon as the bill is received?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until half past 8 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. And on that I move the previous question.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, should not the conferees be appointed before we take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he can not appoint them until the bill is received. When it is received the Chair will hand the names of the conferees to the Clerk. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House take a recess until half past 8 o'clock.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to amend that by making it 9 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has demanded the previous question.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I wish to ask whether it is not in order for the tellers appointed upon the pending question to make their report. I am informed that a quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was interrupted, but will announce the result. On this question the yeas are 89 and the nays are 74. The ayes have it and the House determines to proceed to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

The question now is upon the demand for the previous question upon the motion that the House take a recess until half past 8 o'clock.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 60, noes 19.

Mr. MATSON and Mr. WILKINS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. HOLMAN (before the completion of the count by tellers). I withdraw the motion for a recess.

Mr. LORE. I move that the House now take a recess until 9 o'clock.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. LORE; and there were—ayes 68, noes 14.

Mr. DIBBLE. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. HATCH] directed the Clerk to call the roll.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is proceeding in order and will not recognize any gentleman out of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose that a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered is in order, is it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. DOCKERY. I make that motion.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DOCKERY to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, there were—ayes 44, noes 19.

Mr. DIBBLE. No quorum.

Mr. MILLS. A quorum is not required on a question as to ordering the yeas and nays. The Constitution provides that one-fifth of those present shall be sufficient.

Mr. DIBBLE. This is a question of reconsideration, not a question of ordering the yeas and nays. Under the Constitution the yeas and nays have been ordered. Now, the House can only reconsider the order by the vote of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that all votes affecting the question of ordering the yeas and nays are governed by the rule that a quorum is not required. The motion to reconsider is agreed to. The question now recurs upon ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending that I desire to ask unanimous consent to a proposition; and I would like to make a brief statement.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman wanted to say that when he went outside he found there was snow on the ground and no carriage to be had.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; if the "regular order" had not been called I wanted to say that; desiring to return to my hotel, I found 4 inches of snow on the ground and no conveyance in sight; therefore I desired to ask unanimous consent that we take a recess for thirty minutes in order that we might get something to eat here at the Capitol, and that in the mean time the clerks and reporters could take a little rest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I object.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I renew the request for a recess until 9 o'clock, so as to give us a chance to get a decent breakfast and have a little rest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request has been refused. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to take a recess until 9 o'clock.

The yeas and nays were not ordered—only 8 voting in favor thereof.

The question recurring on the motion to take a recess until 9 o'clock, there were—ayes 47, noes 14.

Mr. MATSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. MATSON and Mr. LORE were appointed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 35, noes 27.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; but at the conclusion of the first call,

Mr. WILKINS said: I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, relating to the purchase of arms for the use of the States;

A bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points.

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and other purposes.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 107) providing for one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate and House of Representatives; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. MATSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the result of the vote on this bill was decided in the affirmative, and the House will therefore proceed to consider the bill (S. 531) for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind.

Mr. MILLS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to consider that bill.

Mr. STEELE. I ask the Speaker if it is not a fact that a call of the House has just demonstrated the fact that no quorum has voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House was ordered, but on motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No further business has been done since the last call was ordered.

Mr. STEELE. A message from the Senate was received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But no question has been taken by which the absence of a quorum is shown.

Mr. STEELE. A roll-call was taken a moment since on the call of the House, which developed the fact that no quorum was present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the roll had not been completed when the call was dispensed with.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to move to take a recess until 9 o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain that motion.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 27, noes 18.

Mr. MATSON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. MATSON and Mr. SPRINGER as tellers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask unanimous consent to pass a bill. I have never asked it during my service in this House. It does not involve the taking of a cent of money out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the House is now dividing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will proceed in order with the business of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent bills have been passed during these proceedings to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state that the House is dividing on a question, and pending that the Chair will not recognize any gentleman out of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If any gentleman objects to the bill which I have for the construction of a bridge I will withdraw it.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, three or four of us here having bills have waited patiently for a long time for the purpose of calling them up. There are several that I know of myself to which nobody can object—little bills that involve no expenditure, for the bill that I desire to call up does not take one dollar out of the Treasury. I have been standing here two days trying to pass it, and this is my last opportunity, and I can not afford to lose it by giving my consent to a recess.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that all of these proceedings be withdrawn for the present, and that we take up and consider these little bills and dispose of them. Take, for instance, the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee and that of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But there is a question pending before the House.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; but we can get unanimous consent, and that dispenses with all rules.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the motion for a recess?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not see any probability of getting a quorum at this particular moment.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to pass this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the motion for a recess?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

JOHN FLETCHER.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 130) for the relief of John Fletcher, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to pay to John Fletcher, out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated for the use of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, $3,450, for the loss of cattle, while in the employment of the Government of the United States, in the year 1870, by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians.

Mr. MATSON. It does not require an expenditure of a dollar. All of the money for this payment comes out of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indian fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is this bill?

Mr. STEELE. It is to reimburse Mr. Fletcher for cattle stolen by the Indians, and to pay it out of their funds.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not see any objection to it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the question being on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know something about this bill before giving my consent. Here is a bill which the gentleman from Indiana said would not take a dollar out of the Treasury, and yet it is manifest that it takes many dollars out of somebody's treasury, because it takes the money from the funds that shall be hereafter appropriated for certain persons. Even if they are Indians, I think we ought at least to have some explanation as to why we appropriate money that has heretofore belonged to them.

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will explain.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That is just what I wish.

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] will allow me to give an explanation I will do so. This bill has been pending in Congress for a number of years. It has been reported eight times favorably to this House and the Senate; the last time by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM], who is known to be one of the most rigid in opposing claims against the Government or any one else. It has passed the House twice and I think the Senate twice, at no one session of Congress having passed both branches.

There can not be any objection to the bill. The report is very lengthy and I will not ask the House to stop to hear it read. It is as clear a case as can be. This man had a contract with the Government to furnish cattle to Camp Supply in the Indian Territory. When within 25 miles of his destination the Cheyennes and Arapahoes made a raid and took his cattle.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I think the gentleman need not proceed further. If the bill has been repeatedly passed by both Houses of Congress there is nothing more to be said.

The bill was passed.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOAN TO MINNEAPOLIS INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 182) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit, and that the same be now considered.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That it is desirable, in any way consistent with existing laws, and without risk to Government property or expense to the national Treasury, to encourage the effort being made for the opening and holding of a grand industrial and educational exposition of the Northwest, at the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, and the interests of the whole northwestern section of our country demand it be made an unqualified success; and it be, and is hereby, approved that the heads of the several Executive Departments shall, in whatever respects they may in their judgment see convenient and proper, loan any articles or material suitable to such purpose: Provided, That such loan be made entirely on the responsibility of said Minneapolis Industrial Exposition, and shall not be of material needed for use in either Department, and shall not in any way interrupt the daily routine of duty or order in any branch of the Government, and shall be returned to the proper Department, in good order, within one month after the close of the exposition: And provided further, That before any such loan shall be made the proper head of the Department shall require and receive a good and sufficient bond, by or in behalf of such exposition, for the safe return thereof as aforesaid, and to indemnify and save harmless the Government of the United States, or any Department thereof, from any liability or expense on account thereof, or on account of this resolution.

Mr. STRAIT. This resolution only asks for a loan of some property of the Government to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition. I think there can be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT CORINTH, MISS.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2725) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss., and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a macadamized or gravel road, or a road partly of gravel and partly of stone, from the town of Corinth, Miss., to the national cemetery near that town, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, or so much of the above sum as is necessary: Provided, That the right of way for said road, not less than 60 feet wide, shall first be secured to the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES BRICE.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8337) for the relief of James Brice, and that the same be considered:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of James Brice, of the city of Kansas, Jackson County, Missouri, for the value of property taken and damages occasioned him by the depredations of the Arapaho Indians in the year A. D. 1868, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of all the facts; that it shall be the duty of said court to report its findings of fact to Congress.

SEC. 2. That the claimant, James Brice, shall be a competent witness in his own behalf in said case.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. In this matter the amount in controversy is $1,100. The bill authorizes a finding of fact by the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should not have allowed this bill to pass without a quorum on account of the provision in the second section that the claimant shall be a competent witness in his own behalf if it were not for the fact that that extraordinary provision for the first time in our history was put in the general bill which we passed yesterday. I think it is a very unsafe rule and different from that which prevails in the States. No man should be permitted to testify in his own case against the Government.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. As we have made that enactment in the general law this bill can not be objected to on that ground.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, relating to the purchase of arms for the use of the States;

A bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points;

A bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10514) regulating the compensation of physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875;

A bill (H. R. 3642) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer;

A bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected;

A bill (H. R. 6066) to authorize the Secretary of War to improve and enlarge the barracks at Newport, Ky.;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Warder;

A bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of court at Mississippi City, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River and a certain island therein;

A bill (H. R. 11063) extending the charter of the President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss.; and

A bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAGINAW, MICH.

Mr. TARSNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East Saginaw, Mich., and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States court, post-office, and other Government offices, and for other Government uses, at East Saginaw, in the State of Michigan. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which will not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Michigan shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. While I will not object, I will state that there ought to be a quorum to transact business. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan what is the amount involved in this bill?

Mr. TARSNEY. The cost of the site and building is limited to $100,000; and we are sending in to the Government $25,000 of net revenue annually.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the population of the city?

Mr. TARSNEY. The city itself contains 32,000 people, and across the river there are enough to bring it up to 50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a Federal court?

Mr. TARSNEY. We will have one if you will let us alone.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it is understood that the regular order is called now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 702) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I object.

Mr. MCRAE. The Chair has recognized me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] to object to the present consideration of that bill. Does he demand the regular order?

Mr. MCRAE. If I have been recognized, that bill is the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demands the regular order. The regular order is the bill——

Mr. MCRAE. After I have been recognized can the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] call for the regular order and take my bill out of the consideration of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] is asking for unanimous consent, and the demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. MCRAE. Then, if I can not get unanimous consent, I move to suspend the rules and pass that bill. It does not call for more than $200.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, although there is no quorum present, yet, understanding that the bill which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] presents covers a very small claim, only about $200, I do not press the demand for the regular order.

MISS EULA E. HENRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] withdraw his demand for the regular order?

Mr. HOLMAN. As to this small bill, yes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to credit the account of Miss Eula E. Henry, late postmaster at Centre Point, Ark., with the sum of $202, lost by a robbery of the mails at or near Hope, Ark., on or about November 30, 1884.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] withdraws the objection which he made a while ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But there is another matter now before the House. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time.

Mr. MCADOO. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] demands the regular order. The regular order is the motion submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD], to proceed to the consideration of the bill called up by him, a public-building bill which has been vetoed by the President.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER; and it was rejected—ayes 31, noes 34.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize any gentleman. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent to have a bill read; and then, if any one has any objection to it, I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] has demanded the regular order, and until that demand is withdrawn the Chair can not recognize any gentleman for any motion.

Mr. BYNUM. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that it is the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

Mr. MILLS. That is a vetoed bill, which will require a yea-and-nay vote, which will demonstrate that we have no quorum. We had better go on and finish up the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MILLS. I move to postpone the consideration of that bill for one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, that can not be done, I think, from the fact that the House was dividing upon the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House, by a quorum vote, had decided to consider the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but the House was dividing, I think.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has been informed that the consideration had been entered upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no quorum; if there was I would call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] moves to postpone the further consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS to postpone the bill; and there were—ayes 19, noes 27.

Mr. HAMMOND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I understand the motion to be that the further consideration of the bill which I have called up shall be postponed for one hour. Is it for one hour or indefinitely?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I will adopt "indefinitely." What I want to do is to avoid a yea-and-nay vote, which would demonstrate the fact that we have no quorum; so that when the conference reports come in we may be able to take such action as is necessary to dispose of those bills.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think I can make a proposition which will be accepted by this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Try it on once. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up for consideration a small bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the regular order has been insisted on, and the House is now dividing upon a question on which no quorum has voted. The Chair will not entertain any request for unanimous consent until this matter is settled.

Mr. BYNUM. Is not the present occupant of the chair departing from the ruling which has been heretofore made by the regular Speaker?

Mr. HERMANN. Pending the call for a quorum is not a motion for a recess in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I move a recess until half past 9 o'clock.

Mr. BYNUM. I rise to a point of order, that the motion for a recess is not in order while the House is dividing on another question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to take a recess is in order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Why should not those who want a recess take it, and those who wish to attend to business remain here and do so?

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HERMANN, there were—ayes 33, noes 14.

Mr. BYNUM. No quorum.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the gentleman from Indiana will now certainly consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I can ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman is not in order. The Chair has stated that, pending the demand for the regular order and during the progress of the vote on the pending question, the Chair will not recognize any request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HALL. I ask leave to make a statement with a view of obtaining unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman from Iowa for that purpose.

Mr. HALL. I ask the attention of the Speaker for a moment. I desire to state to the Speaker himself,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for any purpose.

Mr. BYNUM. I believe the point of "no quorum" was raised on the motion to take a recess. Is it not proper to have tellers on that motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers are now making the count on another question.

Mr. HERMANN. I presume that my former motion proposed rather too long a recess. I now move a recess for ten minutes.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BYNUM. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 24, noes 10.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to ask unanimous consent to pass a little bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what gentleman called for regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated at the time that the regular order was demanded by the gentleman from New Jersey on the right [Mr. McADOO] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I appeal to my colleague [Mr. McADOO] to withdraw the demand for a moment, while I ask to put upon its passage a bill for the relief of the survivors of the Greely expedition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is not in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I submit that I am in order in making this request of the gentleman who called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order was demanded by more than one gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I extend the request to the gentleman from Indiana. I have not asked recognition at all this session. As a member of the Committee on Claims I have worked faithfully in reporting bills for other members. I simply ask this one little privilege.

Mr. MILLS. There is a motion pending to postpone indefinitely the bill, which is the regular order.

Mr. SKINNER. I ask unanimous consent that all the members here who have bills which they want to get through be permitted to put them in an "omnibus bill," which may go through without objection. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Put them in the petition-box.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for me to have a report read on a bill which I desire to have passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. COWLES. By unanimous consent it would be?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated repeatedly that he can not recognize any request for unanimous consent while the regular order is demanded and insisted upon. A motion is now pending on which a vote is being taken by tellers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the tellers do not appear to be visible to the naked eye.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will resume their places as tellers.

Mr. MORROW. What is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD]. On that question the House is dividing.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to ask whether it is in order by unanimous consent to have an order entered that all members having reports from committees to submit can do so by placing them upon the Speaker's desk, so they may go into the RECORD and be ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent for that purpose after the tellers have submitted their report.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask, by unanimous consent, to pass a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to accept on the part of the United States the sword of Capt. Samuel Chester Reed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose, as the regular order is insisted upon by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] and by other gentlemen, who insist upon it.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not in order to appeal to gentlemen to withdraw the demand for the regular order?

Mr. McADOO. I am willing to withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. MILLS. The regular order of business is the postponement of the La Fayette public building.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not in order to ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his demand for the regular order so that we may proceed with the business of the House?

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from New Jersey has withdrawn his demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated to the gentleman from Alabama as plainly as he could state it that the gentleman from Texas insists on his demand.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood he did not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know anything except by the statement of the gentleman from Texas, and he has stated that he insisted on the demand for the regular order.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the regular order is withdrawn, I wish to say that I have been recognized, and I shall insist upon my right to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When recognitions are again in order the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. BAKER. At what hour does the legislative day end?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twelve o'clock to-day.

Mr. BAKER. What day of the month is this?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes the gentleman from New York is as well informed on that subject as the Chair.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Besides it is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. BAKER. I see the Senator from the State of Texas [Mr. REAGAN], and I would like to understand how long he has the right to co-operate in the deliberations of this body? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the legislative day of March 3.

Mr. BAKER. When it ends no doubt he will be sworn in.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am advised by my friend from Indiana that if I ask unanimous consent it will be granted. I would like to ask the privilege of presenting a proposition to finish the Mary Washington monument.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order, as the regular order has been demanded time and again.

Mr. WHEELER. The right of petition to Congress always exists, and upon that constitutional right I appeal to the House the call for the regular order may be withdrawn, and we may proceed to the consideration of the business of the House. I hold in my hand a bill which I have held all night asking recognition to pass it. It is Senate bill 19, which was passed in the first days of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. It is a denial of the constitutional right of the citizens.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that he is not in order, and he hopes that he will not insist further.

Mr. WHEELER. I have such great respect to the Chair I will not further transgress on the time of the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask by unanimous consent the gentleman from Alabama be allowed time to make his statement.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask to take up Senate bill 2516, to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the regular order has not been withdrawn.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Indiana is present, and is willing to withdraw his demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That may be true, but the gentleman from Texas and other members insist on the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I rise to submit a privileged report.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Can that be read when no quorum is present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not of the opinion that a quorum is not present.

Mr. HERMANN. It is presumed a quorum is present until the contrary is shown.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the report will be accepted.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. COBB. There is a statement accompanying the report which has not been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the report has not yet been completed, and the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the statement.

The statement of the House managers was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House make the following statement: Immediately following their appointment they communicated with the managers on the part of the Senate, and a conference was arranged for February 25. On that day the committee met and the conferees on the part of the Senate stated they preferred to submit a proposition in writing, and the conference was thereupon concluded and we returned to await the pleasure of the Senate conferees. About the hour of 5 o'clock, Saturday, February 26, we received a communication from the Senate conferees, to which we replied on the 1st instant, and to-day have received their rejoinder. The correspondence alluded to is as follows:

The conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes, submit to the conferees on the part of the House as follows: We propose to strike out of section 1 of the Senate amendments the following words, in lines 20 to 27, inclusive, and to the end of the word "sale," in line 28, to wit:

"That all entries made under the pre-emption or homestead laws on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold prior to the 9th day of June, 1886, and after final entry to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale."

We propose to strike out section 8 of the Senate amendments, and to substitute the following:

"SEC. 8. That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's Office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the entryman or his assigns, through the local land office, until the error has been corrected; and after the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, upon any final entry under the pre-emption, timber-culture, desert-land, and homestead acts, or under this act, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that such duplicate receiver's receipt has been obtained by fraud the Commissioner shall hold the entry for cancellation and at once notify the entryman or his assigns, which action shall become absolutely final unless, within sixty days from notice thereof, the entryman or his assignee shall appeal from the action of the Commissioner to the Secretary of the Interior. The decision of the Secretary upon such appeal shall in like manner be final unless such entryman or his assignee shall, within sixty days after notice thereof, file with the Secretary of the Interior a written request for a judicial investigation, in which case the Secretary shall suspend further action and file, without delay, with the Attorney-General of the United States, notice of such suspension with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to cancel such entry if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained, and if in his judgment such proceedings can not be maintained, or no proceedings shall be instituted within two years after the filing in his office of the notice of the suspension, then a patent shall be issued upon such entry: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held or construed to impair the rights of any bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of any such lands under existing laws; and all purchasers, mortgagees, and parties in interest of record shall be made parties to such proceedings and may defend in their own right.

"This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption, timber-culture, desert-land, and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of three years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead, timber-culture, desert-land, or pre-emption laws or under this act and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of three years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor."

We further propose to agree to the other minor amendments and changes which have been discussed in conference and partially agreed to.

MARCH 1, 1887.

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, and for other purposes, acknowledge the receipt, by messenger, of a proposition from the conferees on the part of the Senate, submitted as a basis for the settlement of the differences between the two Houses.

On the 11th day of February the Senate conferees reported to that body that the committee of conference had not been able to agree, and moved that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives, which motion prevailed.

On February 19 and 21 the conference report was considered in the House, and after full debate the House determined to insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the further conference asked by the Senate.

On the 25th of February the conferees of the two Houses, as you remember, met in the committee-room of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and we were then informed that the Senate conferees preferred not to discuss the points of disagreement verbally, but would prepare and submit to us an ultimate proposition in writing. The document above quoted embraces that proposition. If it is intended as an ultimatum on your part the discussion had as well cease, for we can not agree to it. But in view of the importance and necessity of the pending legislation we venture to indulge the hope that no spirit of mere obstinacy or dictation will be permitted to intrude upon our deliberations.

Is it not better to discuss the points of disagreement openly and frankly as becomes our duty, and endeavor to reach some common ground upon which all of us can stand? The public interests involved are very great and the country has a right to expect that the representatives of both Houses will make every proper effort to bring this important legislation to some satisfactory conclusion, and we submit that this can not be satisfactorily performed by formal interchanges of opinion in writing, an unusual method in legislation, but the course of the Senate conferees compels this. With this purpose only in view we will venture to indicate briefly our objections to the proposition you submit, and suggest a proposition of our own as the basis of a compromise. In the first place, you have confined your proposition to the provisions of the first and eighth sections, leaving out of consideration other points of radical disagreement. We refer especially to the following:

1. The bill as it passed the House repealed the desert-land act. That the Senate struck out, and in lieu thereof inserted certain amendments to that act.

2. The bill as it passed the House withdrew all offered lands from private cash entry and reserved them exclusively for homesteads. The tenth section of the Senate amendments leaves such lands, amounting to millions of acres, still subject to cash entry by any one individual, and in unlimited quantities.

3. The seventh section of the Senate amendments creates a new classification of the public lands, to be known as "mountainous," and provides for the entry of 320 acres by a single person, and that is opposed by the House.

None of these points of difference are referred to in the proposition you submit. Indeed your proposition touches only one point of disagreement, namely, that predicated on the eighth section; for it has been already agreed, as stated by you in the Senate, that the provision in section 1, beginning with line 20 and ending with the word "sale," in line 28, should be eliminated.

Now as to section 8. The proposition we now have before us contains some alterations in phraseology from the one previously submitted by you, but in substance is the same as that which the House rejected on the 21st instant.

Our objections to the proposition are well known to you and were fully expressed in our several speeches made while the conference report was being considered by the House, and well stated by the Secretary of the Interior, who carefully examined the eighth section and aptly summarized his objections to it, and as those objections are equally pertinent to the present consideration, we adopt what the Secretary then said:

"First, it is a radical departure from the letter and the spirit of all former land laws; second, it assumes that title passes out of the United States by an entry or location, whereas both the Department and the courts have almost invariably held to the contrary; third, it divests the Land Department of a jurisdiction over entries which it has always exercised, which does and of right ought to belong to it until the issue of patent, and for the exercise of which adequate quasi-judicial machinery has been or may be devised; fourth, it will provoke a multiplicity of suits, since it contemplates a complete trial in the Land Department and another in the courts, with the result of an increase of expense both to the claimant and to the Government; fifth, it will prolong controversies over the issue raised, often for several years, whereas the preliminary trial, with the appeals, must also usually consume one or more years, and it will thus tie up the land for an unnecessarily long period in the hands of persons adjudged by the Department to have entered by fraud, and to the great and often irreparable damage of other and bona fide adverse claimants; sixth, it will result in flooding the courts with the already great quantity of contested entries, whose number will be vastly augmented by the resistance of those fraudulent entry-men who now never take an appeal when their wrongdoings have been exposed; seventh, it will discourage the institution of contests, for it will create delays and finally take the conduct of the cases away from the contestants, who are under existing laws the best safeguards against fraudulent entries, which are so readily made by reason of the ex parte proceedings at final proof; eighth, it is opposed to sound policy, for the reason that the surest guarantee of bona fide settlement and entry is facility of contest, followed by a swift, sure trial, and a summary cancellation upon proof of the fraud.

This might be elaborated and other important objections added, but the nature of this communication forbids a more extended discussion. We have considered the proposition with great care, desiring with the utmost good faith to agree to it if we could, but we can not escape conviction that such an enactment would result in legalizing the frauds on the public domain which have been committed on so vast a scale and would imperil the most important interest of the people. The thing, gentlemen, we started out to do was to repeal the pre-emption and other laws whose well-intended provisions have been so grossly abused. Our purpose was to prevent the fraudulent appropriation of the public lands in future, and preserve what remains for homestead uses only.

Hitherto, through all our history, the Secretary of the Interior and his subordinates have exercised the jurisdiction they now assert. Never until now has it been seriously suggested that the right, as well as the policy, of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office to inquire into the bona fides of an entry prior to patent, and to vacate it for fraud should be withdrawn or denied. The great States of the West have grown up under the present system, and now that individuals and corporations have been tempted by reason of the diminished area and the increased value of the public lands to make speculative and fraudulent entries on a scale so large as to attract universal attention, and to create an imperative public demand for the repeal of the laws under cover of which these great frauds have been committed, it strikes us as strange, inconsistent, incongruous and unwise at this juncture, when we come to repeal the objectionable statutes and to terminate the abuses under them, that we should at the same time reverse or change the old law governing the rights and claims of entrymen and their assignees and overthrow the long established practice of the Department.

The repeal of the pre-emption and similar laws is demanded chiefly because of the frauds that have been committed under them. If we repeal them, as we started out to do, frauds in the future will be practically impossible. The proposed eighth section, therefore, would in practice apply only to entries already made. Why not simply repeal those statues and leave the past as we found it—leave outstanding entries to be adjusted under existing law and the present practice of the Department, as all others have been for more than half a century.

We beg most respectfully to say that in our judgment this proposition of the Senate has no proper connection with the main object of the pending legislation, is not demanded by any public interest, and we think ought not to be insisted upon so as to prevent the repeal of those laws under which millions of acres of the public lands are being stolen. Only the rights of present claimants, founded on entries already made, would be affected by the proposition you submit. Those rights were acquired with a knowledge of existing law and of the lawful right and the long-established practice of the Department to review entries, inquire into them, ascertain whether they are made in good faith and conformity to law, and to cancel them for good cause.

In view of the undisputed fact that so many fraudulent entries have been made, that so many have been discovered, and so many more are being traced with the certainty of exposure, it seems to us it would be a dangerous mistake, now that the Department has those matters so well in hand as the result of long years of patient effort, to undo all its work, abridge its jurisdiction, change the law and break up a practice as old as our public-land system itself, and confer new rights and advantages upon all claimants, to be enjoyed by the dishonest in common with the honest, and go floundering into an experiment of the most doubtful expediency. We repeat we feel sure it ought not to be insisted upon, as it will result in preventing any legislation whatever.

As a compromise we submit the following proposition:

1. We favor the repeal of the desert-land act. We will give that up, and agree to the Senate amendments instead.

2. We are opposed to the seventh section, but we will agree to that.

3. As to offered lands we ask you to concur in the House view that those lands be withdrawn from private cash entry.

4. We ask that the eighth section, of which your last proposition is an amendment, be stricken out.

5. We agree to amend the existing law, wherever amendment is necessary, so as to authorize any claimant whose entry has been cancelled, or who has been denied a patent, to go into the United States district or circuit court for the district within which the land lies, and institute in his own name a proceeding against the Secretary or commissioner to compel the issuance of his patent, or to enforce any right growing out of the premises; and to provide for the service of writs and notices, and for making defense against such proceedings, &c. In other words, we propose to go into details and perfect the proposition which we made to you on a former occasion in conference.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of yesterday. We had understood, and as we thought we had reason to understand, until the receipt of your communication, that if an agreement could be reached as to section 8 the balance of the bill as it passed the Senate, with the amendment proposed by us to section 1, would be agreed to by you.

Our last proposition was made in writing in order that we should not be misunderstood, as in your communication you not only renew the whole controversy but enter into an argument upon questions which have been thoroughly discussed by the committee, and which we have not the time during the closing hours of the session to further discuss, and which we have not the disposition to discuss by written correspondence, and as your proposition of a substitute for section 8 is not acceptable to us, and there appears to be no prospect of reaching an agreement, we transmit you herewith a report of the disagreement signed by the managers on the part of the Senate, which please sign and return us one copy. As the House agreed to the last conference and the report should be first submitted there, we send by the bearer, the clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, the bill H. R. 7887.

Very respectfully,

J. N. DOLPH,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL.

Messrs. T. R. COBB, W. J. STONE, and L. E. PAYSON, managers on the part of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes:

This correspondence sufficiently explains the differences between the managers of the two Houses, and we deem it unnecessary to add anything further.

In conclusion, we desire to say that the practice of conferees discussing in reports or debate what may have occurred in conference is one the propriety of which we greatly doubt. But in this instance the example was set by some of the conferees of the Senate, first on the last day of the last session and afterwards during the present session. Still we think it a practice which would perhaps be more honored in the breach than the observance.

During the reading of the foregoing report the following proceedings took place:

Mr. PERKINS. I understood the Speaker to ask the House the question whether there was objection, and objection was made. Is it in order under these circumstances to submit the report to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had overlooked the fact that a statement accompanied the report. The statement is a part of the report of the conference committee, and the Chair thinks should be read before action is taken on the report.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Before the motion is submitted to the House have I a right under the rules of the House to demand the reading of the bill so that I may know where these amendments are and how they affect the bill?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The report has not yet been read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report as above.

Mr. NEGLEY. I now ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House for consideration.

Mr. NEGLEY. It is impossible to understand from the reading of the report what the bill is.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. That can be done after the report is disposed of. The question now is on accepting the report.

There being no objection, the report was accepted.

Mr. COBB. I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. And ask a further conference?

Mr. COBB. No; there is no earthly possibility of agreeing.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. COBB, and, on a division, there were—ayes 65, noes 14.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. No quorum.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the point for a moment to permit me to present a conference report.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill S. 2516.

Mr. WILSON. This is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill S. 2516 and consider the same. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNN. Regular order.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I have not withdrawn the demand for a quorum on the pending proposition. I dislike very much to do so, but the matter I desire to bring before the House is of vital importance to the interests of my constituents as affording absolutely necessary facilities for the commerce of my section. It affects four-fifths of the people of the South and Southwest, who insist upon the demand for it; and consequently I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order while this matter is pending before the House on a demand for the regular order.

Mr. NEGLEY. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. COBB. As the point of a quorum is pending, I will ask leave to withdraw the motion for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill H. R. 11234, the deficiency bill, and agreed to the conference asked thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 15, 24, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 48, 49, 50, 56, 57, and 62.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 10, 11, 14, 17, 18, 25, 26, 27, 42, 43, 45, 46, 52, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, and 64, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert $16,500; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$1,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$61,190;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$80,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"For improvement of streets and avenues named in the schedule of work on city streets and avenues proposed for the fiscal year 1888, contained in the annual report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year ended June 30, 1888, pages 146 and 147, being part 6, House Executive Document, No. 1, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows: In Georgetown, $45,000; in the northwest section, including the pavement of New Jersey avenue from M street to Boundary street northwest, $140,000; in the southwest section, $50,000; in the southeast section, $65,000; in the northeast section, $50,000; and for filling streets below grade, at not exceeding 10 cents per cubic yard, $10,000; in all, $360,000: Provided, That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quantity equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886, and with same depth of base."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$30,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 21 and 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21 and 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"For current work of repair on county roads and suburban streets, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"For constructing county roads and suburban streets, including the completion of the Eastern Branch road, the Bennings Bridge road, the Tennallytown road, and the Bladensburg road, $50,000; no part of the above amount to be expended in the laying out of new roads or streets."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and, on page 7, in line 27, strike out "ten thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$122,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the words "for ice-boat;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$770,970;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert:

"And no increase in salaries paid to teachers in grades now receiving $900 or more, and no increase in the number of teachers in any of such grades shall be made, and the minimum compensation shall not be less than at the rate of $300 per annum, and the names of and actual compensation paid to each teacher under this provision shall be reported to Congress at its next session by the commissioners."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"For buildings for schools, and for furniture for the same: For building an addition to the Columbia road school, $3,000; for building an addition to the Hamilton road school, $3,000; for building an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Wallach school building, $25,000; for building an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Sumner school building, $25,000; for building an eight-room school building in school division No. 4, $25,000; and the commissioners are authorized to sell and convey any lot now owned by the District in said division and to apply the proceeds of such sale to the purchase of a more eligible building lot, if in their judgment expedient; and for such purpose the additional sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is also appropriated.

"For the erection of an eight-room school building in school division No. 2, $25,000; for the purchase of a site for the same, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"For the erection of an eight-room school building in school division No. 7 or 8, $25,000; for the purchase of site for same, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"For the erection of an eight-room school building in division No. 3, $25,000; for the purchase of a site for same, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"For the purchase of a site and building a school building in school division No. 2, $35,000; for the purchase of proper and sufficient furniture for the several buildings aforesaid, $8,000; for providing and causing to be erected and affixed to such of the school buildings in the District of Columbia as require the same, under the provisions of the act approved January 26, 1887, entitled 'An act for the further protection of property from fire, and safety of lives, in the District of Columbia,' such iron fire-escapes and combined stand-pipes and ladders, or either of said appliances, as may be approved and adopted by the commissioners of said District, $6,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "one hundred and fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$11,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,900;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. L. WILSON,

D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 129, noes 7.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. No quorum. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up for present consideration the bill S. 2516.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill S. 2516, and put the same on its passage.

Mr. DUNN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Would it be in order for me to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is a privileged matter pending. In the first place, the House by a vote has determined to proceed to the consideration of a privileged matter called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD], the President's veto message on a public-building bill. Pending the consideration of that bill a committee of conference makes a report of a higher privilege, and that is still pending; and the Chair has no power under the rules to recognize any gentleman to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill while another matter, especially a privileged matter, is pending before the House.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

Before the tellers made their report,

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR (one of the tellers) said: I withdraw the call for a quorum.

So the report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2441) for the relief of Mrs. Eula E. Henry;

A bill (S. 2725) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss.; and

A bill (S. 130) for the relief of John Fletcher.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I now move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2516).

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is a privileged matter pending before the House, which the House, by a vote, has determined to consider. The Chair, therefore, can not, under the rules, recognize the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the tellers on what the Chair has just stated to be the pending privileged matter, the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD], take their places and settle the question. There is a quorum here now.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my motion to indefinitely postpone.

SECTIONS 5191 AND 5192 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. MILLER. I present a privileged report; the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, amended to read as follows: Strike out all of said bill after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 50,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency in writing, asking that the name of the city in which such banks are located shall be added to the cities named in sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller shall have authority to grant such request, and every bank located in such city shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per centum of its deposits, as provided in sections 5191 and 5195 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 2. That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 200,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency, in writing, asking that such city may be a central reserve city, like the city of New York, in which one-half of the lawful-money reserve of the national banks located in other reserve cities may be deposited, as provided in section 5195 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller shall have authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to grant such request, and every bank located in such city shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, 25 per cent. of its deposits, as provided in section 5191 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 3. That section 3 of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payment,' be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding, after the words "New York," the words 'and the city of San Francisco, Cal.'"

Amend the title to read: "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES F. MILLER,
BERIAH WILKINS,
GEO. E. ADAMS,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHERMAN,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,

The detailed statement of the conferees was read, as follows:

The bill as it passed the House merely added the names of certain cities to the cities named in sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes, thereby constituting them reserve cities and requiring them to keep on hand a reserve of 25 per cent.

The Senate amendment in the nature of a substitute provides a method under which national banks in any city of fifty thousand inhabitants may on application to the Comptroller of the Currency become entitled to the privileges conferred and subject to the obligations imposed by said sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes.

The Senate substitute further provides a method by which national banks in cities of two hundred thousand inhabitants may on application to the Comptroller of the Currency become entitled to the privilege of holding one-half of the lawful money reserve of the national banks located in other reserve cities, a privilege now exclusively enjoyed by banks in the city of New York.

The Senate substitute further provides that United States legal-tender notes shall hereafter be redeemed on demand at the office of the assistant treasurer in San Francisco, as well as in the city of New York.

The conferees accept the amendment of the Senate with some verbal changes.

J. F. MILLER,
BERIAH WILKINS,
GEO. E. ADAMS.

Mr. MILLER. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Texas to explain the effect of this report.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is all right.

Mr. MILLER. I am requested to make a statement with reference to this matter.

The House bill simply added to sections 5191 and 5192 certain cities named in the bill and did not release any of them from any liability under the provisions of the act of Congress in relation to national banks. Nor did it release them from the requirements of the statute in reference to the amount of deposits required to be held by them to answer for their reserve funds.

The Senate amendment provided by a general act that any city having a population of 50,000 inhabitants might by a vote of three-fourths of all the national banks in that city and with the approval of the Comptroller become a reserve city, and that all cities having a population of over 200,000 inhabitants might by a vote of three-fourths of all the national banks become central reserve cities in which the deposits of these other reserve cities might be kept, the same as in the city of New York. This law provides that all these banks instead of keeping a reserve of 15 per cent. should keep a reserve of 25 per cent. of their deposits.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understand the section as to greenbacks does not change the law.

Mr. MILLER. No. Another amendment made by the committee provided that the United States Treasury notes should be made redeemable at San Francisco as well as at New York.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to say that I have just been informed by a message from my colleague, Colonel BURNES, that he is opposed to this bill. I know nothing of its merits, but I want to state that fact in his behalf, and that, being on a conference committee, he can not be here just now. I think it but due to him that the consideration of the report should be deferred for a brief time until he can be present.

The report was adopted.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LA FAYETTE COURT-HOUSE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order; and I move to postpone for thirty minutes the consideration of the La Fayette court-house bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. The motion to indefinitely postpone is pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to withdraw that motion.

Mr. HAMMOND. I was not aware that he had done so, but very probably he did.

Mr. NEGLEY. I renew that motion to indefinitely postpone the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the Speaker stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. NEGLEY. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 26.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

The House again divided, and pending the report of the tellers the following proceedings took place:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. 132) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Richmond, in the State of Indiana, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, the United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ALLEGHENY, PA.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2006) to provide for the construction of a public building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in the city of Allegheny, Pa.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 3254, and to have the report read. I know there will be no objection to the bill, so I will ask to have it put upon its passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we must have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a report from the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] demands the regular order.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I merely wish to get this report off my hands.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the demand for the regular order cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the reorganization of the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] insists on the regular order.

Mr. LORE. He withdraws that demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not so informed the Chair.

Mr. LORE. I asked the gentleman, and he said he would waive the demand in this case.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman declines to do so. Upon the motion to postpone the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] the tellers report—yeas 75, noes 92. The noes have it, and the House refuses to postpone the bill.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order, and I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, upon reconsideration, pass the bill? and upon this question the Constitution requires that the yeas and nays be taken.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to debate that question?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I would like to hear the veto message of the President read as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] takes the floor, and asks to have the veto message read in his time. The Clerk will read the message.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill 531, entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind."

This bill appropriates $50,000 for the purpose indicated in its title.

It is represented that a deputy internal-revenue collector is located at La Fayette, but no information is furnished that he has an office there, which is, or ought to be, furnished by the Government. It is not claimed that the Federal business at this point requires other accommodation except for the post-office located there.

As usual in such cases, the postmaster reports, in reply to inquiries, that his present quarters are inadequate, and, as usual, it appears that the postal business is increasing. The rent paid for the rooms or building in which the post-office is kept is $1,100 per annum.

I have been informed since this bill has been in my hands that last spring a building was erected at La Fayette with special reference to its use for the post-office, and that a part of it was leased by the Government for that purpose for the term of five years. Upon the faith of such lease the premises thus rented were fitted up and furnished by the owner of the building in a manner especially adapted to postal uses, and an account of such fitting up and furnishing is before me showing the expense of the same to have been more than $2,500.

In view of such new and recent arrangements made by the Government for the transaction of its postal business at this place, it seems that the proposed expenditure for the erection of a building for that purpose is hardly necessary or justifiable.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 28, 1887.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House further with argument upon this bill.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am so anxious for the business of the House to progress that I am quite willing that a vote shall be taken without further argument upon either side, and unless some gentleman opposed to the bill wishes to discuss it, I am willing to forego my own right to advocate it and take a vote at once. I now call the previous question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 182) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed an act (S. 3358) to provide for the expenses of certain investigations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] demands the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 26.

Mr. NEGLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

Pending the report of the tellers,

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that Congress having finished its business, unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress are now ready to close its session by an adjournment sine die.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. MORRISON, Mr. TUCKER, and Mr. REED.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending this I desire to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following resolution——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman, as the regular order has been demanded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East Saginaw, Mich.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the objection has been withdrawn to Senate bill 3254, and I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded and insisted upon.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. The call for the regular order is withdrawn, so far as this bill is concerned. I ask unanimous consent that this report of five lines may be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina demands the regular order.

APPROPRIATION FOR SENATE INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 3358) to provide for the expenses of certain investigations.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000, to be immediately available, for the expenses of investigations and inquiries ordered by the Senate at its present session.

Mr. RANDALL. This additional appropriation is desired in order to execute the orders of the Senate in regard to investigations.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is in the nature of an appropriation from the Appropriations Committee. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The Senate has requested that this appropriation be made at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] withdraw his objection?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has just been read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a point of order. While the House is dividing that can not be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to suspend the rules suspends, if necessary, all the rules of the House. The motion is in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. But the House is dividing, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that a motion to suspend the rules suspends all rules.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I move to suspend the rules——

THANKS TO SPEAKER CARLISLE.

Mr. REED. I rise to submit a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HATCH]. The gentleman from Maine rises to submit a privileged resolution. The Chair hopes that every gentleman will take his seat, and that order will be preserved while this resolution is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are hereby tendered to the Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, the Speaker, for the courtesy, ability, and fairness with which he has presided over the deliberations of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. REED. As an additional mark of respect, I hope this resolution will be adopted by a rising vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All gentlemen in favor of the adoption of this resolution will please rise. [A pause, during which members on both sides of the House rose to their feet with loud demonstrations of applause.] Three hundred and ten Representatives have voted in the affirmative; and the resolution is adopted unanimously. [Renewed applause.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 9921) for the erection of a public building at East Saginaw, Mich.; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I move the suspension of the rules to pass Senate bill 3254. I ask that the report be read. I know there will be no objection to the bill when the report has been read.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I understood the Chair to state a moment ago that while the House was dividing it was in order to suspend the rules to pass a bill. I move to suspend the rules in order to pass a Senate bill which I hold in my hand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair has not recognized the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] nor the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Well, I ask for recognition now for the purpose of suspending the rules and passing this bill.

Mr. DUNN. I move that the House now take a recess for half an hour.

The motion of Mr. DUNN was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. HEPBURN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded by several gentlemen, and the Chair can not recognize any gentleman for unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. This is the regular order. I am not asking unanimous consent. I rise to make a motion which I have a right to make.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether it is now in order to move a suspension of the rules for the passage of a bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not while the House is dividing upon a motion already submitted to the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. The Chair just ruled that it was in order to suspend the rules and pass the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire the Chair to answer this question: If it is not in order now to suspend the rules and pass a bill, why was it in order a few moments since when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made such a motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the bill called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was in the nature of an emergency appropriation bill, and was privileged.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is whether in the last fifteen minutes there has been a change in the rules of this House. The Speaker recognized and answered a query I made, and fifteen minutes afterwards the same procedure asked for was tolerated which was before denied by the occupant of the chair. I wish to inquire if there has been any change in the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware there has been any change in the rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. If following the precedent of fifteen minutes ago, it is now in order to have a suspension of the rules——

The SPEAKER. It is not if the regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. DUNN. It is insisted upon.

SCHOOL AND FARM LANDS, BEAUFORT COUNTY, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SMALLS. I move, by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States.

These amendments are satisfactory to the Senators from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is all right.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 20, after the word "the," the words "direct tax proper charged," and insert in lieu thereof the words "amount of tax, penalty, interest, and costs properly chargeable;" also, in line 26, after the word "tax," insert the words "penalty, interest."

Also, in section 2, add the following proviso:

Provided, That if the applicant has received from the United States the surplus proceeds of the sale of such land, under section 36 of the act of August 5, 1861, he shall not be entitled to redeem the same under this act unless such applicant shall refund the surplus so paid.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMALLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTRA MONTH'S PAY.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay all committee clerks, messengers, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives who receive annual salaries amounting to $1,200 per annum and under, and who are in such employ at the passage of this resolution, their present rate of compensation respectively for one month from the date of adjournment of this session of Congress; and the money required to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is this for the annual or the session employés?

Mr. REAGAN objected.

LIEUT. JOHN G. KYLE.

Mr. LITTLE. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1926) for the payment of the funeral expenses of Lieut. John G. Kyle.

Mr. OATES. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move the House adopt the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended——

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to inquire if I can not have the resolution read?

The SPEAKER. Not when objected to and the regular order is demanded.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOL FUNDS.

Mr. LOUTTIT. I ask by unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 990) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, found to be mineral lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order of business.

REMOVAL OF A QUARANTINE STATION FROM SHIP ISLAND.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask unanimous consent to take up and put on its passage Senate bill 3157, entitled "An act to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi." I ask that the bill be read for information. It is designed to protect the entire Gulf and South Atlantic coast and people from epidemic and contagious disease. I appeal to the House to suspend the rules and pass this important measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] demands the regular order of business.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I ask, inasmuch as the demand is withdrawn, unanimous consent to have the Senate bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the bill to be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BARKSDALE. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 8192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9793) to amend an act approved March 3, 1885, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, in Tennessee.

CONFERENCE REPORT—FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report. I am directed by the committee of conference to submit the report I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WM. H. FORNEY,
SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,

Mr. FORNEY. I now yield to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I present on the part of the majority of the House conferees the bill which they insisted upon in this connection. I also, in the light of fair play, present the Senate bill, as the one on which the Senate conferees insisted, and I also present a report which is a recital of the differences between the two bills. The Senate bill involves, as the majority of the House conferees construe it, an expenditure approaching or above $40,000,000, while the House bill, which the majority of the conferees of the House were willing to adopt, appropriates $17,000,000. Between these divergences we have been unable to agree, and I submit this report to be published in the RECORD so that the House may judge as between the two propositions about which the disagreement arose.

No. 1.

An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sums of money herein provided for be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

SEC. 1. For the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other work of defense, and for the construction of sea-walls, $125,000.

SEC. 2. For torpedoes for harbor defense; the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them; for needful casemates, cable-galleries, and appliances to render it possible to operate submarine mines; for continuing torpedo experiments, and for practical instruction of engineer troops in detail of the service, $100,000.

SEC. 3. For experiments in guns and projectiles for high explosives, including the purchase of guns, projectiles, and targets for such tests as board of ordnance hereinafter authorized shall direct, $100,000.

SEC. 4. For the procurement of powders, projectiles, fuses, implements, and materials for the service of heavy guns, for the alteration of seacoast carriages, and for the compensation of draughtsmen on gun-construction while employed in the Ordnance Bureau, $300,000.

SEC. 5. For the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary buildings, machinery, tools, and fixtures for a gun-factory for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance, to be erected at such arsenal as the board on ordnance herein provided for may select, $550,000. In determining upon the location the board shall fully consider the facilities for transportation both by water and rail, the proximity to the establishments which may be likely to furnish the materials to be worked, and freedom from danger from hostile forces.

SEC. 6. To complete the guns now under fabrication by the Ordnance Department, and for testing the same, as follows: One 10-inch breech-loading steel gun, wire-wrapped, with longitudinal bars on Woodbridge plan, $20,000; for testing the same, $25,000; one 10-inch breech-loading steel-hooped gun, $20,000; for testing the same, $25,000; one 10-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, wire-wrapped, $1,500; for testing the same, $12,000; one 8-inch breech-loading steel-hooped gun, $10,000; for testing the same, $12,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, steel-tubed, $20,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading rifle, cast-iron, hooped and tubed with steel on the French system, $20,000; for testing one 12-inch breech-loading mortar, cast-iron, hooped with steel, 12,000.

SEC. 7. For the construction of 12-inch rifle mortars, either of cast-iron, steel-hooped, or mortars principally or all of cast-iron, or mortars principally or all of steel, either muzzle-loading or breech-loading, all as the board hereinafter provided for shall determine, to fire a projectile weighing not less than 615 pounds, if of cast-iron, to have a maximum range and an accuracy of fire, and to be equally efficient in all respects to any cast-iron mortars of such size yet tested by the Government; if cast-iron, steel-hooped, or if made principally of steel, to be equally efficient in all respects with the steel mortars at present made by others, as shown by the published records of like tests. Unless the trial mortars herein provided for reach the above test they shall not be purchased. If any of said mortars reach the above specified standard, then the said board shall pay an equitable price therefor. If any have stood the required test, then the board may select and purchase therefrom such mortars of such system as seems most efficient, to the extent permitted by this appropriation, cost and effectiveness both being considered; and each service mortar purchased shall be provided with suitable carriage and fifty projectiles, $500,000.

SEC. 8. The standard weight for projectiles for testing 8, 10, and 12 inch rifled guns shall not be less than 250, 500, and 800 pounds, respectively. The standard weight of rifled guns to be tested for endurance and of service guns shall not be more than 33,000, 65,000, and 104,000 pounds, respectively, for 8, 10, and 12 inch rifles.

SEC. 9. For the purchase of oil-tempered steel forgings, rough-dressed, of dimensions suitable for 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch rifles, according to specifications to be provided by the said board on ordnance; for finishing the same and converting it into finished breech-loading guns at the Government shop or shops; for testing three rifled guns, one 8-inch, one 10-inch, and one 12-inch caliber; for accuracy, range, durability, and penetration; for carriages for the guns, to be made from the steel to be purchased from the funds provided for in this section, and for projectiles for these guns, $6,000,000: Provided, That no steel shall be paid for which does not fill the specifications under which it was purchased, and that only so much steel shall be bought for the guns provided for in this section as shall be required for one 8-inch, one 10-inch, and one 12-inch rifle, other than that required to replace some parts of one of these three guns until they shall have been made and tested sufficiently to determine that they will each endure two hundred rounds of firing with a weight of projectile of not less than one one-hundred-and-thirtieth part of the weight of the gun and a muzzle velocity of 2,000 feet per second, and each has withstood without serious derangement or injury a rapid firing test of twenty rounds in eighty minutes from the 8-inch rifle, of twenty rounds in one hundred minutes from a 10-inch rifle, and of twenty rounds in one hundred and twenty minutes from a 12-inch rifle: And provided further, That these guns shall, of either size, have equaled or exceeded in endurance that of any gun of similar caliber which has been made and tested before July 1, 1891, or July 1, 1892, as provided in this act.

Should these guns, or any of them, fail to fulfill these conditions without more expense for repairs than can be put upon them ordinarily for 5 per cent. of the cost of the gun, if fired two hundred rounds with 2,000 feet muzzle velocity of the projectile, or 10 per cent. if fired two hundred rounds with a projectile of the prescribed standard weight and an average muzzle velocity of not less than 2,200 feet per second, then no more of these guns shall be made from the funds appropriated in this section. If these three guns fulfill all these conditions, the balance of the money appropriated in this section may be expended for the purposes provided; but steel for these guns shall only be purchased to the extent that it can be paid for and converted into such guns as fill all the requirements of this section, with a suitable carriage and a suitable number of projectiles for each gun, all to be paid for from the money provided in this section, and of the guns so provided there shall be an equal number of each of the specified sizes. A sufficient amount of this six millions shall be reserved to complete the proof tests provided for service guns as herein provided for, which shall be applied thereto. The projectiles to be provided for these guns shall be made or purchased under specifications to be provided by the said board on ordnance.

SEC. 10. For service and experimental seacoast carriages, and testing the same, $150,000.

SEC. 11. For the manufacture of twenty 12-inch cast-iron rifle-guns, about 33-calibers length of bore, and weight not less than 104,000 pounds, not exceeding $520,000; for carriages suitable for the same, and such projectiles as the said board may order for these guns, including the proving and transportation of these guns, $480,000. Each gun, before it is accepted, shall be tested with not less than five nor more than ten rounds with the service charge of powder and projectiles, which shall give 1,750 feet velocity per second to an 800-pound projectile; and such other test shall be applied as may be ordered by the board or thought necessary to enable it to determine that such guns are equal in all respects to the 12-inch cast-iron rifle made by the South Boston Iron Company and now at Sandy Hook.

SEC. 12. Whoever shall produce one or more 12-inch breech-loading single-charge rifle-guns, of not more than 33 calibers in length of bore, and not more than 104,000 pounds weight, for projectiles of not less than 800 pounds weight each, which guns are to be made principally or wholly of steel, or principally or wholly of cast-iron, each supplied with projectiles, powder, implements, ordnance supplies, and including all incidental expenses of a test of two hundred rounds, to be fired as hereinafter provided for, shall, for each test gun so provided by him or them which withstands the test of two hundred rounds hereinafter prescribed without such injury as would prevent some continuation of the firing, be paid for the same, by direction of the said board on ordnance, if such gun or guns be made principally of steel, at the price of $160,000 each, and if made of cast-iron principally, at the price of $80,000 each, which sums of money are to be accepted as the full prices of the guns and the cost of the tests, which sum shall be due and paid for each such gun and tests as soon as any such test gun has withstood the prescribed test of two hundred rounds, by draft drawn on the Treasury by the board or by its authorized agent, but not including the cost of the carriages therefor, which, if furnished by the party providing the gun, shall, if it be found suitable for use with such gun, be paid for at a price of not more than $25,000; to be paid for by the order of said board by a draft on the Treasury drawn by the board or its authorized agent; but should the carriage for testing any such guns be provided by the Government, it shall be paid for by the party whose gun is tested thereon if the gun shall, by bursting, destroy the same before the gun has been fired two hundred rounds. But no trial or test gun shall be paid for unless it endure the test of firing not less than two hundred rounds with a weight of projectile of not less than 800 pounds from the 12-inch rifle nor less than one one-hundred-and-thirtieth part of the weight of the gun, and with an average muzzle velocity for two hundred rounds of not less than 2,000 feet per second, and of these two hundred rounds not less than twenty shot of the prescribed weight shall be fired within two hours, and the firing of this two hundred rounds shall not disable the gun so much as to prevent some continuation of the firing without repairs exceeding 5 per cent. of the cost of the gun ordinarily, if the average velocity of the projectiles is 2,000 feet per second; or such repairs as may cost ordinarily 10 per cent. of the price of the gun if the average velocity reached for two hundred rounds was 2,200 feet per second. In testing the trial guns the Government shall furnish free of charge the use of proving grounds for range and accuracy, the necessary butts for durability, and targets for penetration, and bear all expense of handling and transporting the guns, and for this purpose and for any further expense of testing such guns, $500,000 is hereby appropriated. The plans of the guns of either kind, the breech-loading mechanism, the system of rifling, the projectiles adapted thereto, and the kind of powder or powder and cases therefor used may be of the kinds heretofore approved by the War and Navy Departments, or may be after original designs or plans and proportions satisfactory to the projector and producer; and the guns furnished by any party, and all the supplies therefor, shall be furnished without any cost to the Government until such guns have endured the prescribed test of firing two hundred rounds with a weight of projectile of not less than 800 pounds nor less than one one-hundred-and-thirtieth part of the weight of the gun with an average muzzle velocity for such two hundred projectiles of 2,000 feet per second. This firing shall proceed under the joint direction of the producer of the gun and the said board, and after one hundred rounds have been fired twenty rounds shall be fired with the prescribed standard weight and velocity of projectile within two hours of time during consecutive firing. This twenty rounds of continuous firing in two hours may be made at any time after the gun has been fired one hundred rounds, but shall be done before the two hundred rounds are completed, and the firing of this two hundred rounds shall not disable the gun so much as to prevent some continuation of the firing without repairs exceeding 5 per cent. of the cost of the gun ordinarily, if the average velocity of the projectiles is 2,000 feet per second, or such repairs as may cost ordinarily 10 per cent. of the price of the gun, if the average velocity reached for two hundred rounds was 2,200 feet per second. And the test of the trial gun must be such as to make it reasonably certain that, firing from service guns made on any such system, twenty rounds in two hours, of the standard weight of projectiles, with a velocity of 2,000 feet per second, would not disable the service gun.

If any gun or guns made principally of steel or principally of cast iron shall be provided which withstand the prescribed test of two hundred rounds with the prescribed weight and velocity of the projectile, at least twenty rounds of which were fired consecutively within two hours, all such guns shall, if the producer of the gun desires, be further tested at the expense of the Government, under the joint direction of the party producing such gun or guns and the said board, until it is fully determined which of the steel guns are the most durable and serviceable, and that steel gun so selected and the cast-iron gun so selected as the best of its kind shall be contracted for by the said board with the party or parties producing such steel gun and such cast-iron gun. The contract to be for fifty steel guns at 65 cents per pound, with a carriage suitable for each gun, to be delivered therewith, the price of the carriage to be one-third that of the gun, and some projectiles for each gun, the carriage to be bought of the party who produces the gun, provided he or they will furnish such carriages suitable in all respects for use wherewith. The projectiles to be of such kind as the board shall determine, and shall be furnished by the party who furnishes these service guns, on condition that the board can make satisfactory contract therefor. For purchasing these fifty 12-inch steel rifles, $3,380,000; for carriages therefor, $1,125,000; for proving these guns, transportation of the guns and carriages, and for such projectiles as the board may purchase for use therewith, $500,000.

For thirty cast-iron guns, which shall in like manner have stood the prescribed tests, for each gun at the price of not over 25 cents per pound, $780,000; and for thirty suitable carriages therefor, $540,000; for projectiles for these cast-iron guns, to be contracted for by the said board under such specifications as they may direct, and for proving these guns and carriages and transportation of the same, $300,000; these carriages and projectiles to be purchased of the party furnishing the said guns if the board can make suitable contract therefor.

The contract for the steel guns or for the cast-iron guns may each be increased to sixty, if the Government shall desire. If more than one of either of each kind has been provided, which withstands the prescribed test, then the firing shall continue, under the same conditions and under direction of the said board and at the cost of the Government, until it is determined unquestionably which of either or each class has the best endurance, and the board shall report with a recommendation what action ought to be taken with regard to the other gun or guns of either or both kinds which have withstood the prescribed test, but have been excelled in endurance under the continued firing.
